No feature of our pension laws is so satisfactory and just as a fair allowance to the widows of our soldiers who have died from causes attributable to their army service. When, however, such a beneficiary, by remarriage surrenders her soldier widowhood and turns away from its tender and patriotic associations to assume again the relation and allegiance of wife to another husband, when she discards the soldier's name and in every way terminates her pensionable relationship to the Government, I am unable to discover any principle which justifies her restoration to that relationship upon the death of her second husband.

No one can be insensible to the sad plight of a widow in needy condition, but our pension laws should deal with soldiers' widows. I understand that only the existence of this relationship to a deceased soldier creates, through him, the Government's duty and justifies the application of public money to the relief of such widows.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1897.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was adopted.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message of the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith the report of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Commission.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1897.

JOHN X. GRIFFITH.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass——

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 4550. It is a bill in the interest of an old soldier who is now entirely blind. It carries only a small pension, and I hope the House will pass it without objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John X. Griffith, late of Company A, Seventy-seventh Illinois Infantry, now borne upon the pension rolls at $8 per month, to $50 per month, on account of almost total disability for the performance of manual labor, from loss of sight, and to issue him a certificate at that rate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4550) granting an increase of pension to John X. Griffith, having considered the same, respectfully report:

This soldier served as sergeant, Company A, Seventy-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from July 31, 1862, until July 17, 1865, when honorably discharged. He was taken prisoner at Mansfield, La., April 8, 1864, and was confined at Tyler, Tex., and paroled May 27, 1865.

He applied for pension October 19, 1882, alleging disease of eyes contracted in October, 1864, while a prisoner of war; and his claim was allowed at $4 for disease of eyes, and increased to $8 from January 14, 1891.

The sight of right eye became practically lost in 1887, and both eyes have progressed toward blindness until he became practically blind, being barely able now only to distinguish light from darkness with the left eye, the right one being blind.

The Pension Bureau rejected his claim for increase on the ground that his blindness is due to cataract, and not to the chronic sore eyes contracted in service, and which has continued and grown worse ever since. He explains that he did not apply for pension earlier because he was financially in good circumstances for a long period after the war and did not need pension, but met with reverses, lost his property, and became in need.

The medical and other testimony show that the only disease of eyes this soldier ever had was that contracted as prisoner of war, as alleged, and no other cause is assigned for the cataract which caused blindness.

Your committee therefore report back the bill with the recommendation that it pass, after being amended by striking out all of the printed bill after the word "Infantry," in lines 5 and 6, and inserting in lieu thereof "and pay him a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, most of the facts set forth in the report I know to be correctly stated. Since the case was before the committee I have received information that this old soldier is now entirely blind. I know the statement in the report as to the cause of his long delay in asking for a pension to be true. He was until 1885 in affluent circumstances, owning one of the finest farms I ever saw.

Mr. MCMILLIN. As I understand, there is no dispute about the condition of his sight. The only question is, whether the present condition of his eyes is the result of cataract or of disease contracted in the service?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is simply a question of scientific opinion on the part of some gentlemen, in opposition to the facts of the case. The man is totally blind. He has never had any other disease of the eyes than that contracted in the service, and that he has had continuously since his service.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman asks that the bill pass with the amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment as stated in the last paragraph of the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

E. C. CHIROUSE.

Mr. HYDE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1828) to authorize the Auditor for the Interior Department to settle and adjust the accounts of E. C. Chirouse, Indian agent at the Tulalip Agency, Wash.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read, reserving the right to object.

The report was read.

Mr. HYDE. As the report is very brief, I will state the facts of this case: It appears that about twenty-five years ago a priest of the Catholic Church was appointed Indian agent at the Tulalip Agency, Wash.; that while he was agent he cut some timber from the Indian reservation, sold it, and with the proceeds built houses for the Indians, paying out money for material and to employ carpenters, blacksmiths, and so forth. Many years afterwards, when his accounts were examined at the office in Washington, it was ruled that the proceeds of the timber sold by him should have been turned directly into the Treasury, instead of being expended for the benefit of the Indians in the same manner in which he was expending other money of the Government which he had the right to expend in that way. The matter has run along for twenty-five years, until now suit has been brought against this man and his bondsmen. There are vouchers from this priest showing to the satisfaction of the Department how every dollar of this money was paid out. The agent himself has been dead fifteen years; many of the bondsmen have been dead for some time; some of them are living. This bill was prepared or recommended by the Department with the view of having this account settled upon principles of equity and justice. The facts of the case are largely within my personal knowledge, and I think the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the amount involved?

Mr. HYDE. I am not able to state—not a large sum—some twelve or fifteen hundred dollars, according to my information, besides the costs, which are to be paid. This bill is designed simply to avoid a legal difficulty. It provides for settling the matter upon equitable grounds; and no settlement will be made unless proper vouchers are shown. All the costs are to be paid. The officials of the Department desire the bill passed in order that they may do justice in the case.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has the bill been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior or by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HYDE. I think not in any formal recommendation. But Senator WILSON, of our State, went to the Department and obtained information which he has furnished to me.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has the bill been reported by a committee of this House?

Mr. HYDE. It has been.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The facts are so meagerly stated in the report that we are unable to learn anything about the case from that document. It strikes me—though I do not know that I shall object to the bill—that a matter of this kind ought to have been referred formally to some Department of the Government for an opinion.

Mr. HYDE. I understand that something of that kind was done in the Senate.

A very reputable citizen of Olympia, Mr. John F. Gowey, cashier of the First National Bank there, who knows all the facts of the case, talked with me about the matter this morning and mentioned the circumstances to the Speaker of the House. He corroborated all I have heard about the matter. I have no doubt that this is an equitable bill and ought to pass.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, however much I may regret to object to the consideration of this bill, yet, in view of the limited information accompanying it, there being no recommendation from the Department and no report from the committee further than a mere recommendation that the bill pass—disdaining to give the House a particle of information on the subject—I feel constrained to object to the consideration of the bill until it comes before the House properly supported by evidence.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

MRS. ELIZABETH GNASH.

Mr. CLARK of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3035) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Gnash. This lady is a war widow. The bill proposes to grant her a pension of $12 a month. It has already passed the Senate.

The bill and report were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. I understand that this bill has not been considered in the House.

Mr. CLARK of Iowa. It has been considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and favorably reported.

Mr. ERDMAN. It has not been considered in the House; and I object to it.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bill and joint resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 1823) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Joint resolution (S. R. 209) regulating the distribution of public documents—to the Committee on Printing.

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the conference report which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7320), "An act to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree thereto with amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

SEC. 4. That any person to whom land lying within any national parks may have been leased who refuses to give up possession of the same to the United States after the termination of said lease, and after possession has been demanded for the United States by any park commissioner or the park superintendent, or any person retaining possession of land lying within the boundary of said park which he or she may have sold to the United States for park purposes and have received payment therefor, after possession of the same has been demanded for the United States by any park commissioner or the park superintendent, shall be deemed guilty of trespass, and the United States may maintain an action for the recovery of the possession of the premises so withheld in the courts of the United States according to the statutes or code of practice of the State in which the park may be situated.

SEC. 5. This act shall apply only to the military parks of the United States.

J. A. T. HULL,
D. G. TYLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
GEO. L. SHOUP,
E. C. WALTHALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement submitted by the House conferees was read, as follows:

The amendment of the Senate struck out all of section 4 and left the park commissioners without power to remove parties whose leases have expired or to remove parties who have sold land within parks to the Government and refuse to vacate. The amendment agreed to in conference restores section 4, modified so as to make the offense simply a trespass.

Section 5 makes it clear that the act only applies to military parks.

J. A. T. HULL.
D. G. TYLER.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for us, in the confusion, to know what is going on.

Mr. HULL. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the bill, as it passed the House, in section 4 made this refusal to vacate premises on the expiration of the lease or when demanded, after anyone had sold property in the parks to the Government, a misdemeanor which should be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment, or both. The amendment makes it simply a trespass; and where refusal is made to vacate the premises it requires the park commissioner to go into the Federal court in the State where the park is situated and enforce the mandate of removal.

It is a very moderate measure and protects the rights of the Government. The other was considered by the Senate entirely too drastic and that it gave too great a power to the commissioners. This, therefore, is simply a modified power to enforce removal to meet that objection.

I ask the adoption of the report.

The report was considered, and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING, DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10091) to repeal sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and the lands and buildings referred to in said sections are hereby retained for the use of the Government.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report, which fully explains this matter.

The report (by Mr. MERCER) was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, this matter, I think, was up some time ago and an objection was made.

Mr. CORLISS. I will state to the gentleman from California that the objection was made because information had not reached some of the members of the House with reference to it. It is simply a proposition to retain the Government grounds for Government purposes and insure a saving in rents of about $6,000 per annum to the Government.

It is absolutely necessary for the accommodation of the Government departments in that great city. If it is not passed there will be an expenditure of five or six thousand dollars per annum for the rent of buildings.

This bill carries no appropriation whatever. It does not require an appropriation to occupy the building, but simply allows the retention, as the Treasury Department undoubtedly will direct, for the accommodation of the Government of a building held by the Government for nearly a hundred years.

Mr. LOUD. Who occupies the building now?

Mr. CORLISS. The Post-Office Department, but within ninety days they will go into the new building. The new building, however, is not adequate to accommodate all of the departments of the Government, and they are occupying private properties now, and unless this law is repealed, as sought by the pending bill, inasmuch as the pending law is mandatory, they must sell that ground, and in a few years we will be found asking for an appropriation to put up an additional building.

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman will probably be back here anyway; but I should like to ask what the Treasury Department says about this matter.

Mr. CORLISS. I have talked with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and he deemed it very essential that this building be held for the benefit of the Government.

Mr. LOUD. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] if that is in the report, or in such form that it can be presented to Congress?

Mr. CORLISS. It is not in the report, and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury assured me that it was not usual for that Department to make communications to Congress on such matters.

Mr. LOUD. It is a very important matter, it seems to me, for us to legislate on, and we ought to be in possession of the proper information.

Mr. CORLISS. You are in possession of all the information that can possibly be given. Fourteen years ago it was expected that the new building, when completed, would accommodate the offices of the Government; but the city has doubled in population, the business has doubled in volume, and the Government departments in Detroit can not possibly all be located in the new building. The space will all be occupied, and this old building will simply accommodate the overflow.

Mr. HICKS. How near is the new building to completion?

Mr. CORLISS. Within ninety days.

Mr. HICKS. Then it will give the use of two buildings instead of one.

Mr. CORLISS. It will give the use of two buildings, which are both owned by the Government.

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker, and neither do I desire specially to doubt the word of the gentleman; but I oppose this system of legislating upon the personal statement of an individual member of Congress, when it is so easy to secure, in official form, the report of the Department, if the Department think the proposed course is advisable.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman by saying that this bill has the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, after consideration of this question, and I can assure the gentleman that the Treasury Department deem this necessary. They did not deem it necessary to write a communication to the House, because the facts are apparent to anyone who will listen to the report of the committee. The report states the exact facts with reference to the matter. This is absolutely necessary for the accommodation of the Govertment departments in Detroit.

Mr. LOUD. How could the committee know this, if they did not receive the information?

Mr. CORLISS. Because I presented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a certificate, signed by the assistant supervising architect in Detroit, certifying what departments of the Government could enter the new building, and what could not. That certificate I had before the committee. It was not printed as a part of the report because the facts are fully reported. It shows that there will be a saving of at least $5,000 per annum to the Government by retaining its own property, which it has held for a hundred years.

Mr. HICKS. Was it not further stated before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, that you ought to have this additional accommodation?

Mr. CORLISS. I have assured the House of that fact, just as I assured the committee of it.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill until we get a report from the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CLARA A. GRAVES ET AL.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 34) for the relief of Clara A. Graves, Lewis Smith Lee, Florence P. Lee, Mary S. Sheldon, and Florence P. Lee, legal representative of Elizabeth Smith, deceased, heirs of Lewis Smith, deceased.

The bill was read.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to hear the report on that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of the committees.

The Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress was called.

ELECTION RETURNS.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress to call up the bill (H. R. 4979) to amend sections 140 and 145 and repealing sections 143 and 144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 140 and 145 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 140. The electors shall dispose of the certificates thus made by them in the following manner:

"First. They shall, by writing under their hands, or under the hands of a majority of them, appoint a person to forward forthwith by express to the Secretary of State, at the seat of Government, who is authorized and directed to deliver the same to the President of the Senate, one of the certificates.

"Second. Such person designated as above shall forthwith forward by the post-office, through its registry department, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the seat of Government, one other of the certificates.

"Third. Such person shall forthwith cause the other of the certificates to be delivered to the judge of that district in which the electors shall assemble.

"SEC. 145. Every person, who having been delegated pursuant to sections 140 and 141 to deliver and forward the certificates as therein provided, and having accepted such services shall refuse or neglect to perform the same, shall forfeit the sum of $1,000."

SEC. 2. That sections 143 and 144 be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That the cost of the transmission of said certificates as heretofore provided shall be paid, upon proper vouchers, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, some years ago, following the Presidential election, the electors of a certain State met at the capitol thereof and attempted to choose a messenger to bring the returns to the city of Washington. After a conflict of several hours, a conflict of words only, one of the electors betrayed a friend and failed to vote for him for messenger, because another friend told him that if he would vote for him they would divide the mileage. I thought if that was the way mileage in such cases was disposed of, it might be a good idea to remember that we are not now living in the year 1802, the time when that statute was passed, and act accordingly. We are living in the age of express companies, fast mails, and other conveniences whereby certificates can be sent to Washington, instead of being sent by personal messenger. I was told the other day that in another State in this Union the electors met at the State capitol, figured out the probable expense of the messenger, and after deducting that sum from the mileage allowance the rest of them took the balance.

I find in 1872 it cost the United States $20,000 to send the messengers to the capital of the United States. In 1876 it cost $8,857. I do not understand why it cost less in 1876 than in 1872. Perhaps that responsibility rests with the Electoral Commission. In 1880 it cost $8,713.75; in 1884, $10,846.70; in 1888, $9,211.75, and in 1892, $12,671.50. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why we should not abolish this law of 1802, and produce something more in keeping with the nineteenth century, although it is closing. We have express companies, we have fast mails; and they are just as safe and certain a method of conveyance for electoral certificates as if sent by messenger. This bill will abolish the messenger service, and save to the Government every four years a large amount of money. As it is very difficult for anybody to be recognized to pass a bill carrying an appropriation this late in the session, I thought it well to take the other tack and economize a little, hence this bill; and I trust there will be no objection to its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). I call up the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases in which by law the decrees and judgments of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia are final it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "cases," insert the words "hereafter arising."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to give the Supreme Court of the United States exactly the same authority over the court of appeals of the District of Columbia that is now exercised in regard to the circuit courts of appeal. The Committee on the Judiciary have unanimously recommended the bill with the pending amendment. I hope it will be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill S. 3588 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain that request, as it breaks up this order of business.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all this committee has on the House Calendar.

DETAILING AN ARMY OFFICER TO ACCEPT POSITION UNDER GOVERNMENT OF GREATER REPUBLIC OF CENTRAL AMERICA.

Mr. HULL (when the Committee on Military Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (S. R. 205) to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail an officer of the United States Army, not above the rank of captain, who shall be permitted to accept from the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America the position of instructor in a military school in said Republic and the emoluments pertaining thereto.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the report.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the bill was informally considered by the Committee on Military Affairs this morning, and I was unanimously instructed to call it up with the recommendation that it pass. It came to us for consideration with a request from the Secretary of State that it be passed as an act of courtesy to the Greater Republic of Central America. That Republic pays all the expense of this officer who is detailed. It costs nothing to this Government. The Secretary of War reported that he can see no objection to its passage.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This is not the first time that has been done.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; it has been done repeatedly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 90, 1898, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PETTIGREW, and Mr. BLACKBURN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks.

DETAILING AN ARMY OFFICER TO ACCEPT POSITION UNDER GOVERNMENT OF GREATER REPUBLIC OF CENTRAL AMERICA.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa if, under this resolution, the officer detailed to act as an instructor in that Republic would still continue to draw his salary as an officer of the United States Army?

Mr. HULL. I am unable to say to the gentleman what the rule of the Department would be; but my impression is that he would draw his pay the same as when on leave of absence.

Mr. BAILEY. Obviously it is improper for him to be serving that Government and receiving pay for his services there and at the same time to be drawing a salary from the United States. I should think that the gentleman would be willing to provide that if he accepts the pay of one Republic that he should at least discontinue the salary of the other.

Mr. HULL. I would simply say to my friend from Texas that the Government has repeatedly detailed officers, when called upon by South American Republics, as military instructors, and in one case detailed an engineer officer to Japan as instructor there. This bill is in the usual form.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no doubt that it has been, nor have I any question about the propriety of rendering a friendly government this service, provided they are willing to pay for it, as they seem to be; but my contention is that if a man draws a salary from a government which he does serve he ought not at the same time continue to draw a salary from a government which he does not serve. I would think the gentleman would be willing to provide against this man drawing a double salary for single work.

Mr. HULL. As to what they are to pay him, I do not know. I am assured that the War Department has no objection to this. I have no objection to the gentleman submitting an amendment to the House if he desires to, but this is a Senate bill. I will say to the gentleman from Texas the War Department is not asking this. It is the State Department, urging it as an act of friendship to a friendly power. The War Department simply acquiesce and say there is no objection to it. But the Secretary of State sent a dispatch here this morning asking that this bill be passed. It is urged by the representative of the Republic asking for this officer's services.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he will not support this amendment:

Provided, however, That the officer so detailed shall not draw his salary as an officer of the Army of the United States.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if he wants to offer that amendment, of course, it is in order, but I sincerely hope the House will vote it down.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no doubt that the House will vote it down, because the House evinces a disposition to be more than liberal with these people.

Mr. HULL. I think it is a very proper thing for us to be liberal in this case.

Mr. BAILEY. With other people's money, I think not.

Mr. HULL. No, it is our own money, the money of the people of the United States. We can easily spare an officer for this purpose, and it will be without any extra cost to us. The War Department can pursue the usual course in the matter.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman's statement be correct, we ought to reduce the number of our officers; but I constantly hear that their number ought to be increased, and the Secretary of War has recommended an increase to this very Congress.

Mr. HULL. When we detail an officer of our Army to go there to be a military instructor, it certainly is a detail for an extraordinary service. Whether an officer would go there for the compensation that the Republic would be willing to pay him is a question. That, of course, would be a matter to be settled between him and the Government desiring his services. One thing, however, is very clear, that it costs this Government nothing to give a friendly recognition of this kind to a friendly government, and this bill proposes to do it in the usual form. For us to say to the Republic, "We will let you have an officer if he will surrender his position and pay under the United States Government while he is absent," would be, to my mind, not entirely courteous and certainly not gracious.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This is merely permissive, as I understand.

Mr. HULL. It is merely permissive.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the officer can not be spared, he will not be detailed.

Mr. HULL. Certainly not.

Mr. BAILEY. Merely one word, Mr. Speaker. I do not doubt the propriety of permitting the War Department to detail an officer to become instructor in the military academy of a friendly nation. I do not doubt the propriety of that friendly nation paying for his services. The only point of difference that I have with the gentleman from Iowa is that he believes this officer ought to draw the double salary, while I think the officer ought to draw salary only from the country which he serves.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman does not represent me correctly when he speaks of a "double salary." I hope you will yield long enough for me to say that when the officer goes to another country, if he were not receiving anything more than he receives as salary at home, he would really be receiving less than his present compensation, because he would be giving up his quarters and his rations and would have nothing but his salary on leave. Now, this is an extraordinary duty, going into a strange country and a different climate, and taking the chances of the change, and to say that the Government of the Republic must bid high enough to secure first-class talent in order to secure this detail would be for this Government to extend no courtesy whatever. The Republic could go into the market and hire talent in that way without asking any favor of us, but they want the prestige of having an accomplished American officer there to give instruction in their military academy.

Mr. BAILEY. Then why not make this act entirely gracious and provide that they shall not pay him any compensation? The gentleman's argument goes contrary to his bill.

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes; the gentleman's argument is that we ought not to require this friendly Government to pay for this officer's services, and yet the bill provides that it shall pay for his services.

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman misunderstands my argument entirely.

Mr. BAILEY. I am entirely unable to comprehend it if it does not mean just what I say.

Mr. HULL. My argument is that if we cut off the pay of this officer and make the surrender of that a condition of detailing him, it is no particular courtesy for us to tell this friendly Government that they can have him provided they will pay him; and my further argument is that it will probably be necessary for them to pay him something extra, because he would hardly consent to go there for his simple pay as a captain.

Mr. BAILEY. I was about to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I have confidence enough in the Secretary of War to suppose that he will not detail an officer to go there unless that Government makes suitable provision for him; and to assume that that Government will make suitable provision and at the same time compel this Government to continue to give this officer the same pay that he has been drawing while in the actual service of the United States is, I submit, to provide him with a double salary. He draws one pay from the Government of the United States, which he does not serve; he draws another salary from the foreign Government, which he does serve; and I am unable to understand the English language if that does not mean that he is to receive double pay. However, I am willing to submit the question to the judgment of the House without any further contention. I offer the following amendment, upon which I should like to take the sense of this body:

Provided, That the officer so detailed shall not during the time of such detail draw any salary from the Treasury of the United States.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BAILEY)—ayes 41, noes 83.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER (after counting the House). One hundred and eighty-six members are present—a quorum.

Mr. BAILEY. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being—ayes 26, noes 187 (less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative).

So the amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent under this call for the consideration of a bill which involves no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will not ask that at the present time, because in the opinion of the Chair it would interrupt the order of business.

EXTENSION OF MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LOUD (when the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called). I call up the bill (S. 1811) to extend the uses of the mail service.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the postal cards and envelopes, with coupons attached, as patented and now or hereafter owned by the United States Economic Postage Association or its successors, a corporation created under and by the laws of the State of West Virginia, to be carried in the mails of the United States, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, and the postage thereon, at the regular postal-card and letter rates, paid on presentation of the coupons from the said cards and envelopes when detached at the office of delivery; and the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, test the practical operation of this act in such one or more cities as he may select before extending it generally throughout the country, and if the result be unfavorable, suspend its operation altogether.

SEC. 2. That before the said cards and envelopes shall be so carried through the mails the said association shall enter into a bond to the United States, with corporate or other sufficient security, to be approved in form and sufficiency by the Postmaster-General in the sum of $100,000, or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General shall in the beginning or from time to time prescribe, conditioned for the redemption in cash when presented of each and every one of said coupons taken from cards and envelopes at the office of delivery. Upon failure at any time for ten days to redeem said coupons in cash, the Postmaster-General may, by order, stop the carrying of said envelopes and cards in the mails of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all cards and envelopes furnished by the United States Economic Postage Association shall conform in size to the requirements of the Post-Office Department; shall be used only for return messages; shall have printed thereon, and upon the coupon attached thereto, the address of the individual, firm, company, or corporation to whom such cards and envelopes are to be returned; and may also have printed upon the address side the penalty prescribed for any violation of this act, and upon each coupon such words as will indicate that the postage will be paid when the card or envelope is delivered to the addressee.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to mail, and postmasters and other postal officials shall refuse to send or carry in the mails, any envelopes or cards of the said association on which the name of the individual, firm, company, or corporation imprinted thereon has been erased; and any person convicted of the violation of this statute shall be fined not exceeding $100, or imprisoned not more than thirty days on failure or refusal to pay the fine.

SEC. 5. That said association shall pay postage upon each and every piece of matter passing through the mails which shall be patented or now or hereafter owned by said association or its successors.

SEC. 6. That said association shall, if required by the Postmaster-General, at all times keep a sum in cash, deposited as the Postmaster-General may direct, sufficient in amount for the redemption of said coupons daily or weekly, or monthly.

SEC. 7. That in every case where an envelope of the said association when mailed carries more than a single-rate message, the postmaster shall place upon the coupon attached to said envelope and cancel as many postage-due stamps as may be required by existing law, in the same manner as is now done with all other similar mail matter; and the said association shall redeem and pay for the stamps so added to the coupons at the same time that the coupon is redeemed and paid for.

SEC. 8. That postmasters shall cancel all coupons attached to the cards and envelopes of said association in the same manner that stamps are now canceled, and shall be entitled to the same compensation for canceling said coupons as is allowed for the cancellation or sale of stamps.

SEC. 9. That nothing shall be paid by the United States Government for or on account of any patent owned by the United States Economic Postage Association, and no claim for damages shall be made or exist against the United States for or on account of the alteration, amendment, or repeal of this act.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, on the point of order made on Saturday last against the consideration of this bill in the House, that it should first be considered in Committee of the Whole, the Speaker made a ruling that according to the arguments then submitted, he concluded the bill could be considered in the House. I should like to review that point of order and to submit to the Speaker for his consideration a reference to several paragraphs in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The Chair decided the point on Saturday last upon the matter as then presented to him.

Mr. BINGHAM. I submit to the Chair in the first place that the proposition embraced in this bill changes entirely, or very largely, the method of administering the postal service. It proposes to transfer to a corporation the printing of postal cards and stamped envelopes, with coupons attached. The Government now does this work—always has done it—under careful guards, because postal cards and stamped envelopes have been decided to be securities of the Government.

Mr. LOUD. The printing of postal cards and stamped envelopes is done under contract to-day; it is not done by the Government itself.

Mr. BINGHAM. Postal cards are prepared in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. LOUD. No, sir; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, we have had that fight here——

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; they are made to-day in Connecticut, and the stamped envelopes in New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. The stamped envelopes are manufactured at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is mistaken about that; it is only the postage stamps that are made there.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well. Then, Mr. Speaker, this company will be permitted to manufacture postal cards and stamped envelopes. They can be sold all over the country; they will be transmitted through the mails. They will be stamped at the office of departure. At the office of delivery the coupons will be detached from the postal card and the stamped envelope, and upon those coupons this association will pay to the Post-Office Department the amount which may appear to be due upon the account rendered. These stamped envelopes and postal cards will circulate through the mails of the entire country; they will be sold everywhere by the agents of this association. Every office of delivery must of necessity keep an account of these coupons, so as to determine the amount to be paid by this Economic Association. It is patent, therefore, that in the great cities there must be a large rendition of accounts in connection with the coupons to be paid for by this association.

Now, under the existing law the prepayment of postage is compulsory; it must be paid at the office of mailing. Under this bill payment is not compulsory at the office of mailing, but is compulsory at the office of delivery. Hence I say that at all the offices of delivery in the country there must be a clerical account and a rendition of these coupons in order that they may be paid by the company. Further, it is provided in this bill:

> Upon failure at any time for ten days to redeem said coupons in cash the Postmaster-General may, by order, stop the carrying of said envelopes and cards in the mails of the United States.

There is the limitation of ten days. That has got to be rendered to the Department by every post-office in the country, in order that the Postmaster-General may be intelligently informed of the carrying out of the requirements of the act, so that he may stop the business of a corporation which is operating in defiance of the law.

Now, the committee submit in their report that the carrying out of the proposition would approximate thirty millions of additional net revenues to the Government, whereas, Mr. Speaker, the entire revenue from the first-class matter, that is, the 2-cent letter postage and 1 cent on postal cards, the sum total was but $60,000,000 last year. The committee say that this will be thirty million net revenue, while we do not get more than that net from the entire first-class service of the Government to-day.

I claim, Mr. Speaker, if you are to add thirty million of additional net revenues to the Government, arising from the service of this company—and I suspect that that figure is very much like the gentleman's figures with reference to the Loud bill, which have been quoted all over the country—I claim that you can not handle this proposition (changing the methods of the Department from what they are to-day in order to accomplish the purpose the bill seeks to accomplish) without an extraordinary increase in the clerical force in all great post-offices of the country.

I make the point of order that I have submitted.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has failed, I think, to make any point that the Chair can consider for a moment. That this will entail any additional expense upon the Government is true to this extent only: As the business of the Government increases—and I would say that, as the gentleman well knows, as the ordinary business of the Post-Office Department increases—it is a cause of necessary additional expense. That is inevitable. And through and by the operation of this bill, if the business of the Department increases, of course it will increase the expenditures of the Department to a certain extent. But not by reason of the operation of this act.

I wish to say one word only, and I do not care to make any reply to the point made by the gentleman at this time. Because, Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman himself feels that there is no point of order that can lie against the bill. But a word to the House.

This question has been before Congress for four or five years. It is a great question. It is a question worthy the consideration of this body and of its most careful deliberation. The gentleman who calls it up does so as the chairman of the committee, not desiring to hurriedly pass it through the House, but to give to this body the widest possible latitude for its consideration. I have myself given it some three or four years of study and research, but it was only during the last winter, having then time to carefully investigate it, that I satisfied my own mind that the passage of the bill would be of great benefit to the country.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not confining himself to the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. I think that is correct and well taken, Mr. Speaker; but about as closely as the gentleman from Pennsylvania did. I was simply asking the indulgence of the House to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see anything to change his ruling on the subject. It may be possible that it will increase the expenses. But that is a mere matter of speculation as to whether they will or not; and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LOUD addressed the Chair.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand that a bill of this character, radically changing the entire administration of the Department, is before the House for consideration without even having the report of the committee read—a bill that has been before the House for five years?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The bill is now open for consideration under the rules of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. But does the gentleman propose to proceed without having the report read?

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from California has addressed the Chair for the purpose of discussing the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I did not so understand.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will pay attention to the measure now before us. You have pertinently, Mr. Speaker, at times suggested to the House when a matter is up for unanimous consent that each and every individual member of the House is responsible for its passage. I want every individual member of this House to carefully investigate this question, and if it appeals to his judgment it should receive his vote; and if not, he should vote against it. But I think it a question of such magnitude and such importance that every individual in the House should and must give it his most careful consideration.

This bill in its effect is liable—I say liable, although I believe it is more than probable, and I only give you the result of my best judgment—is liable to be of such benefit as to give us an increased revenue of some two or three millions of dollars a year. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] made some reference to "thirty millions" a year. I did not prepare the report. It was prepared by another member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Now, to better understand the matter, I ask the House to give consideration to the reading of a portion of the report, beginning on page 3 and running down to the bottom of page 4. I ask the attention of the House to this matter, and ask the Clerk to read the portion of the report I have indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The object of this proposed legislation (which requires no appropriation of Government money, immediately or prospectively, so far as said association is concerned, as your committee is assured) is to enable the association to furnish the trades people of the United States a convenient and cheap method of soliciting trade by mail, and the public a convenient and inexpensive method of placing orders. To accomplish these purposes the association asks the use of the United States mails, under such provisions as will give absolute security as to payment of postage to the Government, and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General.
> It is the intention to furnish business men with the coupon cards and envelopes of this association for trade purposes, and it is desired by the bill (H. R. 4176) to allow the postage upon all such cards and envelopes to be paid through the association at the office of delivery.
> It seems to your committee that the plan is very simple. We do not think its adoption would interfere with or cause any friction in the machinery of the postal service, as it is free from complicated details and cumbersome methods. It is in line of progress in postal appliances.
> At the office of mailing all fourth-class postmasters would include the coupons with canceled stamps, and take credit for the same.
> At the office of delivery the coupons are detached and the mail delivered, and an agent of the association will each day pay the postage represented by such coupons.
> A similar bill to the one under consideration, exclusive of the amendments herein suggested by your committee, was introduced in the Fifty-third Congress by Hon. John S. Henderson, of North Carolina, who was at that time chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and which bill received, in the third session of that Congress, the unanimous recommendation of that committee to the House in favor of its enactment into law, but owing to the lateness of the session the bill failed of passage.
> The amendments herein proposed by your committee are in line with amendments suggested by Postmaster-General Wilson in a favorable report upon the bill under consideration, received from him under date of April 18, 1894, in response to a reference of the same to him under date of January 29, 1894, for an expression of his opinion thereon.
> Your committee is of the opinion that the legislation herein recommended is another progressive step in keeping with the recommendation of Postmaster-General Wilson in his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, "that authority for the use of private post cards in our mails be granted by Congress."

Postmaster-General Wilson also, in his letter on the bill to your committee, under date of April 13, 1896, says:

"The plan has the indorsement of a number of business firms and corporations on the ground that it opens better and more economical facilities for correspondence and for the placing of orders between merchants and tradesmen and their customers.

"It may be concluded that the Post-Office Department should look with favor on any proposition which may accomplish these results, provided it secures undoubted protection to public revenues, holds out a substantial promise of increasing these revenues, and does not run counter to any well-recognized or inviolable principle of public policy."

It is estimated that millions of dollars are invested by business men each year in postal cards and stamped envelopes, which are inclosed in letters for answers in solicitation of trade or information, and that only 10 per cent of these cards and envelopes are returned to the original senders. Thus 90 per cent of this vast sum is lost to those who utilize the mail for these purposes; nor does the Government gain by such loss, for these stamped envelopes may be redirected or exchanged at any post-office for stamps, while the addressed cards thus sent out are purchased and bronzed, and sold upon the market. This great waste to business men has been a serious discouragement, and to obviate it the system presented in this bill has been devised. If carried into practical operation, it will not only relieve this embarrassment to business, but encourage an extensive expansion of the use of the mails for the purposes indicated; and it must be evident that the business men of the country desire such legislation, because hundreds of letters from leading houses in all branches of trade in the United States have been presented to your committee, urging favorable consideration of the bill.

The demand being evident for the enactment of such legislation, it only remains to determine whether said legislation shall give ample security to the Government that the postage will be paid at the office of delivery. The bill provides that the association shall give a bond of ample security for the redemption of the coupons taken from the cards and envelopes, and also shall keep a sum in cash, deposited as the Postmaster-General may direct, sufficient in amount for the redemption of such coupons. This practically amounts to a prepayment of postage upon all mail matter furnished the public by this association, and thus no serious departure from the well-established policy of the Government in demanding compulsory prepayment of postage is inaugurated by the adoption of this system.

The advantages to the Government in the increase of revenue secured by the adoption of this system seems of the greatest importance. Among the many indorsements of the association's plan is one from the business manager of the Chicago Record (printed in appendix), in which he says that journal is now sending out 500,000 letters each year with reply postal cards, and he says if this proposed system shall be legalized by the Government they will probably send out five times as many. Now, if all these were local letters, and if the accompanying table (A), compiled from the reports of the Postmaster-General, be correct, at least seven-eighths of the money paid by this journal for postage is a net profit to the Government; in other words, the net postal revenue from this source under the present system is $8,750. Provided the management of the Record actually sent out five times the amount of mail matter indicated in its letter under the proposed system, the profits would be five times as much, or $43,750, from which amount should be deducted the Government's profit of 90 per cent of the 500,000 postal cards inclosed for replies, but never returned to the Record. Not considering the cost of the cards (32.87 cents per 1,000) or the expense of handling them, the 90 per cent profit would be $4,500, which, added to the profits on the 500,000 letters now sent out ($8,750), gives under the present system a net profit of $13,250. Deduct this from the profit under the proposed plan, and a net gain in revenue of $30,500 is shown.

A hundred times this result for the business men of the entire United States would give an annual increase of $3,500,000 net postal revenue, and it might not be extravagant to say that the stimulus thus given to mercantile and commercial interests throughout the whole country would approximate $50,000,000 net revenue.

From this statement of the Chicago Record as to the increased mail matter which they will send out under the advantages offered by the allowance of these coupon cards or envelopes to pass through the mails under the provisions of this bill as amended, it will be seen that a new avenue for a large increased sale of postage stamps is opened up in all parts of the country in the solicitation of both local and out-of-town orders or trade by mail. In other words, in the opinion of your committee, the adoption of this new system has a twofold way of producing greatly increased revenue to the Post-Office Department which it is not to-day receiving, viz, by increased sale of stamps to the large business public and the payment to the Government by said association of the postage represented by each and every coupon passed through the mail and duly canceled as other matter passing through the mails.

The revenue to the Government from the redemption of these coupons will be decidedly greater than on any other class of matter handled by the Government, inasmuch as it is all first-class matter, and the Government is saved the expense of making, printing, storing, or handling of either the envelopes or cards prior to their transmission through the mails for only reply or order purposes. Many business men who do not now use the mails for the solicitation of trade orders will, by the use of this new system, in the opinion of your committee, be thus given an incentive or stimulus, by reason of the rivalries of competition, to convenience possible patrons, customers, or consumers at the expense of the business man receiving the orders for trade or replies to inquiries which, as a rule, concern more those to whom they are made than those making them.

In addition to the use to which it would be put by wholesale dealers, manufacturers, newspapers, etc., this system would be utilized by local dealers in all the free-delivery towns, as cards could be distributed to the public at a slight cost by which orders could be mailed at the nearest letter box, thus creating a great public convenience and largely increasing the Government revenues from a source entirely unapplied at the present time.

Your committee fully agree with the following advanced views pertaining to postal affairs, expressed in their reports by Postmasters-General Vilas, Wanamaker, Bissell, and Wilson, all of which are in harmony with the recommendations of this report.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word more, and I will submit to the House the letter from the Postmaster-General in relation to this subject.

I will state that this letter is the result of a very careful investigation and conference held between the Postmaster-General and myself last year, in which we reviewed the bill from beginning to end, and suggested such amendments as have been incorporated in it, so that now it is in no way dangerous for the Government of the United States to adopt it. We have provided that this company shall take these coupons up day by day. We have provided a minimum bond of $100,000, flexible at the will of the Postmaster-General.

This bill empowers the Postmaster-General to experiment with this in one or two cities, not exceeding two, in the United States, for the period of one year, and if anything shall appear to demonstrate that this system should not continue, that it is not in the interest of the Post-Office Department and of the Government, he has the power to stop all proceedings and the further issuance of cards by this company.

I can only say to the House that I can only give you my word on the matter, that I believe the measure to be as carefully guarded as it is possible to guard any legislation, that the Government is absolutely safe, that it is engaging in an enterprise solely in regard to first-class postal matter, on which the Government is to-day receiving most of its revenues, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] well knows. Out of a total of 412,000,000 pounds of mail matter handled by the Government, 65,000,000 pounds of first-class matter returns to the Government more than $60,000,000, out of a total revenue of about $80,000,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman explain in a few words what is meant by line 4 of section 3, where it says that the cards and envelopes of this association shall be used only for return postage?

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman that this is probably a very difficult matter to understand.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not understand that myself, and I can not understand the first section, either.

Mr. LOUD. I will endeavor to explain.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] will permit me, I desire to call attention to page 7 of the report, which contains the forms of these cards, and they explain the matter.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; and let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that it is difficult, I admit, for the House to understand this question. I investigated it at times for three or four years before I could give it my unqualified support.

I want to say that there is very little encouragement for a member to talk on this question to perhaps ten or fifteen gentlemen who are willing to listen. If the House does not want to consider the matter, why, it should immediately vote it down; but if it wants to take this matter up for consideration, I say again it is worthy of the consideration of this House and should receive its attention. It may give us some very profitable revenue.

There is in this country a class of business called the soliciting of orders. In the cities of the country, business houses, dyeing houses, dealers in coal and wood, publishing houses, and other firms send out blank postal cards soliciting orders. To-day they must buy those postal cards and pay for them 1 cent apiece.

The proposition contained in this bill, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] will soon tell you, is a radical departure from the prepayment of postage.

This company, under a bond to the Government, are allowed to send these cards through the mails without prepayment, but taking up these coupons day by day under the requirements of this bill. Now, they go to a coal dealer or a dyeing house or a publishing house and say, "Here, we will sell you a thousand or ten thousand or fifty thousand blank cards for a certain price," whatever it may cost them to print them, and, I suppose, a reasonable profit. The individual buying those cards will not be compelled to pay postage upon the same until the cards shall have been returned to him, presumably bearing an order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Right there I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose the card is not returned bearing an order. The United States Government will then have carried this postal card free.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, if it carries it, the card will be returned to the individual. The Government can not carry it unless it is returned to him, because the card bears his address upon it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I plead ignorance on this matter. I should like to have the gentleman explain it. Suppose the postal card falls into the hands of some one who puts it in his pocket.

Mr. LOUD. The Government has not carried it, nor has it lost anything, in that case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But I understood you that the Government first carried it and delivered it.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no. I tried to explain that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I misunderstood you.

Mr. LOUD. This corporation deals with the individual. Up to that point the Government has nothing to do with it.

Now, let me suppose, for illustration, that you are a coal dealer. You want to send out a thousand postal cards. You have on the card a blank for orders. The card bears your address. You can send them out in such manner as you please, by messengers or otherwise, but if you send them by mail you must pay the postage to the Government. The Government is not responsible at all unless you send them through the mail; and if you do so you pay the postage. Now, you have sent out a thousand or ten thousand of these cards to supposable customers. I do not know what they are going to cost, but will suppose you pay $1.50 a thousand for them. If you were to send out postal cards under the present system, that would cost you $10.

Under this system you would pay $1.50 a thousand, if they cost that much, and you would be compelled to pay it to this company, and the company is compelled to pay to the Government, whenever the cards go into the post-office, a cent postage, and I believe any corporation or any business man could afford to pay the additional cent if he gets an order. This question has been submitted to the best business men of this country. Some of the publishing houses to-day send out as high as 50,000 postal cards at one time. It is estimated that not over 2 per cent of these are ever returned. Of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] will probably say, "Well, the Government has made a profit out of those not returned."

It is true; but where a publishing house is sending out today 50,000 postal cards a year, from the best information that can be gathered the publishing houses would send out 10,000,000 a year, and the number that would be returned through the post-office would, of course, be in just the same proportion. That is the only paying portion of the post-office business to-day. The second, third, and fourth class postal matter does not pay the Government for its transmission and handling; and we must make all the profit in the operation of the Post-Office Department out of the first-class matter. [Applause.]

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. Why do you pick out this corporation to give it this privilege? Why not make a general proposition?

Mr. LOUD. That is just what I expected to hear upon this floor; and it shows the extraordinary intelligence of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. HICKS. I will admit that.

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say, first, this company has the patent upon this card, and I believe the Government can not afford to deal with Tom, Dick, and Harry, and every individual in this country. It must deal with somebody who is responsible, and the less in number that it deals with the more liable is the Government to get its just due out of the company.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman kindly go a little further into detail, and tell us why this special corporation should have this privilege?

Mr. LOUD. Why, I have just said to the gentleman, because this corporation has obtained the patent. As to selecting this corporation, whatever the insinuation of the gentleman may mean, I do not know. I do not know who the incorporators are. I do not care. Why should we not take this corporation, let me ask the gentleman, as well as any other?

Mr. HICKS. Why do you specially urge this patent? I want light on the subject.

Mr. LOUD. This patent?

Mr. HICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think it is worth taking my time to discuss that.

Mr. HICKS. You have taken two years to find out the merits of this matter yourself, and now you want us in an hour to vote for a bill that it has taken you two years to try to complete.

Mr. LOUD. You can get all the time you want to discuss the matter.

Mr. HICKS. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. I want the House to have all the information that it can have. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has thirty-four minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that this bill, as it is drawn, practically is a ratification by the United States of the validity of the patent owned by this particular company?

Mr. LOUD. I think that the Government has already ratified the validity of the patent of this company in their issues.

Mr. MITCHELL. No; the gentleman knows that a patent is a mere right to sue, whereas this act would give the right to this particular company to use this particular method, making its cards exclusively, as I understand the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Now, let me say to the gentleman that it is going to be a serious question with some gentlemen on the floor from some portions of the United States where postal cards are manufactured to-day, whether they can support this bill because gentlemen think it will affect the manufacture of postal cards in certain sections of the country. Let me say, in anticipation of that, postal cards will be manufactured if this bill shall pass, under contract to the lowest bidder, I suppose, the same as they have been in the past; and more than that, this company can not practically and successfully manage this business and the business of manufacturing and printing postal cards.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not the point I wish to raise. Suppose somebody else should get a system better than this and an improvement upon it. The object of the patent laws is to encourage the American inventor. I think that this bill, as I have read it very hastily, would discourage any inventor not interested in this particular company. It is as a member of the Patent Committee, and interested, therefore, in our patent laws, I believe in the interest of all concerned, that I have asked for this information.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is too fair a man not to comprehend, if he knows anything of this question; but of course he has not had time to give it careful consideration. Gentlemen speak of not giving it to any person except the one. If there were more than one, we could not with safety enter into a contract with every individual or firm. Probably you will hear on the floor before we get through the cry that this is giving to a corporation a special privilege.

I want to be perfectly frank with the House, and say that there is no other way in which the thing can be done. The Government must deal with one person or corporation, or else not touch the scheme at all. If the Government is going to take it up, it can not be taken up in any other manner. It is a credit business. Somebody may say, "Why can not the Government itself enter into it?" Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think the Government is in a position to enter into a credit business with the great mass of the American people, but it can enter into such business with a corporation which gives a bond of $100,000 as a minimum—a bond which is flexible and can be increased at the will of the Postmaster-General—such corporation being required to redeem these coupons day by day.

Mr. MITCHELL. One further question. I wish to ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, it would be impossible to frame a general act which would give the Postmaster-General power to extend these same privileges under general provisions of law analogous to our general banking law, the object being to enable the Postmaster-General to extend the same privilege to another system if it should be devised?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know but that might be possible. This, however, is the only scheme that has ever been presented, and the device is patented, so that it is a question whether any individual could now use this scheme. I know of no other plan that has ever been presented, and therefore we must adopt this or else we can not try the system. I do not anticipate that the Patent Office would issue another patent for any device which would be an infringement on this, and I do not think there is room for making any improvement that would be patentable.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question or two. From some remarks that I have heard around me, the impression seems to obtain that the passage of this bill would do away to a great extent with the use of postal cards as they are used now. Is there any truth in that?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; it would increase their use. The postal cards as used to-day by individuals will continue to be used in the future, and it is believed that the cards contemplated in this bill will be simply an additional amount consumed through other avenues of business.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then this is to enable business houses to increase their work through the postal-card system?

Mr. LOUD. That is it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Another question. I see that this Senate bill was introduced by Senator VILAS, ex-Postmaster-General. That suggests the question, What is the attitude of the Post-Office Department toward this legislation? I would like to hear from the gentleman on that point.

Mr. LOUD. I said a few moments ago that this bill in its present form was the result of several conferences between the Postmaster-General and myself, which resulted in amendments that are incorporated in the bill, amply protecting the Government. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a copy of the letter in which the Postmaster-General expresses his views on this subject.

The letter was read, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1896.

SIR: The amendments made by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to House bill 4176, Report No. 1382, entitled "A bill to extend the uses of the mail service," in accordance with the suggestions of my report on said bill, would seem to afford sufficient protection to the public revenues, especially in view of the authority given to the Postmaster-General in the first section of said bill by the proposed amendment to test, in his discretion, the practical operation of the act in such one or more cities as he may select before its extension to the entire country.

In view of these facts, I am prepared to say that the Department can make, in my opinion, a fair and safe test of the measure, which seems to be pressed by some of the business organizations of the country and is willing to do so, and thus by actual experiment (which alone can determine the results of its operation) be able to report to Congress, after a reasonable time, upon the expediency of continuing or repealing the legislation proposed in the bill.

Very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON, Postmaster-General.

Hon. E. F. LOUD,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he is ready to proceed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a few remarks to make.

Mr. LOUD. I will reserve the balance of my time, feeling satisfied that the Chair will recognize me later.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Before the gentleman from California takes his seat, I would like to ask him one question. In the letter written by the publisher of the Chicago Record (Appendix D of the report) observe this sentence. He speaks first of the great number of postal cards that they send out in envelopes. They are obliged to pay postage on all those, of course, and a great percentage of them, he says, are not returned. Then he closes his letter with this sentence:

It is likely that if we were obliged to pay full postage on the cards returned to us only, we would send out five times as many.

That means, does it not, that under the rule suggested, that company would send out five times as many cards as it now sends out, and that the Government would carry free of postage all of them except those that were returned?

Mr. LOUD. No; the gentleman does not seem to grasp the situation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is precisely what he says, is it not?

Mr. LOUD. The moment one of these cards is offered for cancellation, right at the point of mailing, there is taken from that card a coupon which the company must redeem.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is, at the office of delivery?

Mr. LOUD. No; not at all; at the office of mailing. The Government does not carry that card until the coupon is redeemed, substantially.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Somebody here at my right suggests that I do not "get onto this steal." I have not found anybody over here who does. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman ought hardly to use that phrase.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am merely making a literal quotation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNEY. What is there about this that is patentable except the sending out of cards with return coupons?

Mr. LOUD. I am not competent to answer the question whether the scheme should have been patented or not, but I understand that a patent has been granted.

Mr. BARNEY. If that is all there is of it, simply a plan of sending out postal cards with return coupons——

Mr. LOUD. It would not make any difference whether the scheme was patentable or not. Still, in order to go into this business successfully, the Government would have to enter into a contract with some individual or corporation.

Mr. BARNEY. How do these order cards get into the hands of the people that use them?

Mr. LOUD. This corporation puts them into the hands of the people who purchase them in whatever manner it sees fit.

Mr. BARNEY. They do not pass through the mails, then?

Mr. LOUD. If they do, they must pay the rate of postage which is collected on that character of mail matter. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor to be very brief in what I may have to say on this proposed legislation, as it seems that my proposition that a point of order should stand against this bill was not made sufficiently clear and I was overruled, although the report of the committee and the remarks of the gentleman in charge of the bill indicate that in the future there may be some additional expense to the Government. The report reads:

The object of this proposed legislation, which requires no appropriation of Government money immediately or prospectively, so far as said association is concerned, as your committee is assured—

I will make no further statement about having been overruled on the point of order, because the committee wisely put in the qualifying words, "as your committee is assured," but fails to make the direct statement that the bill will carry no additional appropriation in the future.

I desire to be perfectly fair in this debate; for I have found during my experience in this House that the House, when fairly and truthfully informed upon any proposition, will consider it as all legislation should be considered.

There is one saving clause in the proposition now submitted by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the acceptance of the Senate bill and in the nonpresentation of the House bill. The Senate bill makes this merely an experimental measure.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will allow me to say that the committee never would have consented to submit and advocate this bill without that very meritorious feature.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad that it is simply an experimental measure and can be set aside by the Postmaster-General if the experiment should not prove to be acceptable to the Department.

I have had a little experience in experimental legislation in connection with that Department. In the Fifty-first Congress I brought into this House the Post-Office appropriation bill and appropriated $10,000 for experimental free delivery in rural districts. That experimental free delivery has been going on ever since in fourth-class and other offices, and Congress has never moved to do away with the legislative restriction in regard to free delivery in towns of less population than 10,000 or at offices having less revenue than $10,000. Experimental free delivery has been going on in little sections of the country. Congress, I repeat, has never moved in the matter of free delivery for towns and cities of less than 10,000 population or at offices where the revenues are less than $10,000. Experimental free delivery is going on to-day and for the next fiscal year. The experiment now contemplated in this bill may continue for a similar number of years.

I have great respect for the gentleman in charge of this bill; but I have no confidence in the figures or estimates he submits to this House. I think there has never been a bundle of figures less able to bear examination and to sustain the conclusions submitted than those adduced in support of "the Loud bill;" and although those figures are quoted to-day in every paper of the country, they in no wise sustain the gentleman's conclusions. The report of the Postmaster-General some years ago showed that a million of dollars was the amount of the postage on this second-class questionable matter. I make the statement that there has not been any examination in the Post-Office Department which would justify the gentleman's computation of $10,000,000.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. LOUD. I have no objection to the gentleman going on and arguing "the Loud bill"——

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not arguing "the Loud bill." I am simply coming to the paragraph in the gentleman's report which I propose to debate.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say one word right here. I stated to the gentleman once before, and I want to emphasize it again, that I am not the author of this report, and I am willing to admit that the figures contained in it are somewhat wild. I want to say to the gentleman further that I did not give my assent to this bill until some months after this report was drawn.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, as the gentleman from California admits that the figures in the report of the committee in connection with this bill are "somewhat wild," I should like the gentleman who reported the bill to tell the House upon what he predicates the statement that in the course of a short time the net revenues to the Government from the adoption of this system will yield $30,000,000, when the sum total for the carrying of all first-class matter for the last fiscal year—not the net revenue, but sum total—is only $60,624,462.

Upon what does the gentleman predicate the statement that the introduction of this system is going to virtually double the net revenues of the Government? The gentleman from California has explained his own position, and now it becomes the gentleman who made the report to submit to this House where and how he obtains the figures to establish this declaration made in connection with this proposed legislation. There is no statement nor authority in any report emanating from the Post-Office Department that by the legislation here proposed $30,000,000 or more of net revenue is to be derived by the Government. If that is so, if that can be clearly established, I might perhaps be willing to yield some of my objections to this bill; but until I know it, I feel that I am justified in maintaining the position I have taken.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this Government carries the mail under a constitutional obligation. It has done so from the inception of the Government. It is doing so to-day, rendering every possible facility to the people. I claim, sir, that it is better for the people to submit to some inconvenience and the loss of some slight possible improvement rather than to give up in any way a control or a relation to the carrying of the mails that in any wise takes from the Post-Office Department absolute and supreme control over all that pertains to the service.

What does this Economic Postage Stamp Association propose? In a statement that was made a little while ago the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] was right and I was wrong, because I had in my mind the printing of the stamps by the Government, and not the postal cards or envelopes. To-day the Government by advertisement prints its postal cards. By advertisement it prints its stamped envelopes. In the Bureau of Engraving and Printing the stamps are printed.

In the debate that pertained in connection with the transfer of the printing of the stamps from the contractors to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, it was claimed—I did not concur in the conclusion—that postage stamps were Government securities, and therefore should be protected and printed by the Government, the same as bank notes and greenbacks. This proposition is that a company called the Economic Company shall print postal cards, shall print stamped envelopes, shall sell them all over the country, and have them redeemed when the letter reaches its point of delivery.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; the coupon is to be redeemed when the letter reaches the point of delivery.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BINGHAM. In what way?

Mr. LOUD. When the letter is mailed, the coupons are taken off in the office where the mailing is done.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, one is the same as the other.

Mr. LOUD. No; the Government gets the coupon before the letter is carried.

Mr. BINGHAM. The coupon is detached. That office must keep its record account. All the offices in this country will be called upon to change their system of accounts, and to keep a record account with this outside company. Now, I claim you, Mr. Speaker, that that will necessitate agencies throughout this whole country. The postal cards and stamped envelopes are under the protection and supervision of Government special agents, specially detailed to carefully watch and account, and this proposition will establish outside of the postal service an independent organization for the sale of these heretofore issues of the Department.

If there is any money in this proposition, I do not know where it is; but, to my mind, in a very short time this outside company will be doing nine-tenths of the business in postal cards and stamped envelopes that is now done by the Government. I believe that the Government should keep control of that in every respect. I believe the Government should have absolute control of all these said-to-be securities. I believe every facility is given to the people to-day for the transmission of their mail matter, and this would be a departure so pronounced, a change of system so marked that I do not think it wise legislation.

In my brief remarks I have been perfectly fair, and I submit that the only redeeming feature of the proposition—although I am not enamored with the question of experimental legislation such as we have experienced during the past four or five years in rural free delivery—I say the only saving clause in the gentleman's proposition is that it may be experimental on the part of the Department; but it radically changes a system that has run from the foundation of the Government, and makes an outside corporation the printer, disburser, and seller of postal cards and stamped envelopes, a business that is now guarded by special agents in every possible way so that there can be no defalcation or wrong. I submit to this House that I think the legislation is unwise.

Mr. QUIGG. I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] with regard to the bill. I should like to know whether it is a fair statement of the bill to say that it lets a private corporation into partnership with the Government, in a portion of the Government's monopoly of the postal service.

Mr. BINGHAM. It allows the United States Economic Postage Association to print, distribute, and sell throughout the entire country the issues of postal cards with coupons attached, and issues of stamped envelopes with coupons attached.

Now, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] desire?

Mr. BLUE. As much time as the gentleman can yield. I want five minutes, anyhow.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE], and if he desires more, I will yield it to him.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the House, before it passes upon this measure, will give it a fair consideration. If gentlemen desire to vote intelligently upon the subject, it would be well to get the report made to the House, as well as that in the Senate, and examine the facsimile of the postal card to be used. There is nothing intricate about it whatever. Every business man throughout the United States is in the habit of sending out postal cards addressed to himself, requesting his customers to reply to him upon the postal cards. The result of that practice is that very many of these customers, instead of using the postal card in the transaction of business with the party sending it out, cross out the address and use it in their own business.

The object of this measure is to protect the business men in the use of the postal cards they send out. An examination of the report accompanying the bill will show that the postal card to be sent out by this company, which manufactures them, or the vendee of the postal card, has printed upon one end of it a coupon. It has printed also upon one side the address of the firm sending out the card. When a party uses it, putting an order upon the other side, and sending it back to the person who transmitted it, at the post-office, the coupon is detached and kept by the Post-Office Department. Before this company manufacturing them can sell these postal cards the first and second sections of this act make the requirement that the company shall file with the Post-Office Department good and sufficient bond, of not less than $100,000, to protect the Post-Office Department in the redemption of these coupons.

In addition to that there is a provision is in this bill that the Post-Office Department may first confine the use of this measure to certain cities, or a certain city in the Republic, and if the experiment is not satisfactory the Department shall not adopt it. It provides further that if any of these coupons are not redeemed within a short time, it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to stop the transmission of these cards and coupons through the mails. The first and second sections say:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the postal cards and envelopes, with coupons attached, as patented and now or hereafter owned by the United States Economic Postage Association or its successors, a corporation created under and by the laws of the State of West Virginia, to be carried in the mails of the United States, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, and the postage thereon, at the regular postal-card and letter rates, paid on presentation of the coupons from the said cards and envelopes when detached at the office of delivery; and the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, test the practical operation of this bill in such one or more cities as he may select before its extension to the entire country.

SEC. 2. That before the said cards and envelopes shall be so carried through the mails the said association shall enter into a bond to the United States, with corporate or other sufficient security, to be approved in form and sufficiency by the Postmaster-General, in the sum of $100,000, or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General may from time to time prescribe, conditioned for the redemption in cash, when presented, of each and every one of said coupons taken from cards and envelopes at the office of delivery. Upon failure at any time for ten days to redeem said coupons in cash, the Postmaster-General may, by order, in his discretion, stop the carrying of said envelopes and cards in the mails of the United States.

This measure is in the interest of the business of this nation; and the reason that business men will send out largely in excess of what they now send of postal cards is the assurance that the cards sent out will be used in sending back orders to them, instead of displacing the address and using them in the private business of the party to whom the card is addressed. The Government is amply protected in every way. There is no wrong; there is nothing underhanded about it. It is an improvement in the postal service; and so well is it guarded that if, after being tested in a city or cities, it is found not expedient, it is wholly in the hands of the Postmaster-General to discontinue the system. If any of these coupons are not redeemed, it is wholly within the power of the Postmaster-General to suspend the business. The fact that it is a corporation that publishes these postal cards, I apprehend, makes no difference.

The postal cards now in use, as I understand, are already published by a corporation or individual contract. I find that the parties who publish this card have a patent right upon it, and that to some extent it is a monopoly. But every patent is a monopoly, so long as it exists, to a certain extent. Yet this costs the Government nothing. On the other hand, the Government receives compensation for the postal cards it carries, and is not that all it now receives? The postal cards carried by the Government now yield it compensation; if not carried by it, then, as a matter of course, no compensation is received.

Mr. TRACEY. Is the gentleman able to state what additional value will be given to the patent by the passage of this bill?

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman asks me what additional value will be given to the patent by the passage of the bill. I suppose, as a matter of course, its value will consist largely in its use by the people through the mails of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BLUE. As a matter of course, it will increase the value of this patent; but every patent in its operation is increased in value in the same way. It costs the Government nothing, and it benefits the business men of the entire Republic. Every patent which provides for the saving of labor and the cheapening of a commodity is beneficial to the patentee, but that benefit is derived from its use by the people. That is all there is of this. It becomes a benefit to the patentee through its use by the public.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true it can not be used without authority of law? It is different from other matters in that.

Mr. BLUE. And it differs, as the gentleman from Iowa has said, and differs materially in this, that it can not be used for the very purpose intended without the authority of the Government to use it. But this use is not an exclusive one. Any other corporation or person can be permitted to use the mails in the same way if the Government sees fit to allow it so to do. There is nothing in this measure to prohibit the use of similar postal cards by any other individual, provided the patent of the company is not infringed. Neither is there anything here to prevent the Government from the use of the postal card now employed.

But in conferring the authority the Government loses nothing, and the people are benefited thereby. Let us pass this bill, and let the system be tested. If it fails, it will cost nobody anything, except the patentee; and if it is a success, it will benefit the people of the Republic, while, as I have said, in neither instance is the Government injured. I trust that the House will examine this bill thoroughly, because the better gentlemen understand it the more likely they are to vote to pass it, in the interest of the public and of the postal service.

Mr. PERKINS. Can the gentleman explain how these coupons, after they have been detached, are to be returned for redemption? What guaranty is there that all of them will be returned?

Mr. BLUE. If the gentleman will read the first and second sections of the bill, he will see that the company is required to give a bond. In the next place, as I understand it, the company deposits sufficient funds with the Government to pay for the transmission of the postal card and the cancellation of the coupon.

Mr. PERKINS. That is to redeem the coupons that are returned; but at small offices throughout the country, where they may take only two or three of these coupons in a month, how are we to be assured that those coupons will be returned for the company to redeem?

Mr. BLUE. If the gentleman will look into the report, he will find that fully explained. As I understand it, these coupons are to be canceled at the time they are detached, and the money is in the hands of the Post-Office Department to pay for them the moment they are canceled, and if the money is not there there is a bond of $100,000 to guarantee it. Let me say further, in this connection, that I believe all the Postmasters-General in the last three or four Administrations have, either directly or indirectly, given their approval to this legislation. The present Postmaster-General has approved it. It is simply a measure in the interest of better and cheaper postal service for the people of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas when the original patents were granted.

Mr. BLUE. I am unable to answer that question. There are gentlemen on the floor perhaps who can answer it. I do not see, however, what that has to do with this measure at this time.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the gentleman can not answer that, I would like to ask him whether there has ever been any opposition to this bill by any other party claiming to have rival patents?

Mr. BLUE. I do not understand that there is any controversy at all about that. I understand that nobody has ever claimed that there was any infringement, or questioned in any way the right of this company.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman know that?

Mr. BLUE. I do not understand that there is any such claim. I do not say absolutely that there is not, but I do say that it is not my business to prove the fact. I here urge the enactment of this law. It is the business of the opposition to maintain and show the patent of the company is in issue, and if the gentleman knows anybody who controverts the right of this company, let him say who it is and give time and place when the opposing claim has been asserted.

Mr. HULL. This matter has been before Congress for several years, I believe, and if there were any other patents in issue, would not the parties probably have made a showing here?

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman from Iowa well says that this is not a new proposition; that it has several times been before Congress, and that, if any other parties questioned the right of this company, they would probably be here to controvert it. This is a meritorious measure and ought to become a law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is a question of construction between the gentleman in charge of this bill and myself in reference to a statement which I made in my first remarks. I made the statement that the postal card with the coupon attached or the envelope with the coupon attached is deposited in the post-office; the coupon is detached and the account kept at the other end of the route where the postal card or the stamped envelope with the coupon is delivered. The gentleman from California stated that the detaching was done at the point of departure. I call his attention to the reading of the bill, which says that this corporation shall give a bond in the sum of $100,000—

> Or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General may, from time to time, prescribe, conditioned for the redemption in cash when presented of each and every one of said coupons taken from cards and envelopes at the office of delivery.

I claim that the postal card and envelope go through the mails and that the detaching of the coupons is done at the office of delivery. In the facsimile in the gentleman's report we find this: "Good for postage when delivered to addressee." I simply desired to set myself right on that point.

Mr. HICKS. Then, in that case, if the card was not delivered the Government would get nothing for carrying it.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard that point made, but if there is any doubt about that point, I suggest to the gentleman whether that provision might not be amended so as to read "at the office of mailing" instead of "at the office of delivery." Would not that make it sufficiently clear?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it is clear now. The detaching is clearly to be at the office of delivery, not at the office of departure.

Mr. LOUD. Would not the substitution of the word "mailing" instead of the word "delivery" remedy the defect?

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman desires to have the coupons detached at the mailing office, it would.

Mr. LOUD. That is the intention.

Mr. BINGHAM. How does anybody know, in that case, that it ever goes through the mails?

Mr. LOUD. It bears the stamp.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the stamp is detached.

Mr. LOUD. When it has got into the hands of the postal authorities, we assume that it is then started on the way to delivery.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman can fix it either way. I do not care whether it is done at the point of delivery or at the point of departure. I simply wanted to show the foundation for the statement that I made.

Mr. LOUD. I am willing to change the bill in that respect if the gentleman desires.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no desire to change it. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, permit me to ask whether I am recognized in my own right?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes, which have been yielded to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. CORLISS. The reason I ask the question is that I desire to make a motion, and I thought that if recognized in my own right I would have the right to make it. I will not consume over five or six minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] desires to be recognized in his own right. Does the gentleman from California yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. If there are no gentlemen desiring to occupy any part of my time, I will yield the remainder to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. I prefer to be recognized in my own right, for the purpose of making a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, if I understand this measure, it grants to a corporation a special privilege that is not granted to any other citizen of the United States. It grants to a corporation owning a patented device a privilege which, by virtue of the patent, places in its hands a monopoly. No other corporation, no other individual, will have the right to exercise the privilege granted under this bill to this corporation.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. CORLISS. My time is limited.

Mr. HARDY. I merely wish to state that the Government——

Mr. CORLISS. I have not yielded. Mr. Speaker, my time is limited to what period?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor for an hour.

Mr. CORLISS. Then I can permit interruptions.

Mr. LOUD. There seems to be a misunderstanding as to the recognition of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. There seems to be some misunderstanding on the subject of the right to the floor. I understood that I took the floor and gave way to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who yielded to the gentleman from Michigan five minutes. Otherwise I should not have allowed myself to be taken off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair called the attention of the gentleman from California to the matter, so that if there was any misunderstanding it might be rectified at the time; nothing was done, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LOUD. I did not hear the Chair. It was impossible to do so on account of the noise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair called the special attention of the gentleman from California to the matter.

Mr. STEELE. The understanding was that the gentleman from Michigan was yielded five minutes in his own right so that he could offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan requested to be recognized in his own time. The Chair called the attention of the gentleman from California and the House to the matter; thereupon nothing was done, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STEELE. My understanding was that the gentleman from Michigan wanted to be recognized for five minutes to offer an amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Chair will allow me to state that I announced distinctly that if no other gentlemen desired a portion of my time, I had no further use for it, and would yield it to the gentleman from Michigan. That gentleman declined my proposition, and asked recognition of the Chair in his own right.

Mr. CORLISS. And I obtained it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I clearly stated to the House that, so far as I was concerned, I did not wish to occupy the floor further.

The SPEAKER. The Chair endeavors to protect the rights of members.

Mr. CORLISS. I decline to yield further.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is brought in here, it seems to me, at a time when members of this House should not be asked to consider so important a matter. It is one which ought to be considered with great care. This bill grants to one corporation the credit of this Government; it authorizes that corporation to transmit through the mails at the expense of the Government letters and postal cards upon the credit of the company. The only guaranty that the Government has for reimbursement is the bond which the corporation proposes to file—a bond which, perhaps, will be filed in the city of Washington, while undertaking to guarantee the credit of this company all over the land—at every post-office in the country.

This grant is a personal privilege in the hands of a corporation. I can not believe that a member of this House at the present time will for a moment vote in favor of it. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] stated here that it took two years for this corporation to convince him conscientiously of the merit of the measure and induce him to father it before this House. Now, if it took two years to convince the gentleman from California of the merit of the measure, I think this House ought to have longer than two hours to consider it. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Nebraska stated that this bill is in the interests of the business of the nation. Then, Mr. Speaker, let the nation control the operations of this system. If the measure is in the interests of the business people of the country, let the Post-Office Department control the operations of the system. The Government can control the issue of patents. Some other man may devise a method which will be better than this. Let the Government offer a reward, if it be deemed necessary, for a patent device that will surpass this one. You will obtain it within a few months.

I say that the people of the country should absolutely control the Post-Office Department. This bill is a step in the direction of placing the Post-Office Department in the hands of private corporations. The gentleman from California is to-day taking a step that he believes in—a step which would take from the hands of the people the right to control the Postal Department of our Government. He has stated to me that he believes the postal business can be handled more economically if placed in the hands of corporations. That has no doubt influenced him in supporting that proposition.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this is the first step that has ever been attempted by this House toward taking from the hands of the people the right to control their own postal matters. We are drifting more and more into the power of corporations. We are drifting more and more under the influence of such organizations. I submit that this bill should be condemned, and I can not believe that the members of this House desire at this time, when we have measures pending that are just, when we have measures that the people desire, when we have private bills here that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is always ready to object to, to take up, at the dictation of the gentleman from California, a measure that involves an interest of every class of people in this country. I hope that the House will at once adopt the motion which I am about to make, and end this discussion for the present, until the matter can be given due consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] moves that the bill lie on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CORLISS) there were—ayes 93, noes 44.

Accordingly, the motion to lay the bill on the table was agreed to.

REPORTS OF PRIZE FIGHTS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be allowed to call up a measure at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] has a matter which he desires to call up, and if there be no objection, he can present it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We were unable to hear his request.

The SPEAKER. The request was that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be allowed to call up a measure under the call. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no picture or description of any prize fight or encounter of pugilists, under whatever name, or any proposal or record of betting on the same, shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States or by interstate commerce, whether in a newspaper or other periodical, or telegram, or in any other form.

SEC. 2. That any person sending such matter, or knowingly receiving such matter for transmission, by mail or interstate commerce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years, at the discretion of the court, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

The report (by Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois) was read, as follows:

All the States of the Union, save one or two, forbid prize fights, which have been sent to the limbo of condemned customs with dueling, slavery, lotteries, and polygamy. This bill simply protects the more advanced States which have forbidden pugilism as brutal and brutalizing against having prize fights brought into their borders in pictures and descriptions which are only a little less harmful than the degrading sport which they describe. (This bill does not forbid a brief statement of the fight as a matter of news.)

This Congress, in its swiftest enactment, forbade prize fighting in its whole jurisdiction, and so drove a prospective prize fight announced to occur in one of the Territories into the mountains of Mexico, whose Government had also forbidden it. This bill is but a logical extension and protection of that act, and is in accord also with another act of this Congress, approved by this committee and since enacted into law, prohibiting the interstate transportation of obscene pictures; pictures of the brutality of pugilism are hardly less harmful to our youth. It is in accord, also, with the antidivorce act of Congress, which has protected the families of the whole land against the "divorce colonies" of one of the Territories. This bill calls for immediate consideration for manifest reasons. It is believed the reputable press, which describes prize fights only because of competition, will welcome this protection.

Your committee, therefore, beg leave to report the same to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

A bill to forbid the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of any picture or description of any prize fight or its accessories.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no picture or description of any prize fight, or encounter of pugilists under whatever name, or any proposal or record of betting on the same shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States or by interstate commerce, whether in a newspaper or other periodical, or telegram, or in any other form.

SEC. 2. That any person sending such matter, or knowingly receiving such matter for transmission, by mail or interstate commerce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years, at the discretion of the court, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill is precisely what it purports to be. If it becomes a law, it is not expected that the mill which is billed for the 17th of March in the State of Nevada will be prevented, but it is expected to stop the broadcast dissemination of matter the publication of which has already commenced, in all parts of the country, of the details of the affair.

Prize fighting has been driven out of Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Arkansas, and California, and several other States. By an act passed in the Fifty-third Congress prize fighting has been driven out of the Territories. Now, Mr. Speaker, the last refuge of those engaged in this unseemly business is a State the population of which is less than that of one ward alone in my district. It does seem to me that, if the demoralizing effect of these combats themselves can not be stopped, we can, at least, stop that which is even worse and more degrading and more demoralizing to the youth of this land, namely, the broadcast publication of the sickening details of these fights.

Mr. GROW. With pictures.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Therefore I think it is high time for Congress to do what it can to prevent this.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I should like to ask the gentleman what he understands to be the meaning of the words in the sixth line of the first section "by interstate commerce?"

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. That means the transmission of any matter connected with the combat, or referring thereto.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do you understand that would prevent sending it by express?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I do; precisely that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am afraid that is not strong enough to cover it.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Well, if the gentleman can suggest a stronger amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am in favor of the bill, but I want to see it pass in such manner as to stop this business.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in my time I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read letters and telegrams which I have received this very day on this subject.

Mr. FOOTE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Let us have these letters and telegrams read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

WORCESTER, MASS., March 1, 1897.

Hon. J. FRANK ALDRICH, House of Representatives:

The Worcester (Mass.) Congregational Ministers' Meeting, representing 40 churches and 8,000 members, heartily indorses and urges passage of bill now before the House forbidding the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of any pictures or description of any prize fights or its accessories.

PITTSBURG, PA., March 1, 1897.

Hon. J. FRANK ALDRICH,
House of Representatives:

I favor passage of your anti-prize-fight bill or something better.

J. J. PORTER.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will ask consent that the remainder of the communications be printed in the RECORD, saving the necessity of reading them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the telegrams and communications be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. I object.

Mr. MEREDITH. I object.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I ask if the gentleman withdraws his objection?

Mr. MEREDITH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Alabama if he has withdrawn his objection?

The SPEAKER. One member can not withdraw another member's objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I understood the gentleman from Alabama to object to the printing of these communications, and I also understand that he now withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia withdrew his objection.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I know that I but voice the sentiments of the Baptist Young People's unions, not of the District only, but of our entire country, when I petition your body, as I do hereby, for the immediate passage of the Aldrich antiprize-fight bill—a measure that affords protection to our youth against free trade in brutality.

RICHARD A. FORD,
President District Baptist Young People's Union.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I will ask the Clerk to discontinue reading, and I will yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman yield to me a half a minute, that I may offer an amendment?

Mr. HARDY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDY. Is there any division of time in the debate on this bill? I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no distinction thus far.

Mr. MORSE. I will only take about three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will not the gentleman give me a minute?

Mr. MORSE. I yield for a minute for the reading of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I offer this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 1, section 1, after the word "interstate," strike out "commerce" and insert "railway or water service or otherwise;" also in line 3, section 2, after the word "State," strike out the words "commerce" and insert the words "railways or water service or otherwise."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think that was the intention of the bill, and it will carry out its purpose.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to occupy the attention of the House but for a few minutes. I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be assented to by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I have no objection to the amendment, and will accept it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry for information?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow an interruption for the purpose of obtaining information?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand from the wording of this bill that the clause reading "whether in a newspaper or other periodical, or telegram, or in any other form" will prevent correspondence in a sealed letter giving a description of a fight or a description of anything pertaining to it?

Mr. MORSE. I hardly think it goes so far as that.

Mr. BINGHAM. What does it mean by "in any other form?"

Mr. MORSE. In any public form that will debauch the public mind.

Mr. FOOTE. It does not so state.

Mr. BINGHAM. If any information of a fight shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States, "in a newspaper or other periodical, or telegram, or in any other form," would that prevent a sealed description from being sent?

Mr. MORSE. I think it is hardly as drastic as that, Mr. Speaker. Now, I ask the attention of the House to listen to me for just a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I believe in this bill. I believe it is a just and proper bill, and I hope it will pass both Houses and be signed by the President and become a law. Every State in the Union, save three, makes prize fighting a crime, and the suppression of the details and of pictures of this degrading, brutal, and disgusting business is in entire harmony with the laws of the States, with the laws of the United States, and with the sentiment of our people. The brave stand taken by Governor Culberson, of Texas, whose father, Judge CULBERSON, has been an honored member of this House for many years, won for him the praise of all the right-minded people throughout this great country.

For a year or two past two big brutes named Corbett and Fitzsimmons have been looking for a place to pound one another. Up to this time they have done most of their fighting with their mouths. One after another, where they have attempted to have a meeting, the States have taken action to prevent it. In Louisiana, in Mississippi, in Florida, in Minnesota, in Texas, in Arkansas, and New Mexico. Then it was proposed to have the fight outside the country, in Mexico. The Mexicans are not particularly pious. They do not object to a bull fight, but they drew the line on these brutes, and the Mexican Government said their country should not be disgraced by this brutal exhibition. Now, to the everlasting shame and disgrace of the State of Nevada, the legislature of that State has passed a bill, and the governor has signed it, to legalize this brutal, disgusting exhibition. My district contains 200,000 inhabitants, and has the misfortune to be represented on this floor by so humble an individual as myself, and has only a piece of a Senator at the other end of the Capitol; while the State of Nevada, with 40,000 inhabitants, has one Representative in this House and two Senators at the other end of the building.

If there was any constitutional method by which statehood could be taken away from that State, which is little less than a mining camp, I am sure a vast majority of the people of this country would favor such action, and would be glad to remand the State back to the condition of a Territory, especially since this last disgraceful, humiliating, and shameful act of the legislature of that State.

This bill, as I understand it, does not forbid a brief statement of the fight as a matter of news, but forbids the transmission through the mail, or by interstate commerce, or by telegraph, of the disgusting details, or of pictures of the brutal encounter.

Mr. FOOTE. Who is to be the judge of the brutality of the encounter? And I would like also to know just how much constitutionality there is in this bill? Why can we not go further and strike out accounts of murders and other disgusting details that we find every day in the newspapers?

Mr. MORSE. Well, I hope, when you hear the vote of the House on this question, you will see that it is with me, and that this House believes prize fighting is a brutal encounter and is a disgrace to the country, as it is. It belongs to the Dark Ages. It has no place in a Christian and civilized community such as we profess to be.

Mr. FOOTE. Does this bill prohibit the publication of accounts of boxing matches?

Mr. MORSE. I think so; if they lead to the drawing of blood or anything of a brutal character. I suppose a boxing match might perhaps be of such a character as not to come within the scope of this bill.

Mr. BRUMM. How about football?

Mr. MORSE. Well, I am not a champion of football, either. I believe it is brutal. But let us go for one thing at a time, and we are dealing with prize fighting now.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I understand it, was only very recently reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is the unanimous report of that committee. I never read the bill until this morning; but the telegrams and letters which have reached the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois] from remote sections of the country, some of which have just been read from the Clerk's desk, show the widespread interest felt by the moral and religious people of this country in this bill which is now before the House. In answer to the argument that this bill establishes a censorship of the press, it is right to establish a censorship of the press in the interest of public morals. We have a censorship of the press now in regard to matters that concern the moral welfare of our people. No paper can circulate through the mails of the United States that contains any advertisement of a lottery or any drawing of a lottery. We have a censorship of the press in regard to obscene and indecent publications. No paper, magazine, or other publication containing such obscene or indecent matter is mailable. We have the same censorship of the press in regard to advertisements, medicines, or preparations of abortionists, and now it is proposed to add one more thing injurious to public morals that shall be excluded from the United States mails and from interstate commerce, i. e., pictures and disgusting details of these brutal prize fights. Would anybody think, at this stage of the game, of repealing the law excluding the other things from the mails and from interstate commerce? I venture to say that such a bill could not get 6 votes in this House.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is in the interest of virtue and public morals. Pass this bill and relieve these brutal exhibitions of the notoriety which they are given by the press, and the business of the prize fighter will be gone, and the country will be saved from this everlasting humiliation and disgrace. It has been well and truly said here that the large and great metropolitan papers would be glad to be relieved of publishing these disgusting details, but they are compelled to do it by the rivalry of the sensational and more unprincipled newspapers. For my part, I would be delighted if the United Press and the Associated Press were allowed to telegraph over the country at the close of the fight that these two big brutes had met each other at Carson City and had killed each other, and neither of them would be able to give any more challenges or accept any, or fight any more either with their mouths or fists. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the whole business is brutal, degrading, disgusting, repugnant to the moral sense of our people, demoralizing to the young men of our country, and this bill should pass and become a law. [Applause.]

Mr. FOOTE. One more question.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to analyze the legal effect of the provisions of this bill. A question has been put to me which is a very difficult one to answer. It is how far we can go in suppressing the right of the newspapers——

Mr. QUIGG (interposing). Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. This is a very serious proposition, and I want to understand it. I can not hear the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been asking for order all day and occasionally getting it. [Laughter.] The House will please be in order. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The question has been put to me, and it is the question, I suppose, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FOOTE] was about to put to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE], whether or not it is competent for Congress to prohibit the publication in the newspapers of matter which is deemed to be immoral and which promotes immorality and crime, as, for instance, the publication of accounts of murders, murder trials, and other matters that I need not more particularly specify.

Mr. FOOTE. If the gentleman will allow me, the question I wanted to put was this: Whether this proposed law would prevent a review of the fight between David and Goliath, or anything of that kind? [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I refer the gentleman to the distinguished divine, Dr. Talmage, who preached upon that subject about two weeks ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I look with absolute detestation and horror upon this whole business of prize fighting. I have no disposition to criticise the State of Nevada, however, because if I lived in a State that had nothing else to commend it, possibly I might be in favor of importing prize fights. [Laughter.] But the public may as well understand that the necessities of good order and of decent government are involved in breaking up this business of prize fighting. This is not a novel question with me. I had the honor to aid in the prosecution of the first prize fight that was prosecuted in the State of Ohio. Our statute simply defined the crime to be "who ever engages in a prize fight." The whole question of "boxing matches" and "athletic clubs" came up in considering the various subterfuges under which prize fights were attempted to be perpetrated upon the public, and the supreme court of Ohio gave a construction to the term "prize fighting" drawn from the decisions of the English court in the case of Slavin. The result was that the young man on trial was held to be guilty of prize fighting and was sent to the penitentiary, and from that day to this we have had no more prize fights in the State of Ohio.

Now, this bill undertakes to say that the advertising of prize fights shall not be permitted through the mails or the express companies of the country. If prize fighting is a crime, as it is; if it is brutal and demoralizing, as it is, how does this differ in principle from excluding from the mails the advertisements of lotteries and other games of chance? The gentleman from New York has put the question to me whether the proposed law would exclude an account of the fight between David and Goliath. I will put a question to him in reply. Our law excludes from the mails all advertisements of lotteries or games of chance, and my question is: Would that law exclude from the mails an account of the transaction between Laban and Jacob? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOOTE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I never receive any such documents as those he has referred to here.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My friend from New York is not the sort of person that we are trying to protect. He protects himself. There is a sort of atmosphere, a sort of halo around him that drives away every attack upon his virtue; but he is different in that respect from many other people. [Laughter.] I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, no Representative on this floor is more earnestly opposed to the crime of prize fighting than myself, and I am in hearty accord with all proper measures for the suppression of the evil. But it seems to me that this is one of the most extraordinary propositions submitted to this body during my Congressional service. This bill establishes a censorship of the press of the country, and if enacted into law the logical result will be a bureau of the Government to make the censorship effective. In such an event I do not know of any gentleman on this floor—I say it with entire and perfect respect—who is more entitled to preside over that bureau than the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] who advocates this measure.

Mr. MORSE. Allow me to ask——

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not yield. Mr. Speaker, if the great daily newspapers are to be punished for reporting prize fights, then I suppose the next step in logical sequence will be to prohibit the press from publishing the details of other crimes—the details, for instance, of murders.

Mr. MORSE rose.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not yield, because I have not time.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that every State in this Union has prohibited prize fighting except the State of Nevada, and I trust the discussion of this question will so awaken public sentiment in that little State that its legislature at an early date will forbid this hideous and thoroughly vicious sport.

Let the law prohibit prize fighting; that is the way to stop this evil—not by establishing a censorship of the press. The liberty of the press must be maintained, because it is essential to the safety of the Republic. If this bill becomes a law, some other gentleman with the peculiar views of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be advocating the control and regulation of the press in respect to other crimes that may find description in the columns of the newspapers.

I trust that this bill will be laid on the table, and if opportunity offers I shall make that motion. I can not do so now, because I speak by the courtesy of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does not the gentleman believe that scattering over the country the details of prize fights helps to awaken a desire in the minds of young men to distinguish themselves in that way, and therefore to a great extent corrupts public morals?

Mr. DOCKERY. Perhaps that is true; but I would go to the root of the evil by prohibiting prize fighting; and every State of the Union with the exception of Nevada has already done so.

Mr. HEPBURN. How would you do that?

Mr. DOCKERY. It has already been done, as I understand, except by the State of Nevada.

Mr. HEPBURN. How would you prevent it there?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the telegrams and papers that have been read here in the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] be addressed to the enlightened conscience, the moral sentiment, the patriotism of the people of Nevada, and I have confidence that they will respond to the appeal and promptly pass an act prohibiting this brutal and cruel sport.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does not the gentleman know that the newspapers try to get up prize fights on their own account in order to enlarge their circulation?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to defend prize fighting or prize fighters. I desire only to say that this is very dangerous legislation. Under this bill, as it is drawn, you can prohibit anybody from sending certain books now in the Congressional Library to anybody by mail, under a penalty of $1,000 fine and five years' imprisonment. They have in that Library the History of English Pugilists, with pictures of nearly every prize fight fought in Great Britain. You might prohibit even the sending of an illustrated copy of Virgil through the mails, for there we have a magnificent description of the prize fight between Dares and Entellus.

The States, all except one, have forbidden prize fighting. You can safely leave legislation as to the printing of cuts of such fights in newspapers to the States where such newspapers are printed and where such legislation belongs. We already find a bill introduced into the legislature of New York to prevent the caricaturing of public men. You might just as well bring that bill up here in the House as to bring this bill in here. They are all in the same category.

I say this is dangerous legislation; it is legislation which, if indulged in at all, should be left with the States, not resorted to by Congress. You already have upon the statute book a law forbidding the sending of obscene books or papers through the mails. Do you know how that works? Men have been arrested in the city of New York and elsewhere for selling copies of Boccaccio, of the Heptameron, of Rabelais, and other standard works. You can not tell how far such legislation is going to reach, gentlemen. It seems to me it is dangerous, and I trust the bill will be tabled.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], chairman of the committee reporting this bill, and, owing to the lateness of the hour, at the conclusion of his remarks I shall ask for the previous question on the bill to its passage.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it is only a few years since the effort was made in this House to prevent the advertisement of lottery schemes by dissemination through the press. At that time gentlemen made precisely the same arguments against that bill that they are now making against this. They then insisted that that was a censorship of the press, and that its influence would be widespread and deleterious. Is there any gentleman now, in the light of experience, with the knowledge which we now have on this subject, who would, here in this presence, attempt a repeal of that wise legislation? We have seen that it has destroyed that most enticing mode of gambling, and that it has undoubtedly saved to thousands and tens of thousands of homes that which was necessary for their support and comfort. Gentlemen now say that this establishes a censorship of the press, and the gentleman gives an extreme illustration. I insist that that is not an illustration that ought to be considered here.

This bill will be construed by men learned in the law—by judges of the courts. They will not give the construction that the gentleman insists upon in his hypothetical case. There is no fear of anything of that kind. No court will have difficulty in determining the class of literature that is here prohibited, nor will the officers of the Postal Department have any difficulty. They have to determine now as to whether this, that, or the other enterprise has those characteristics which are prohibited by law. They have no difficulty in reaching that determination, in excluding from the mails matter which ought to be excluded, and in permitting the free and safe passage of that which under the law is prohibited. Gentlemen are unnecessarily frightened about this bill. I undertake to say that the great reputable journals of this country desire that a bill of this kind shall be passed. They do not want to burden their columns, day after day, with the accounts of these unseemly proceedings; but there are papers that will do it, and in order to meet the active competition those that otherwise would exclude reports of this sort from their columns are compelled to print them, because there is a small percentage of people, but one which is important, perhaps, in the sale of newspapers, that desire this literature. This passion is catered to by all of the papers. I believe that a large majority of them would be glad to have this legislation and be relieved from the necessities of this malodorous competition.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I move the previous question on the bill and pending amendment to its passage.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the gentleman whether, under this bill, if one person sends to another one of our voluminous Sunday newspapers which happens to contain a description of a pugilistic encounter, the person sending the paper and the one to whom it is sent would not be liable to prosecution by the wording of this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think any person, under those circumstances, would be liable, nor do I think the gentleman thinks so. The law is not intended for that class of persons. It is intended to prohibit the publication of this class of literature.

Mr. QUIGG. Could not a reporter who sent a telegram with reference to any sort of an encounter be made liable to five years' imprisonment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Any sort of an encounter, if it was a prize fight. He has no business to use the mails for that purpose.

Mr. QUIGG. I said a telegram.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill goes much further than the gentleman from Iowa thinks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] to ask for the previous question.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I do.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. QUIGG demanded a division, and then demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand the gentleman from Illinois who has charge of the bill to ask for the previous question on the bill and the pending amendment. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the previous question on the bill to its passage.

Mr. QUIGG. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is ordered, will it be in order, after such action, to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses the previous question, it will be in order to move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the event of the previous question being ordered, will it then be in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, under the rulings.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I hope the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. QUIGG. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ELLETT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DALZELL. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending the demand for the previous question, I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that, pending the motion——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CUMMINGS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. QUIGG. I withdraw the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The House is getting into confusion over a matter which is perfectly simple. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] asks for the previous question. If the House orders the previous question, then the vote must be taken on the bill to its passage. If the House refuses to order the previous question, then the motion to lay the bill on the table will be in order. If, meantime, the House adjourns, that solves the difficulty in another way.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Is the same difficulty solved with reference to a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Temporarily.

Mr. QUIGG. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order pending a motion to adjourn. This is a matter which concerns the state of the public business.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the printing of the District bill, which is not quite ready to come over.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman who made the motion to adjourn will withdraw it, the Chair will put some of these questions.

Mr. QUIGG. I withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. ELLETT. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion to adjourn pending.

Mr. DALZELL. That motion has been withdrawn by the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], and I have moved that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRETT. Is a motion to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning amendable?

The SPEAKER. It is open to amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. Then I make the point of order that pending the verification of a vote no motion can be made that is coupled with an amendment. The House has already voted upon the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. No!

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question is pending.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. BARRETT. The Chair stated that the question was upon the previous question and the House voted, and the gentleman from New York rose and said that he called for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. The House did not vote.

Mr. DALZELL. I withdraw my motion that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is withdrawn, and the question now is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 98; so the House refused to order the previous question.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. My parliamentary inquiry is whether the refusal of the House to sustain the demand for the previous question made by the gentleman in charge of the bill does not pass the control of the bill to the opposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the Speaker declared that he was in doubt.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 55.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken, and the yeas and nays were ordered—87 members (more than one-fifth of the last vote) voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. I hope that will be voted down.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded, and the House divided.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement of the vote upon the motion to adjourn, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The yeas and nays are ordered. Is it in order after that is done to make a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is in order. On this question the yeas are——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, after consulting with gentlemen on both sides of this question, I wish to make a proposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will have that opportunity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to lay the bill upon the table be withdrawn, and that it be referred to the standing Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be done.

Mr. BARRETT. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GROUT and others objected.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced—ayes 79, noes 77.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to make a minute's statement.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Illinois will have that permission.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I hope there will be unanimous consent to withdraw this motion to adjourn, and that I be recognized to move that we take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, the object being at that time to receive bills from the Senate. We will have to be up all night to-morrow night, and we had better husband our strength, and not get into a useless wrangle that will wear us out without profit. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the motion to adjourn be withdrawn, and that I may be afforded an opportunity to make a motion to take a recess, as indicated.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be done.

Mr. QUIGG. I would like to inquire whether that leaves the previous question pending to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. The previous question was negatived.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. GROUT. I simply want a yea-and-nay vote on this question.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered by the House.

Mr. GROUT. That will be in order to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is, by consent of the House, withdrawn.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry before that consent is given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the motion is withdrawn and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized to move a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow, we come back precisely to where we are now, with this bill still pending.

The SPEAKER. It will still be pending.

Mr. BAILEY. It seems to me we had better dispose of it. I am not making any objection; but I think we ought to dispose of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Notwithstanding its pendency in its present condition, conference reports on appropriation bills would take precedence.

The SPEAKER. Conference reports would take precedence.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understood that the gentleman from Ohio asked unanimous consent that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Objection was made. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], by consent of the House, withdraws the motion to adjourn, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result, the Chair will submit the following report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7205) granting a pension to Alphonzo O. Drake;

A bill (H. R. 2689) granting a pension to Charlotte Weirer;

A bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.," approved March 1, 1893;

A bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, dependent and helpless child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 6730) granting a pension to Edward C. Spofford;

A bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich.

The motion to take a recess was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), the House was declared in recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations for defraying the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, showing operation of the rural free-delivery service at forty-two post-offices—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of harbor at Kenosha, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Otter Tail Lake and Otter Tail River, Minnesota—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of harbor at Sheboygan, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of harbor at Racine, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 267) to amend an act entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861," approved March 2, 1891, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3057); which said bill, amendment, and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HICKS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9962) for the erection of a public building at Carrollton, Ky., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report

(No. 3058); which said bill, amendment, and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred House bills Nos. 9471, 7863, and 5683, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 10375) to increase the efficiency of the foreign service of the United States, and to provide for the reorganization of the consular service, accompanied by a report (No. 3060); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10249) to regulate interstate transportation of property owned or manufactured by unlawful combinations, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3062); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 3237) entitled "An act granting a pension to Annie Fowler," reported the same (Report No. 3063); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 2, 1897.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Thomas Rosbrugh was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 4550) granting an increase of pension to John X. Griffith was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4979) to amend sections 141 and 145 and repealing sections 143 and 144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

LEGATION BUILDING AT TEHERAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a dispatch from the United States minister at Teheran, Persia, dated January 18, 1897, concerning the purchase of an official residence at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON, ALEXANDRIA AND MOUNT VERNON RAILWAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railway Company for the year ended December 31, 1896; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SEABOARD AIR LINE MAILS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d ultimo, a copy of the reports of the agents of the Post-Office Department in relation to the weighing the mail upon the Seaboard Air Line in 1896, and also all correspondence between the Department and the officers of that railroad company, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

REPRINT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask to have the District of Columbia appropriation bill printed as it passed the Senate, with the amendments of the Senate numbered, for the convenience of the conferees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—ACTION IN EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation, and in order to make it I will be compelled to ask the Senate to agree that I shall be permitted, contrary to the rule, to refer to what transpired in executive session in relation to the confirmation of certain Pennsylvania postmasters yesterday. If there are no objections, I will proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. What is the proposition? I could not hear it.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may be relieved from the obligation of secrecy as to matters transpiring yesterday evening in executive session in relation to the confirmation of certain Pennsylvania postmasters.

Mr. CHILTON. We can not hear on this side.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that, for the purpose of a personal explanation, he be relieved from the obligation of secrecy in regard to certain matters which occurred in executive session. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I recognize the right and the power of a majority in the Senate. I recognize their right to name the postmasters in Pennsylvania and elsewhere, to have them reported from the Post-Office Committee when there is no objection affecting the character of the nominee of the President, and to have the report adopted in the Senate.

In pursuance of the policy of the majority, a large number of Pennsylvania postmasters were favorably reported to the Senate. Yesterday evening, during the executive session, they were taken up for confirmation. As to some of them there was question as to the character of the nominee, and when the suggestion was made, after the confirmation, that the rule should be suspended and the President be notified of the confirmation of the other nominees for postmasters, I asked, and the Senate unanimously agreed, that the Pennsylvania postmasters should be excepted. I think Senators present will remember that.

Now, I take up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning, and I take up the newspapers, and find that all the Pennsylvania postmasters have gone with the others, and that their confirmation has been given to the press while they are still lying here subject to reconsideration; and I have this morning, as I expected I might have from one of them—from the office at Lansford, Carbon County, Pa.—remonstrances seriously affecting the character of the nominee, and it is possible that in one or two others, notably in the case of the postmaster at Philipsburg, Center County, documents of the same kind may be received.

I do not know how to correct what has been done. I presume it has gone too far. But I desire to call the attention of the Senate to what has transpired, and to urge that something should be done to fix the responsibility somewhere, in order to prevent the recurrence of such an act.

Mr. PEFFER. I will take the liberty of suggesting to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the best way to remedy such matters is to stop altogether executive sessions with closed doors.

Mr. CHILTON subsequently said: On the matter brought up by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] this morning, I desire to occupy perhaps two minutes. I think it is due to the Secretary of the Senate and his assistants that some correction should be made of the remarks made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which I think may put them in a false attitude. I ask permission of the Senate to make a statement. It is about an executive matter, though it is not one of great importance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. CHILTON. My only reason for taking a special interest at this stage is that I happened to be in the chair yesterday afternoon during the time of the executive session. A great many nominations were confirmed. Among these were the nominations for postmasters in Pennsylvania. Then a request was entered that the President be notified of the confirmation of all these nominations. The Senator from Pennsylvania objected as to the Pennsylvania cases, and they were omitted from the order of notification. The records of the Senate show that fact. So there is no fault in our records.

Now, the matter of complaint is that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows the confirmation in the Pennsylvania cases in connection with all the others. That is true; but the rule of the Senate, which I will read, Rule XXXVIII, section 2, says:

> The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret.

I am informed by Senators old in service here that the custom has been whenever a nomination is confirmed to publish the fact in the RECORD, regardless of the order in regard to notification of the President. So the confirmation in the Pennsylvania cases was published in accordance with this custom. But the notification to the President has not been given, and the records show that no consent to such notification was given. It only remains to say that the Senator from Pennsylvania has no cause of complaint against the officers of the Senate. I refer to the matter again because his remarks would seem to imply that somebody is blamable in the premises.

Mr. QUAY. I think, on examination, since my remarks this morning, that the statement of the Senator from Texas is correct. I was not aware that it is the custom of the Senate to give out for publication a list of confirmations when they have not finally passed beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate, but it seems that the custom is contrary to what I had supposed.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the Senator from Texas is wrong, and that the original proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as I understand it, is right.

When we make public the confirmation or rejection of a nomination——

Mr. CHILTON. We can not hear what is being said by the Senator from Massachussetts.

Mr. HOAR. We do not expect that it will be treated as the final action of the Senate until the time provided under the Senate rules for reconsideration has gone by, and therefore when the Senate orders that a certain action which is still inchoate, liable to be reconsidered, not finally acted upon, shall not even be communicated to the Executive, it supposes, of course, that it will not be communicated to the public. If another practice has crept in, it is a practice which ought instantly to be changed. I hope it will be changed by the direction of the Presiding Officer, without any occasion to have any addition to the rule. Otherwise, of course, we shall have to change the rule.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me for a moment? The difficulty with the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is that the rule to which the Senator from Pennsylvania refers has been changed by a resolution of my own which passed the Senate about two or three years ago. I found confronting us in executive session this rule, under which, although we confirmed a nomination to-day, it could not be given out to the press or published in the RECORD until two days thereafter, and therefore we had to remain quiet during that day. Then two days afterwards it would be sent out by the Associated and the United Press that on yesterday or the day before the nomination of a man had been confirmed, when in fact it had been confirmed two days before.

Now, to avoid that I offered a resolution which passed the Senate after some little opposition, because it trenched upon the old practices of the Senate, and therefore there was naturally some opposition to it. It was passed. It is a part of our rules, and from that day to the present confirmations have been given to the public and published in the RECORD, although the President has not been notified.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that I am perfectly familiar with the history which the Senator from New York has recited, and with the order of the Senate, but certainly a nomination is not confirmed or rejected by the Senate until the time has gone by for reconsideration. The reconsideration is as much a part—of course it is a condition subsequent—of the action of the Senate as any other part.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, my occupancy of the chair at the time of these confirmations made it proper that I should ascertain the exact facts. I have found that the clerks in this case have done just as they do in all cases—that is, as soon as a nomination is confirmed they put it in the RECORD and give it to the press. This takes place without any regard to the question of notification.

Mr. HILL. They have a right to do so. Although a motion is made to reconsider the vote by which a bill was passed, the bill has passed, and although the President has not been notified, the nomination has been confirmed. That has been going on for three straight years in the Senate under the resolution which can be produced at any time by looking up the files of executive sessions.

Mr. QUAY. My understanding, when I addressed the Chair and called the attention of the Senate to the matter this morning, was similar to that of the Senator from Massachusetts, which, if it is not the rule and practice of the Senate, I think ought to be the practice. I am satisfied from the statements made by gentlemen of large experience in the Senate that the custom is as stated by the Senator from New York, and that I was in error, and I have nothing more to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no doubt about the correctness of the statement of the Senator from New York, and if the Senator from Pennsylvania had made inquiry he would have learned that, although these announcements of confirmations are in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the notices have not been sent to the President. That is the whole case. The resolution of the Senator from New York was deliberately adopted. It may have been unwise to adopt it, but it was deliberately adopted, and it stands until it is reconsidered, and that reconsideration and the discussion connected with it must take place in executive session and not in open Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BOUTELLE, Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CUMMINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2696) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the international monetary conference bill may be taken up and considered at 12 o'clock to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that at 12 o'clock the international monetary conference bill be taken up.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that I want to object, but I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Is it the bill as passed by the House that he wishes to have considered?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I shall move to concur in the House amendments. I do not anticipate any objection to the amendments, but one or two Senators wish to say a few words upon the subject.

Mr. ALLEN. Has there been any suggestion that the measure as passed here——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendments be read that the Senator from New Hampshire wishes to have concurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why will not the Senator wait and consent to the amendments being taken up for consideration at 12 o'clock. I renew the request for unanimous consent, and then the amendments can be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to fix the hour at 1 o'clock, as we have the fortifications appropriation bill to be considered in the meantime.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will substitute 1 o'clock, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One o'clock is substituted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of members of the Fourth session of the legislative assembly of Idaho, remonstrating against the right of Hon. Henry Heitfeld to a seat as Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a petition of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of New York and vicinity, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of pictures or descriptions of prize fights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance, remonstrating against the action of the United States Senate in holding a legislative session on Sunday, February 28, 1897; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CANNON. I present a petition of the National Equitable Protection Association of the United States, and of the State Grangers of Pennsylvania and Virginia, in favor of equitable protection. I do not ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, but that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUAY. I present a resolution of the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, which I ask to have read and lie on the table.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Harrisburg, February 18, 1897.

Whereas the Senate of the United States has unanimously adopted a resolution designed to effect the release from imprisonment and insult of an American citizen, Mr. Sylvester S. Scovel, a representative of the press of New York City, and who is now confined in a Spanish prison: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, That the action of the Senate of the United States is hereby commended, and that effort should be made by the Department of State to secure the early release of said Sylvester S. Scovel.

A true copy from the journal of the house of representatives.

JERE B. REX,
Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.

Mr. BATE presented the petitions of H. L. Armstrong, cashier of the Continental National Bank of Memphis; of the Van Vleet Mansfield Drug Company, of Memphis; of C. W. Goyer & Co., of Memphis, and of the L. H. Gage Lumber Company, of Memphis, all in the State of Tennessee; of T. A. Havron, publisher of the Democrat, of Jasper, Tenn.; of T. F. & Hal Sevier, publishers of the Sentinel, of Sabinal, Tex.; of J. V. & R. S. Kirkland, of Fulton, Ky.; of G. H. Trevathan, of Paris, Tenn., and of the A. M. Stevens Lumber Company, of Dyersburg, Tenn., praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GEAR. I present a memorial of the Tollerton & Stetson Company, of Sioux City, Iowa, earnestly opposing the passage of the Bailey-George bankruptcy bill, and vigorously urging the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill. I move that the memorial lie on the table, and that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of the Baptist Young People's Union, the Epworth League, and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, of Wahpeton, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of members of the Methodist churches of Bismarck and Cando, and of members of the Baptist Church of Grafton, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHILTON presented the petition of H. Bradford and sundry other citizens of Texas, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the issuance of internal-revenue special-tax stamps to sell intoxicating liquors in territory where prohibition prevails under State local-option laws; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

THE RAMIE INDUSTRY.

Mr. GEAR. I ask that Senate Document No. 47 and Senate Document No. 57, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, being a statement of S. H. Slaught in behalf of an appropriation to promote the ramie industry, be reprinted, together with certain matter which I will furnish later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such testimony as may be taken by the committee or its subcommittees in connection with appropriation bills, and to have the same printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 1517 on the so-called Loud bill, including the minority report, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print for distribution by the Department of State 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations for 1895 and 1896, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the "Review of the World's Commerce," etc., being part of said Commercial Relations.

ARBOR DAY.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. PROCTOR on the 27th ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 12,000 additional copies of Arbor Day: Its History and Observance; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

FOREIGN RELATIONS, 1896.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by himself on the 8th ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in red cloth 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3734) for the relief of St. John's Catholic Church at Summersville, Nicholas County, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT subsequently, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HOAR this day, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

A. H. HERR.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to report the amount found due A. H. Herr, March 16, 1894, by his predecessor for the rent of his property while the same was in the occupancy of the Quartermaster's Department, and to inform the Senate whether the settlement was made by the Secretary of War under the authority vested in him by section 219 of the Revised Statutes, "to fix and make" the rental to be allowed in cases where the parties had not agreed upon the compensation to be paid; also, whether the amount allowed was the same as was allowed by the officers in charge of the property, and is, in his opinion, a reasonable and just allowance.

VICTOR H. M'CORD.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, requested to furnish for the use of the Senate copies of all papers, correspondence, diplomatic or otherwise, on file in the State Department in connection with the arrest and imprisonment at Arequipa, Peru, of Victor H. MacCord, a citizen of Linesville, Crawford County, Pa., in June, 1895, he being at the same time consular agent of the United States in Peru, if any have been received by the State Department since the adoption by the Senate of the resolution of May 20, 1896, requesting the President to continue the investigation and efforts theretofore made by the United States in the matter of the claim of Victor Hugo MacCord, a citizen of the United States, against the Government of Peru, to the end that such an adjustment of said claim might be made as might be warranted by the facts in the case and by the law applicable thereto.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the naval appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. TELLER, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

THE BUBONIC PLAGUE.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 200) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States. It is a measure to prevent the approach of the bubonic plague.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution indicated? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be read at length.

The Secretary read the joint resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine with amendments, in line 6, after the word "disease," to insert "from a foreign port or place;" in line 11, after "person," to insert "from a foreign port or place;" and in line 12, after "entry," to insert "or enter;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas in view of the alarming nature and spread of the bubonic plague, now prevalent in India and adjacent countries, and in view of the danger of this scourge being brought to the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That at any port or place in the United States where the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem it necessary for the prevention of the introduction of contagious or infectious disease from a foreign port or place, that incoming vessels, vehicles, or persons should be inspected by a national quarantine officer, such officer shall be designated or appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury on recommendation of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, and at any such port or place no vessel, vehicle, or person from a foreign port or place shall be admitted to entry or enter without the certificate of said officer that the United States quarantine regulations have been complied with.

Mr. ELKINS. A similar joint resolution to the one just read has passed the House. I ask the Senate to substitute the joint resolution that passed the House for this, and that the House joint resolution be put upon its passage. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. How about the amendments?

Mr. GALLINGER. There are amendments to the pending joint resolution.

Mr. ELKINS. The House joint resolution has the amendments in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House joint resolution can not have the amendments in it, inasmuch as the Senate committee proposed to amend the House joint resolution.

Mr. ELKINS. It has the amendments in it. I copied one from the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. I must insist that the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine shall be incorporated in the House joint resolution unless they are already there.

Mr. ELKINS. They are there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not understand how that can be the case. They may have been interlined.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The House joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, as follows:

Whereas in view of the alarming nature and spread of the bubonic plague, now prevalent in India and adjacent countries, and in view of the danger of this scourge being brought to the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That at any port or place in the United States where the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem it necessary for the prevention of the introduction of contagious or infectious disease from a foreign port or place that incoming vessels, vehicles, or persons should be inspected by a national quarantine officer, such officer shall be designated or appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, on recommendation of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service; and at any such port or place no vessel, vehicle, or person from a foreign port or place shall be admitted to entry or enter without the certificate of said officer that the United States quarantine regulations have been complied with.

Mr. ELKINS. That is the same as the Senate joint resolution, and I ask for its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate joint resolution 200 will be postponed indefinitely.

ESTABLISHMENT OF LIGHT-HOUSES, ETC.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That light-houses and other aids to navigation be established and erected as hereinafter set forth, to wit:

Completing the removal of Cape San Blas light station, Florida, to Blacks Island.

Establishing a light station at or near St. Joseph Point, in St. Joseph Bay, west coast of Florida.

Establishing range lights to mark the channel over the bar, entrance to Choctawhatchee Bay.

Repairing wharf and buildings of the depot at Key West, Fla.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YAZOO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. WALTHALL. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "cases," to insert "hereafter arising."

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HILL, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. CLARK were appointed.

DISTRICT BENEFICIARY ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the bill has been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on the District of Columbia, after having passed the other House.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me there ought to be a provision in the bill retaining the right to repeal or change this act of incorporation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator that the bill is in exact conformity to the laws that have passed in ten or twelve of the States and which are now on their statute books. It simply puts these fraternal organizations under the law, but exempts them from certain of the rigid provisions relating to old-line life insurance companies.

Mr. MILLS. We have adopted something of a rule here that in the case of acts of incorporation we shall retain the right to amend, alter, or repeal.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that provision.

Mr. MILLS. Is that in the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is not; but I have no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "society," to insert "order;" in line 14, after the word "under," to strike out "70 years" and insert "the age of expectancy from the time of entering;" in line 16, after the word "laws," to insert:

Any such association having a reserve, emergency, or benefit fund may, in addition to the benefits hereinbefore named, pay withdrawal benefits, not exceeding the contributions of such member, to a member unable or unwilling to continue membership, provided such membership shall continue not less than three successive years. Such association may also, after ten years of membership, apply its funds and accumulations as its laws provide, or the association and members agree.

In line 29, before the word "dues," to strike out "or;" in the same line, after the word "dues," to insert "and other payments;" in the same line, after the word "members," to insert "or otherwise;" and in line 36, after the word "therein," to insert:

Provided, however, That the fact that any such association has outstanding agreements with its members for the payment of benefits other than those hereinbefore specified, if it is making no new contracts of that character and is retiring those already existing, shall not exclude such association from the operation of this act.

So as to make the section read:

That a fraternal beneficiary association is hereby declared to be a corporation, society, order, or voluntary association, formed or organized and carried on for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit, having a lodge system, with ritualistic form of work and representative form of government, making provision for the payment of benefits in case of death. Each such association may make provision for the payment of benefits in case of sickness, temporary or permanent physical disability, either as the result of disease, accident, or old age: Provided, That the period in life at which payment of physical disability benefits on account of old age commences shall not be under the age of expectancy from the time of entering, subject to their compliance with its laws. Any such association may create and maintain a reserve, emergency, or benefit fund in accordance with its laws. Any such association having a reserve, emergency, or benefit fund may, in addition to the benefits hereinbefore named, pay withdrawal benefits, not exceeding the contributions of such member, to a member unable or unwilling to continue membership, provided such membership shall continue not less than three successive years. Such association may also, after ten years of membership, apply its funds and accumulations as its laws provide, or the association and members agree. The fund from which the payment of such benefits shall be made, and the fund from which the expenses of such association shall be defrayed, shall be derived from assessments, dues, and other payments collected from its members or otherwise. Payment of death benefits shall be to the families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband, or affianced wife of, or to persons dependent upon the member. Such associations shall be governed by this act, and shall be exempt from the provisions of insurance laws of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, and no law hereafter passed shall apply to them unless they be expressly designated therein: Provided, however, That the fact that any such association has outstanding agreements with its members for the payment of benefits other than those hereinbefore specified, if it is making no new contracts of that character and is retiring those already existing, shall not exclude such association from the operation of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 14 I desire to have the words "seventy years" remain, and the word "or" inserted afterwards; so as to read:

Seventy years or the age of expectancy from the time of entering.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "State" to insert "country;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That all such associations coming within the description as set forth in section 1 of this act, organized under the laws of the United States relating to said District, or any State, country, province, or Territory, and now doing business in said District, may continue such business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 3, after the word "State," to insert "country," and in line 7, after the word "its," to strike out "constitution and;" in line 12, after the the word "State," to insert "country;" in line 14, after the word "State," to insert "country;" in line 15, after the word "State," to insert "country;" so as to read:

That any such association coming within the description as set forth in section 1 of this act, organized under the law of any State, country, province, or Territory, and not now doing business in said District, shall be admitted to do business within said District when it shall have filed with the assessor a duly certified copy of its charter and articles of association, and a copy of its laws, certified to by its secretary or corresponding officer, together with an appointment of the assessor of said District as the person upon whom process may be served as hereinafter provided: Provided, That such association shall be shown to be authorized to do business in the State, country, province, or Territory in which it is incorporated or organized, in case the laws of such State, country, province, or Territory shall provide for such authorization; and in case the laws of such State, country, province, or Territor do not provide for any formal authorization to do business on the part of any such association, then such association shall be shown to be conducting its business in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 53, after the word "State," to insert "country;" so as to read:

Twenty-second. If organized under the laws of any State, country, province, or Territory, state such fact and the date of organization, giving chapter and year, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, to strike out the following paragraph after line 61:

The assessor is authorized and empowered to address any additional inquiries to any such association in relation to its doings or condition, or to any other matter connected with its transactions relative to the business contemplated by this act, and such officers of such association as the assessor may require shall promptly reply in writing, under oath, to all such inquiries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 12, after the word "said," to strike out "institution" and insert "association;" so as to read:

Such persons shall make, sign, and acknowledge before any officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds in this District, and file in the office of recorder of deeds of said District a certificate or declaration in writing, to be recorded in a book kept for that purpose and open to public inspection in which shall be stated the name or title by which said association shall be known to law, the mode and manner in which the corporate powers granted by this act are to be exercised.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 47, after the word "laws," to insert "and the provisions of this act," and in line 49, after the word "said," to strike out "society" and insert "association;" so as to read:

And they and their successors by their corporate name shall in law be capable of creating, maintaining, and disbursing a reserve or emergency fund in accordance with its laws and the provisions of this act, and of taking, receiving, purchasing, and holding real and personal estate necessary for the purpose of said association, and may let, place out at interest, or sell and convey the same as may seem most beneficial for said association.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 2, after the word "beneficiary," to strike out "society, order, or;" in line 3, after the word "of," to strike out "any;" in line 3, after the word "such," to strike out "society, order, or;" in line 4, after the word "or," to insert "which;" in line 6, after the word "said," to strike out "society, order, or;" in line 13, after the word "present," to strike out "and voting" and insert "vote;" and in line 14, after the word "the," to strike out "officer" and insert "officers;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. That any subordinate body of any fraternal beneficiary association incorporated under the provisions of this act, or of such association now doing business or which may hereafter be admitted to do business in this District under this act, where the laws of the governing body of said association do not prohibit the incorporation of their subordinate bodies, may become a body corporate in the manner following: At some regular meeting of such subordinate body a resolution, expressing the desire of such subordinate body to be incorporated and directing its officers to perfect such incorporation, shall be submitted to a vote of the members present, and if two-thirds of the members present vote therefor, the president and secretary of such subordinate body, or the officers holding relative offices therein, shall prepare articles of association under their hands and the seal of such subordinate body, setting forth, first, the number of members of such subordinate body then in good standing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 30, after the word

"therewith," to strike out "therein;" in line 37, after the word "respective," to strike out "society, order, or;" in line 38, after the word "such," to strike out "society, order, or;" and in line 39, after the word "is," to strike out "incorporated" and insert "known;" so as to read:

On the execution of said articles of association, and before the filing thereof with the recorder, the secretary of such subordinate body shall annex thereto his affidavit, stating that he is a member in good standing in such subordinate body and occupies the position of secretary, or the office corresponding therewith, and that the resolution, a copy of which shall be set forth at length, was regularly passed at a regular meeting of said subordinate body and received the vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting, and that to the best of his knowledge and belief the statements made in the articles of association are true, and that such subordinate body is organized and acting under the laws of its respective association, giving the name by which such association is known.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 3, after the word "beneficiary," to insert "prior to or at the time of becoming a member of the association;" so as to read:

SEC. 10. That no contract with any such association shall be valid when there is a contract, agreement, or understanding between the member and the beneficiary prior to or at the time of becoming a member of the association that the beneficiary, or any person for him, shall pay such member's assessments and dues, or either of them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 4, after the word "attachment," to strike out "by trustee, garnishee," and insert "garnishment;" so as to read:

SEC. 11. That the money or other benefit, charity, relief, or aid to be paid, provided, or rendered by any association authorized to do business under this act shall not be liable to attachment, garnishment, or other process, and shall not be seized, taken, appropriated, or applied by any legal or equitable process, or by operation of law, to pay any debt or liability of a certificate holder or of any beneficiary named in a certificate, or any person who may have any right thereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, line 8, after the word "State," to insert "country;" and in line 10, after the word "State," to insert "country;" so as to read:

That any such association organized under the laws of said District may provide for the meetings of its legislative or governing body in any State, country, Province, or Territory wherein such association shall have subordinate bodies, and all business transacted at such meetings shall be valid in all respects as if such meetings were held within said District; and where the laws of any such association provide for the election of its officers by votes to be cast in its subordinate bodies, the votes so cast in its subordinate bodies in any State, country, Province, or Territory shall be valid as if cast within said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, at the end of the section, to insert:

To "transact business" or "doing business" under this act means the writing of applications and the soliciting of new members, so far as the penalty of the act applies thereto. It shall not be unlawful for any organization under section 1 to continue the operation of its lodges or branches except in securing new members.

So as to read:

That any person who shall act within said District as an officer, agent, or otherwise for any association which shall have failed, neglected, or refused to comply with, or shall have violated, any of the provisions of this act, or shall have failed or neglected to procure from the assessor a proper certificate of authority to transact business as provided for by this act, shall be subject to the penalty provided in the last preceding section for the misdemeanor therein specified. To "transact business" or "doing business" under this act means the writing of applications and the soliciting of new members, so far as the penalty of the act applies thereto. It shall not be unlawful for any organization under section 1 to continue the operation of its lodges or branches except in securing new members.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 2, after the word "society," to insert "order;" in line 5, after the word "beneficiary," to strike out "societies, orders, or;" in line 11, after the word "corporation," to insert "or department or branch of the United States Government;" so as to read:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to any corporation, society, order, or association carrying on the business of life, health, casualty, or accident insurance for profit or gain, and shall only apply to fraternal beneficiary associations as defined by section 1; and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect any grand or subordinate lodge or branch of any such fraternal beneficiary societies, order, or association which limits its certificate holders to a particular religious denomination or to the employees of a particular town or city, designated firm, business house, or corporation, or Department or branch of the United States Government, nor the grand or subordinate lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, nor any grand, subordinate lodge, or other body of Free and Accepted Masons, nor the grand or any subordinate lodge of the Knights of Pythias, or similar orders, associations, or societies that do not have as their principal object the issuance of benefit certificates of membership in case of death or the payment of sick, funeral, or death benefits exceeding in amount $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 5, after the word "incorporated," to strike out "body" and insert "fraternal beneficiary association;" so as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall not extend to nor apply to any association or individual who shall, in the certificate filed with the recorder of deeds, use or specify a name or style the same as that of any previously existing incorporated fraternal beneficiary association in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "beneficiary" and inserting "beneficial."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a few verbal amendments of the same character to come in. I move, in section 1, line 3, to strike out the word "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 4, line 12, I move to strike out "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, line 56, I move to strike out the word "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 7, line 3, I move to strike out "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I also move in the same section, line 8, before the word "association," to strike out "beneficiary society, order, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, line 15, I move to strike out the first word in the line, "and," and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 19 of the same section, I move to strike out "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, lines 23 and 24, I move to strike out "society, order, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, line 27, I move to strike out the words "society, order, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, line 29, I move to strike out "order, or society."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, line 31, I move to strike out "society, order, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 33 of the same section I move to strike out "beneficiary society" and insert "beneficial association."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 8, line 2, I move to strike out "beneficiary society" and insert "beneficial association."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 9, lines 1 and 2, I move to strike out "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 16, line 4, I move to strike out "beneficiary" and insert "beneficial."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the same section, line 8, I move to strike out "order, or association" and insert "orders, or associations."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Now, I wish the Senator would put in a provision retaining the right to amend, alter, or repeal the charter by Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has an amendment prepared which he will suggest.

Mr. DAVIS. At the end of the bill I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That all rights, franchises, and privileges granted by this act shall be subject to amendment or repeal by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill regulating beneficial associations in the District of Columbia."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

DEATH OF DR. RICARDO RUIZ.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

o the Senate:

I herewith transmit a report of the Secretary of State upon a resolution of the Senate relating to the arrest, imprisonment, and death of Dr. Ricardo Ruiz in the jail of Guanabacoa, on the Island of Cuba. Agreeing with the suggestion of the Secretary, I have not thought it compatible with the public interest that the correspondence referred to in the resolution should be communicated pending the public and exhaustive investigation about to be instituted.

Though it seems to be clear that the consul-general should have profes sional aid in such investigation, that matter, together with the selection of the particular persons to act with him, properly devolves upon my successor in office.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 2, 1897.

M. A. CHEEK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to the resolution of the Senate of February 24, 1897, a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the claim of M. A. Cheek against the Siamese Government, with accompanying papers.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 2, 1897.

FORFEITED DOMESTIC OPIUM.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
STEPHEN M. WHITE,
O. H. PLATT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. E. PAYNE,
WALTER EVANS,
BENTON McMILLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. WASHINGTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 10,000 copies of the Report of Hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, Fifty-fourth Congress; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks;

A bill (H. R. 7423) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 205) to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 10,000 copies of the Report of Hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, Fifty-fourth Congress; 8,000 copies to be for the use of the House and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask at this time that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield for a matter which will not bring up discussion.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely want to make a statement. I do not desire to interfere with the progress of the appropriation bill, but I desire to state that immediately after the appropriation bill now before the Senate is disposed of I shall move to take up House bill 1090 to amend the act to regulate commerce. I call the attention of the Senate to it, because I very much desire to have that bill taken up and considered, but I do not desire to displace any appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not insist upon that.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say one word, if the Senator will allow me to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have my amendment to the antiscalping bill read.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not asking that anything be read at this time. I simply want to say that the bill to which I refer is a very important one. I undertake to say that there is no bill before the Senate at this minute, outside of the appropriation bills, which is, in the estimation of the great body of the people, more important than the one I have indicated.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What bill is it?

Mr. CULLOM. The bill known as the antiscalping bill. I will designate it in that way.

Mr. ALLEN. That is altogether too important a bill to take up and consider at this Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. I think, if the Senate will allow the bill to be taken up, we can probably dispose of it inside of an hour.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no measure more important to the people of this country than the amendment I have offered; and I ask to have it read.

Mr. CULLOM. I have said all I desire to say, but I give notice that I will make the motion as soon as the appropriation bills are disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let my amendment be read.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object to the reading of the amendment. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must state that the regular order is the bill taken up on motion of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PLATT. That is the bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate by vote of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. GEAR. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me a moment for morning business.

Mr. PLATT. I can not yield for the moment. I will presently.

Mr. President, I am just as anxious to obtain consideration for certain bills which I think are important as are other Senators who clamor for recognition and who ask the Committee on Appropriations to yield to them. I think we ought to have some understanding about this matter, either that we shall have a time fixed wherein House bills can be taken up and acted upon, or that no House bills shall be taken up and acted upon.

I do not think it is fair to engage the attention of the Senate simply because you can catch the eye of the Chair, and bring long bills here and take the time of the Senate, when other bills which are just as important get no opportunity for consideration. I am going to insist upon one of two things, that we shall either have some time set apart when we can consider the House bills which ought to be considered, or I am going to object to them all.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to make a request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate any request the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will indicate. The Chair recognizes Senators in the order in which the Chair is addressed, and the Senator from Connecticut first addressed the Chair.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock this afternoon we may consider House bills on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator means unobjected cases.

Mr. ALLEN. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. I object to that.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have my request submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Connecticut that at 3 o'clock this afternoon the Calendar of House bills be called. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

Mr. PLATT. I am requested by various Senators to say unobjected cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FAULKNER. I simply desire to say that I shall object to that request until after the two remaining appropriation bills have been passed. As soon as they shall have been passed—which I hope may be by 3 o'clock, if we continue with the fortifications bill now before us, and follow that with the deficiency bill—I think we shall have plenty of time to go to the Calendar of unobjected House bills. Personally, I am earnestly in favor of the request of the Senator, but I shall object to any unanimous consent being granted until the appropriation bills are put into conference.

Mr. PLATT. But, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] got unanimous consent of the Senate that at 1 o'clock a bill of his might be taken up, and here comes the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and gives notice that as soon as the fortifications appropriation bill is passed he will move to take up his bill. While I am in favor of his bill and want it to pass, I do not think that consent should be given now. It is utterly indifferent to me what is done so that we all have the same privileges here with regard to House bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say a word. I am perfectly willing that the unobjected cases, the bills which are not opposed, shall pass; but I am unwilling that this session shall go by without any effort, and that bills shall be permitted to fail which are much more important than the bills to which there is no objection, which are generally little bills of no particular consequence to the country one way or another.

Mr. PLATT. I have several bills here of a public character and of great public interest; I do not think there will be any objection to them; but we can not get an opportunity to have them considered.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely desire to say that while I do not intend to interfere with appropriation bills, I do intend, if I can get the floor, to move to take up the bill to which I have referred at some future time.

Mr. PLATT. That is right. I will withdraw my request, Mr. President, and submit it in this form, that as soon as the two appropriation bills still unconsidered are disposed of by the Senate, we shall set apart a time for the consideration of unobjected House bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Connecticut that as soon as the two remaining appropriation bills have been disposed of, the unobjected cases upon the Calendar may be taken up as indicated.

Mr. FRYE. Not to interfere with conference reports.

Mr. PLATT. Of course not; they can not do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. NELSON. If the bankruptcy bill may be included in that consent for consideration, I will agree so far as I am concerned; otherwise I shall not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator to object?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator that we probably can get through with the unobjected House bills in from an hour to two hours, and the adoption of that course would facilitate the taking up of the bankruptcy bill as the unfinished business.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. On that statement, I do not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut, and it is agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no question, then, that the understanding applies only to unobjected House bills upon the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope we shall now proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the resolution I offered Saturday morning may be laid before the Senate, that I may ask to have it adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution referred to by the Senator from Kansas, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER February 27, 1897, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to report to the Senate during the present session of Congress what action the said committee has taken in the matter of the investigation under the resolution adopted at the last session of Congress directing an investigation of bond sales by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HILL. What is the resolution, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will again be read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I regret to say that the chairman of the subcommittee on that subject, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], is ill and not able to be present. Therefore, I doubt whether it will be possible for the committee to make any report at this session.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, is the resolution before the Senate by unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Kansas comes over as part of the morning business, and was laid before the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. How did it happen to get here at this particular time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asked that it might be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a matter of public notoriety with which everyone is familiar as to just what the Committee on Finance has done with that resolution, which was offered originally by the Senator from Kansas. A subcommittee of the Committee on Finance was appointed, of which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was chairman. That committee investigated the subject at great length, and the testimony taken by the committee is in print. The subcommittee, however, up to this time, has not agreed upon a report, and in the absence of the Senator from Tennessee, it will probably be impossible for that subcommittee to report at this session, and I may add his absence under circumstances which I am sure every Senator regrets.

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator from Rhode Island will pardon me a moment, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who is now present had charge of the examination during the sessions of that subcommittee, and I think that possibly he can make a statement before the Senate which will be entirely satisfactory to me and to the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me there is no necessity for passing any formal resolution upon the subject. The facts are very well known.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not care about a report, but I should like a statement of the facts.

Mr. BATE. I simply desire to say in connection with one thing which has been said as to the absence of my colleague [Mr. HARRIS], that he is sick and utterly unable to be here, nor do I know when he will be able to be here.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope we shall now proceed with the regular order.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to make a brief statement in regard to this matter?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance appointed a subcommittee consisting of five Senators, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was chairman of that subcommittee. After having previously examined the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in Washington, the subcommittee proceeded to New York and examined Mr. Pierpont Morgan and others in that city. That testimony has been published; it is in a public document and accessible to every Senator. The document contains a full account and report of all the proceedings.

The Committee on Finance were ordered to inquire as to the disposition of the bonds which were purchased by certain persons in the city of New York, to whom they were sold, and what profit was made. We endeavored to comply with the instructions of the Senate, and put the necessary questions to Mr. Morgan and Mr. Belmont, representing the purchasing syndicate, as to the profit they had made and the persons to whom they had sold those bonds. They declined to answer those questions, and we were unable to force an answer, the statute in regard to recalcitrant witnesses before Congressional committees applying alone to the District of Columbia, and, as we were conducting the examination in New York, there was no remedy left for us except to return and report the refusal of those witnesses to answer those questions, one of the questions being clearly legitimate and within the province of the Senate to put.

The subcommittee returned to Washington City, reported to the full committee, and the question as to what should be done in regard to the refusal of those witnesses to answer is now pending. The Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the subcommittee, appointed the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and myself members of a subcommittee to draw up a report, but it was manifestly impossible to draw anything like a complete report or a fair report until the matter was disposed of as to whether these men should be made to answer those questions or not.

The only course open to us in the event of their refusal—and they did refuse—was to pursue the same course which the committee did in regard to the sugar investigation, report a refusal to the Senate, and then make a report by the Senate to the district attorney of the District of Columbia, who is required by law to place the facts before the grand jury, and, if an indictment is then found, criminal proceedings can be had under the statute in force in this District. But as to what the Senate committee has done, a full and complete report is found in the document to which I refer.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to ask the Senator why those witnesses were not reported to the Senate and arraigned at the bar of the Senate?

Mr. VEST. We reported to the Finance Committee and asked for the action of the majority of the full committee upon that subject.

Mr. ALLEN. There can be no question of the power of the Senate to arraign those parties for contempt and punish them for contempt.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, that is a question about which very good lawyers differ. I myself think the Senate has that right, but very good lawyers think not, because there is a specific statute on the subject, to which I have referred, and under which the Senate has heretofore proceeded.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senate has exercised that power heretofore.

Mr. VEST. The Senate has never exercised the power since I have been here of calling witnesses before the bar of the Senate. The House of Representatives did that in the Kilbourn case, and imprisoned Kilbourn, and it cost us about $75,000 to pay for that little experiment.

Mr. ALLEN. The power of arraignment is incident to the power to investigate.

Mr. VEST. That is a question. We have a statute, and we proceeded under it in the sugar investigation—the Senator from Nebraska was a member of that committee—and when witnesses in that case refused to answer, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] reported the facts to the Senate, and the Senate provided that the facts should be certified to the district attorney of this District. That was done; and then, under the statute, he laid this report before the grand jury, indictments were found, one of the defendants has been convicted, and the proceedings against the others are now pending.

Mr. STEWART. Did the committee take into consideration the propriety of summoning those witnesses to Washington and putting the questions here?

Mr. VEST. We did, and I advocated that course. However, I shall not state what occurred in committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. So long as the Senator from Missouri has made a partial statement of what the subcommittee stated to the full committee, I think he ought to say, in justice to the full committee, that the subcommittee stated that they were not able to agree upon any recommendation as to what course should be taken.

Mr. VEST. That is true. The subcommittee was divided in opinion. Some of us were of opinion that those witnesses should be brought to Washington City and indicted under this statute if they refused to answer. Other members of the subcommittee, possibly a majority, thought that the matter ought to be dropped.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Right in the same connection, I desire to ask whether it is true that all other questions were fully answered except those in regard to what had occurred in the disposition of the bonds?

Mr. VEST. That question was the salient point in the whole case. When we came to the question, "What profit have you made?"—I believe I put the question to Mr. Belmont and Mr. Morgan—"What profit have you made upon the sale of those bonds?" they both peremptorily declined to answer. I then put the other questions directed to be put by the Senate, "To whom did you sell those bonds?" and they replied, "We decline to answer."

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Missouri has not answered my question except inferentially.

Mr. VEST. The other questions were answered.

Mr. HILL. All the other portions of inquiries were answered?

Mr. VEST. All the other portions of the inquiry were answered, and the printed document shows the questions and the replies.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator, I think, is mistaken as to the number of copies of this statement or partial report which have been printed. I tried to get a copy at the document room, and was informed that there were none there. I finally sent to the Committee on Finance, and was there informed that but a few copies had been printed, and those for the use of the committee.

Mr. VEST. We ordered the usual number printed, and I supposed they had been printed.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask unanimous consent that the usual number of copies of this report be printed for the use of the Senate as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no report; only the testimony.

Mr. PEFFER. Whatever it is.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Missouri indulge me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I was one of the few members of the Senate who opposed this investigation. I did not believe then that it would be productive of any beneficial or other results. I believed that it would result substantially as it has resulted, in a mere farce.

I recollect in the discussion had upon that question that I made the statement that it was not within the power of this committee to compel witnesses to disclose any private transactions in regard to the disposition of the bonds after they had purchased them from the Government. Congress had a perfect right to investigate everything concerning the bond sale, the advertisements, the negotiations; everything that led up to it; but when the bonds were sold and the sale itself had been consummated, and parties had purchased the bonds and they had become their private property, neither Congress nor a legislative committee had any power under the Constitution or laws of our country to inquire into the private affairs of a citizen.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend from New York permit me to put one question to him?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. VEST. Does he not think the Congress of the United States, or either branch of it, has the right to inquire of men who have purchased the bonds of the Government whether they have disposed of them to officials of the Government or to national banks, which are the fiduciary agencies of the Government?

Mr. HILL. If there is any charge against any official of the Government, involving a Department of the Government, that is an entirely different thing; but it was contended here—and I disputed the proposition in several hours' debate—that you could inquire into the disposition of bonds after they were sold, there being no charge against any official, because that was stricken out of the resolution itself before the debate was closed, and it was a mere fishing investigation from the beginning to the end.

Mr. President, this investigation closed about last August or September, in ample time to bring the witnesses here, in ample time to summon them to the bar of this Senate, in ample time to proceed against them in any way possible, if there had been any desire to do so.

I do not desire to cast any reflection upon the committee. The committee have accepted the trust reposed in them, and were, of course, obliged to proceed under the resolution as best they could. I simply now, not having intended to allude to it before, wish to say that I thought at the time the resolution was pending that it was too bread. I thought then the resolution was simply a waste of time; that it would be a mere farce; that nothing would be disclosed against any official of the Government, nothing would be disclosed against any of the banks of the country, and nothing would be disclosed against the men who have purchased the bonds. There was not a scintilla of evidence to invalidate the bond sale or to cast suspicion in any manner whatever upon it.

The only question now left is, Have the committee a right to ask as to the purchase of the bonds, to whom they were sold, to what banks, to what institutions, to what widows or orphans, or anybody else? That, I say, they can not do. They have no constitutional power to inquire, and I state that my belief is that the committee are pretty well satisfied that they had no such power; and this investigation talked of so loudly at the time it was ordered has resulted, as have all such investigations undertaken by Congress without authority in the past, in a mere farce.

Mr. PERKINS. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed to further debate, the Chair, under the vote of the Senate, will lay before the Senate the regular order, which is House bill 10288.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I take the floor on the regular order, then, Mr. President.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I have the floor on the pending order.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to move that the first formal reading of the fortifications appropriation bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments proposed by the committee be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, in the absence of objection, that that will be taken as the order of the Senate. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. STEWART. Sixty-two millions of bonds were sold at private sale for 4½ per cent premium at a time when there had been no like bonds ever sold for a premium of less than 1 per cent for each year they had to run. These bonds had thirty years to run. No United States 4 per cent bonds had ever before been sold for less than 1 per cent for each year that would elapse before they became due. The bond sale to which the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] refers was a private sale, and it has been admitted on all hands that there was a large profit in the transaction to somebody. I believe it is conceded that there was at least $10,000,000 realized. The Senate appointed a committee to investigate this transaction, which was not a private transaction, for it affected the Government of the United States and the administration of the law. That committee went to New York and called before it Mr. Morgan and Mr. Belmont. I was present at the hearing. Those gentlemen refused peremptorily to make any disclosures which would show the profit or to whom the money was paid. Although the Senate had ordered this investigation, they refused to answer.

I simply rose to say that I regret that the Committee on Finance, when the matter was reported to that committee, did not take such action as would vindicate the authority of the Senate. I regret that they did not call those witnesses to Washington, and let them refuse to testify here, and thus give the Senate an opportunity to carry out its purpose. Of course if the Senate will allow itself to be defied in that manner, all investigations will become a farce.

I regret that such a precedent should be established in this case. It seems to me it is lowering the dignity and authority of the Senate to allow men, because they are rich and powerful, to defy the order of the Senate and refuse to testify, when we are in the habit of making other men who have not that influence submit to examination here. It is very unfortunate that we should make an exception in the case of the rich and powerful, and that it should be urged against the Senate every time an investigation is proposed. The precedent is a bad one and puts the Senate in a bad light.

I regret that the Finance Committee did not find time in the long space that has elapsed to take proper action to put the Senate in its proper position and let the Senate judge whether those men should answer or not, and let it decide deliberately. Let us maintain this power. If we do not have the power, let the Senate so decide; but to order an investigation and then allow the power of the Senate to be defied, it seems to me, is setting a bad example; it is a bad precedent, and I am sorry for it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that while I do not often agree with the Senator from Nevada, I entirely concur in every word he has said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for action on the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "money," to strike out "except that already authorized;" and in line 5, after the word "fortifications," to insert "except that already authorized;" so as to make the clause read:

That prior to any expenditure of money for the construction of necessary buildings connected with the new fortifications, except that already authorized, the Secretary of War shall report to Congress on or before December 6, 1897, the most practicable and economical plan for the care and preservation of the fortifications and their armament, said plans to be based upon the authorized strength of the artillery force of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "forty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase or manufacture of carriages for coast-defense guns of 8, 10, and 12 inch calibers, $446,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no contract for oil-tempered and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns and mortars shall be made at a price exceeding 22 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 8, to increase the appropriation for powders and projectiles, for a reserved supply for armament of fortifications, from $169,868 to $269,868.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 2, to increase the appropriation for coast-defense guns of 8, 10, and 12 inch caliber manufactured by contract under the provisions of the fortifications acts of August 18, 1890, and February 24, 1891, from $156,184 to $500,000.

Mr. QUAY. That ought to be $600,000, as the Senator from California knows.

Mr. PERKINS. I will accept, on behalf of the committee, $600,000 instead of $500,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, to insert "six hundred thousand dollars" in lieu of "five hundred thousand dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 7, to insert:

For the purchase of machine guns of approved musket caliber, of American manufacture, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 20, to increase the appropriation for the necessary expenses of officers while temporarily employed on ordnance duties at the proving ground, Sandy Hook, New Jersey, and the compensation of draftsmen while employed in the Army Ordnance Bureau on ordnance construction, from $8,000 to $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks upon this general subject.

The Congress of the United States for the last ten or twelve years has been what may be called liberal; that is to say, it has been just and enterprising in the matter of fortifications and their armament. Twenty-six million dollars have been appropriated, about $12,000,000 of which have gone to guns and gun carriages, and yet, notwithstanding that, not one single artillery soldier has been added to the Army.

We have put in one place, for example, guns and carriages costing several hundred thousand dollars. The two big 12-inch rifles are lifted by hydraulic apparatus, and there is not an artillery soldier at Sandy Hook, and not only no one to operate the guns, but there is no one to keep the rust from this costly apparatus.

We are talking a great deal about war nowadays; talking lightly, as if we could strike out at any minute. It is said, "Have we not nine or ten millions of men capable of bearing arms?" Of course we have. But suppose you march a hundred thousand of them down on the beach; of what use would they be? They could not work the guns; they would probably spoil them. Such a general levy of the militia would be what Wellington called simply meat for cannon.

We have stations all around the coast liable to be attacked. Guns are lying in some places all ready to be mounted. We have nobody to guard them—no garrison—for the artillery force is limited. There are new batteries being constructed at Portland, Me. I believe there is a company there. I believe there is one company in Portsmouth. At Grover Cliff, on the north side of Boston Harbor, work is going on, but there are no soldiers there. At the western end of Long Island Sound, in the Fort Schuyler and the region thereabout, there are five different posts with but a company each; yet there are to be great batteries there.

At Sandy Hook, now called Fort Hancock, many guns are lying there waiting to be tested. There are the two splendid 12-inch rifles of which I have spoken, already mounted, and 16 mortars, in groups of four, according to the plan, in the great mortar pit. Nobody is being taught how to use them, and nobody is there to protect them. At Finns Point and Fort Delaware—this is to provide for the defense of Philadelphia—there are no troops, I think.

At Wilmington, N. C., works are going on. The guns are lying at Sandy Hook, waiting to go down to Wilmington. At Charleston, S. C., the work of building the fortifications is going on rapidly. They are working hard. At Savannah, Ga., they are working. I believe there are some guns there, but nothing is being done with them. At Fort Clinch there is no garrison, and nothing is going on at all. In Mobile, Ala., they are working day and night. The guns are ready, but there are no soldiers to learn how to work or even guard them. At Galveston, Tex., somewhat the same condition prevails. At San Diego, Cal., work is going on. There are no guns there yet, but there will be before long.

At Lime Point, San Francisco, they are working on both sides of the Golden Gate. Guns are waiting, but there are no artillery troops at that point. There are some at Fort Alcatraz. At Puget Sound, Washington, guns are waiting to be mounted. They have three posts there, but no artillery soldiers. Wilsons Point, Admiralty Head, and Marrowstone Point are each to have two batteries.

In short, while the work of building fortifications and of building costly and splendid guns with their heavy carriages is being very handsomely provided for, the Army is unable to have men to guard or drill.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Our Army consists of 25,000 men?

Mr. HAWLEY. Nominally 25,000 men.

Mr. STEWART. Where are they located?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that I have information. I am afraid I have mislaid, very much to my disgust, the paper which gives the station of every single artilleryman in the country. They are distributed at forts where there are guns. It is a small number comparatively. There are, perhaps, 10,000 or 12,000 infantry out of the whole number who are what may be called mobile forces. There is no use putting infantry at these places unless you convert them into artillerymen, and it is just as well to have artillerymen enlisted in the first place. In short, the General of the Army, the Chief of Ordnance, the Secretary of War, and all familiar with such matters, desire an addition to the artillery force. To work the modern high-powered gun is a trade.

Mr. STEWART. Are they not enlisting men now? Do they not enlist artillerymen?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are enlisting from time to time to fill vacancies, but are not allowed to go above the total allowed to four regiments. They actually need two additional regiments, that is, 1,610 men. I do not make any motion to increase the Army, though we have a bill here for that purpose. I have been unable to get consideration for it. We have but slowly won friendship for it.

Mr. STEWART. Why would not an amendment not increasing the Army, but allowing an increase of artillerymen, answer the purpose? Would not that do instead of enlisting infantry men?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the infantry are needed for various posts where they are stationed. That is the judgment of the men who study these questions much more than we do in the Senate.

But I have done what I proposed to do. I have called attention to the lamentably undefended condition of our coasts in general. The big lift at Sandy Hook gives almost as much trouble and requires as much skill as is needed to run a goodly steamboat.

If the Senators desire to pursue this subject further, let them examine into it, and they will see in what an utterly lamentable condition we are under present legislation, with splendid guns and fortifications, but no skilled men to operate them, open to attack at ten or twenty places, without even a little artillery company of forty.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask my friend the Senator from Connecticut if the Committee on Military Affairs have made any specific recommendation?

Mr. HAWLEY. A specific recommendation is here in the shape of a bill to authorize the enlistment of 1,610 artillerymen, forming a new artillery regiment. It has not been acted upon. I have had no opportunity or chance to get consideration for it. I have endeavored to do so, but I have made up my mind, it being so late in the session, that inasmuch as the bill would give rise to discussion, I might as well let it go over.

I make no motion, Mr. President. I only wanted to state the condition.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments may be considered and acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. QUAY. Will not the Senator from Maine yield to me to secure the passage of the bridge bill which I have been trying to get up all the morning. It will occupy but five minutes.

Mr. SQUIRE. After the deficiency bill is disposed of.

Mr. QUAY. It will create no discussion.

Mr. HALE. I understand an agreement has been made that those bills shall be taken up after the deficiency bill is concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I did not so understand.

Mr. HALE. The Senator sees the importance of getting through with the pending bill.

Mr. QUAY. I was not here when the agreement was made. Of course I withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 20, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of United States consulates for the fiscal year 1896 from $14,433.90 to $16,325.18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 20, to insert:

International Exhibition at Brussels: For additional amount to enable the Government to take official part in the International Exhibition to be held at Brussels, Belgium, during the year 1897, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert:

Legation to Spain: For clerk hire at legation to Spain, fiscal year 1896, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 3, to insert:

Payment to Samuel C. Reid: The Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay over to Samuel C. Reid, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns the full amount of the unexpended balance ($16,194.53) yet remaining of the $70,739 appropriated by the act of May 1, 1882, for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the U. S. brig General Armstrong.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would give us some explanation of this item. It seems to me to be a private claim, pure and simple, and I hardly see any excuse for its being upon this bill.

Mr. HALE. I will state to the Senate what it may as well understand now, that the committee for years has endeavored to enforce the proposition of putting no claims upon the deficiency appropriation bill. It has, after repeated contests, been defeated in that effort, and the Senate has by its decisions always declared certain claims in order and put them upon the bill. They have put upon the bill, as amendments, such items as had already passed the Senate, bills reported from the committees having jurisdiction. The committee this year has taken from the large number of bills of this kind good claims, reported duly, with exhaustive reports showing their equities and showing that the Government owes the money, and has put on this bill all those that were put on last year and rejected, and those that have passed this year after having been reported by committees; and this is one of them. It is hardly a claim in the sense of the appropriation of money, because it simply directs the Secretary of State to pay over the balance of a fund that has already been appropriated. We looked at it carefully. I have no doubt that the Secretary of State ought to have directed, under the law already passed, the payment of this money; but some technical objection was made to the effect that the vouchers were not sufficient. I think that was a wrong decision.

What I have said applies rather to certain other claims that will be reached than to the pending amendment.

Mr. GRAY. This amendment takes no money out of the Treasury?

Mr. HALE. There is no money appropriated. It is a simple direction to pay the balance. It is just as good a case against the Government. There is not any matter that has been put on by the committee that is not a good case. The committee concluded this year to adopt that method of getting rid of these matters, which if they were not put on the bill in committee would be put on it in the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I ask him to explain how it is that the amendment directs this amount, $16,194.53, to be paid to Samuel C. Reid, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, when the act of May 1, 1882, directed the money to be paid to the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the U. S. brig General Armstrong? Is the remainder of the money due entirely to Samuel C. Reid?

Mr. HALE. It is.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is it true, then, that the owners, officers, and crew have received their full quota from the first appropriation?

Mr. HALE. Yes; there are no claimants against this balance. All of the rest has been paid.

Mr. ALDRICH. I assume that this money would have been paid under the original act if the beneficiary named here, or his heirs and assigns, were entitled to receive it. I assume that this is to cure some defect in the existing law, by which $16,000 is to be taken out of the Treasury.

The Senator from Maine knows as well as I do the danger of putting private claims upon this bill. The Senator says that the committee have undertaken to discriminate between claims and have put certain good claims upon the bill. It seems to me that when the Committee on Appropriations undertakes, in violation of the rules of the Senate, to discriminate as to the private claims that are pending before Congress——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senate committee has not done much discrimination. It has taken all of these items that are subject to the rule I have mentioned and has put them on. The Senate of course can knock them all off, and that will be a guidance to the committee in the future; but the committee in the course it has pursued heretofore of not putting on any has been overruled in the Senate and the Senate has put them on. They are perfectly good cases against the Government, and rather than to go over the same ground this year the committee, not discriminating, has taken up this whole collection and has put on, I think, every item that had been examined and was admissible under the rules that have been established by the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator inform the Senate what is the aggregate amount of the claims?

Mr. HALE. The amount is not very large compared with many items in the bill—between three hundred and four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH. In all?

Mr. HALE. In all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow this particular clause to go over.

Mr. HALE. I think we may as well dispose of it, because these items occur right along through the bill at different points.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask it in order that they may be taken up at some time in the course of this discussion and treated together. I know there are people constantly applying to me who desire to have their claims put upon appropriation bills, and if this door is to be opened I desire in justice to some of my constituents to offer amendments of the same character.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will have to put his claims into the same category with those the committee has adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the category of the committee?

Mr. HALE. For instance, that the full Senate has passed a bill for the purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly that does not make them in order.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has decided already that it does make them in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not.

Mr. HALE. The committee made the point at the last session and was overruled. The Senate put on nearly a dozen on the ground that the Senate had already passed bills to pay the claims.

Mr. ALDRICH. The last clause of Rule XVI, applying to private land claims, is clear, definite, and distinct.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; but the Senate has a right——

Mr. ALDRICH. And no decision of the Senate upon a single case can establish any variation of that rule.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can make his point if he chooses. I am entirely willing that he should do so, and then the Senate will settle the whole business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be very glad to have the matters that are alike go over, and have the question decided once for all.

Mr. HALE. There is not much point in their going over, because it is about the only controversy there is on the bill, and they are put in in different parts of the bill, as they apply to the different Departments. So you can not consider them all together. I have no objection to the Senator making his point of order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Maine. I understand an appropriation of $77,000 was made, of which an unexpended balance of $16,000 is remaining. I understand that amount was appropriated and paid to Samuel C. Reid and his heirs, and the beneficiaries of the appropriation have been paid except $16,000, and that on account of a technicality it has not been paid; so that the effect of the amendment is simply to make operative an appropriation that has been made of this money to a man to whom it is due beyond any dispute. It seems to me if that is true the Senate will not stickle on a fine point of order about paying a matter of that sort.

Mr. ALDRICH. The statement made by the Senator from Arkansas can not be absolutely accurate, because the bill as originally passed provided for the judgment of a certain sum for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the U. S. brig General Armstrong. Now, Mr. Samuel C. Reid, whom I remember very well, could not have been the captain and the owners and officers and crew of the brig General Armstrong.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He was captain.

Mr. ALDRICH. He might have been captain and owner, but certainly could not have been officers and crew, as distinguished from captain and owners.

Mr. FAULKNER. Have all the other claimants been paid?

Mr. ALDRICH. No one knows whether they have been paid or not. There is no information before the Senate. I will not make a point of order at this stage. I will investigate this case at such time as I may have at my disposal between now and the time the bill reaches the Senate, and reserve the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The amendment is to be passed over, the Chair understands.

Mr. HALE. There are no contested items on the bill except in these matters, and I would rather have them settled as we go on. If the Senator from Rhode Island makes his point of order, I would rather have it settled now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not make any point of order now; I will make it when the bill is in the Senate, if I choose to make it.

Mr. HALE. All right.

Mr. HAWLEY. We have had the matter up in the Senate. We passed the bill. It was thoroughly discussed. I took pains to ask particularly whether any of the outstanding claims were still out, whether the whole had been disposed of except this balance, and I am assured that it is so. I hesitated about it, but am told it is so beyond all question. I believe the balance belongs lawfully to the existing Mr. Reid, who is pursuing this matter, and has pursued it for a great many years. Now he is within an inch of getting final justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to agreeing to the amendment now. If I should be inclined to make the point of order, I shall make it when the bill is in the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert:

Spanish and American Claims Commission: To enable the Secretary of State to distribute and pay to the claimants, respectively, the sums due them upon a balance of net increment received by the United States, amounting in all to the sum of $14,485.50, which sum remains unpaid upon said claims, as they were ascertained and allowed by the Spanish and American Claims Commission, which claims are stated and the sum of money due upon each of them is ascertained and stated in Exhibit B, accompanying the message of the President to the Senate of the United States dated February 27, 1888, and published in Senate Executive Document No. 98, Fiftieth Congress, first session, $14,485.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to insert:

Payment to Thomas E. Keenan: To pay Thomas E. Keenan balance of salary due him as United States consul at Odessa, Russia, for the period extending from March 21, 1892, to September 30, 1892, $368.99.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 9, to insert:

Payment to master of Swedish bark Adele: For payment to the Government of Norway and Sweden, to reimburse T. Pearson, master of the Swedish bark Adele, costs and expenses incurred by him in proceedings connected with his imprisonment by a State court, contrary to Article XIII of the treaty of 1827 with Sweden and Norway, $295.64.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 18, on page 6.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 1 o'clock p. m.). The Secretary will suspend. By an order of the Senate, at this hour the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] obtained unanimous consent to call up a bill, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called.

Mr. CHANDLER. The House amendments have been read. They are intended to carry out and facilitate the original object of the bill, and they are not objectionable to the friends of the measure. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives to the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that Senators wish to speak on the pending question. They will now have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I feel constrained to say a few words on this amendment and in regard to this bill, for the same reason that I have been constrained at many other times to address the Senate. My people are very much interested in the subject-matter of this bill, and while I know time is very precious, I think the Senate will bear me out in this, that during the six years which I have been here, while I have occupied your attention sometimes in long speeches, at others in short, I have scarcely ever claimed your attention except when the interests of my State and my people were at stake. When I conceived that their interests demanded an advocate, I never hesitated to appear as their spokesman here.

We are a young and a new community. Our relations with the Federal Government are hardly yet established. We have our land, our Indian, our irrigation, postal, and other matters which demand our attention, and it has been upon those questions mostly, and upon questions affecting the entire country as well as my own State, in relation to the financial issue, that I have occupied your time. Sometimes I may have appeared dogmatic, and even dictatorial, but you know that nothing actuated me except a sincere desire to do the best for a people who had honored me with a seat in this Chamber. I say now I would not proceed were it not that my people are so much interested in the subject-matter under discussion. I can say, perhaps, for the delight of some Senators, that hereafter you will not be bothered much for some years to come, at any rate, from my State on this floor.

To return to the question at hand. This whole bill seems to me to be a political proposition more than anything else. All admit that nothing can be done in relation to an international conference unless England consents to it. England demonetized silver in 1816 because at that time she was the great creditor nation of the world. She desired to make money dearer. It is a law of economy which no one disputes that supply and demand regulate the value of money as well as of everything else; and the less money there is the dearer it becomes, and in consequence the great creditor nation of England was wise when it demonetized silver. She struggled after that for years to induce the other great nations of the world to follow her example, and in 1873 she practically succeeded, because then the United States and Germany discarded silver.

Does anyone think for a moment that England will enter into an international conference which will restore silver as basic money? You know that she will not. The Republican party knew when they put that in their platform at St. Louis that England would not consent. They did not intend to restore silver when they put that declaration in their platform. I was there. I was upon the committee on resolutions. They accorded to us one representative, in the person of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], on the subcommittee. He presented, in behalf of the bimetallists of this country, one proposition after another. They were all voted down with sneers; and finally, to ease up the political situation in the Middle West, they put in the clause that the Republican party would promote an international conference. The men who put that in the platform at St. Louis knew it meant nothing. They intend to hold us to the single gold standard if they can.

I shall vote for this bill. I hope it will accomplish something. I trust that your efforts may, in spite of you, result in something. You will get the most cordial support in this Chamber at all times from the bimetallists to make any effort which you desire in behalf of silver; but we wish it distinctly understood that we have no faith in your honesty of purpose, and that you do not intend and will not accomplish anything by it. In two years from now I can recall this prophecy and you will admit that I am at this time absolutely correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me to call his attention to an important matter in this connection?

Mr. DUBOIS. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. ALLEN. It was reported in the press dispatches at the time that the financial plank of the Republican party was wired to J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York; that he was asked to state whether it met his approval or not; and it was also reported that he wired back to the convention that it did meet his approval. Does the Senator know anything about that?

Mr. DUBOIS. I know nothing about that as a matter of fact. Those were the rumors at St. Louis at the time. But I do know that the plank was satisfactory to the most ardent supporters of the gold standard; and they said then, as their leading organs say now, that it means nothing. What I desire to do is to call attention to the fact that they are playing politics in this, and nothing else.

I received a letter a day or two ago, and I think I am at liberty to read part of it, leaving out some portions which are personal to myself. It is from a gentleman who is well known to a number of Senators in this Chamber, Mr. Moreton Frewen. It is dated the 7th day of February, and in it he says:

25 CHESHAM PLACE SW., February 7, 1897.

MY DEAR SENATOR DUBOIS: In the latest paper to reach me I read with the greatest regret that you have lost your reelection to the Senate from Idaho. I feared when I left America that it would be so, but you have been making so gallant a fight that the three weeks past it had looked to us over here that this further untoward incident of the campaign of 1896 would be spared us.

As to currency affairs on this side of the sea, you will before long get a report from WOLCOTT, who, after seeing all our people here, left for Paris a fortnight since, and is now in Berlin, I believe. Never have I known the movement for currency reform so apparently hopeless and headless as it is in England to-day. Even Balfour, who has hitherto inspired us with hope, seems to recognize that the opposition within the cabinet and in the city is quite invincible. The prospect of international action, as far as I can see, depends entirely on whether some country can be found brave enough to put its foot down. Now that our bankers and exporters no longer fear what they did fear, a gold premium in New York, they treat the entire question with ridicule. From your side of the sea, also, the news reaches England in all the same way. I was lunching yesterday with one of the cabinet, who had just received a letter from Smalley, the correspondent in New York of the London Times. Smalley asked my host whether he had seen WOLCOTT, and went on to add that his so-called mission had no significance whatsoever; that the gold standard had won the fight and had come to stay. And I have no doubt whatever that Smalley looks upon WOLCOTT's visit as mere politics. The fact is, times here are fairly good. We have been drawing in our loans from all over the world; the banks are consequently stuffed with currency; and in the city they have had a succession of mining booms, which employ a portion of the speculative wealth of the community and earn high rates of interest, to be, for the time, some set off for the very low loan rates. The extreme lowness of prices—that is to say, the great purchasing power of the sovereign here—this and the luxury of modern London is bringing millionaires to spend their money here from all parts of the world. As matters stand, nothing but fresh convulsions on the part of our debtors will rekindle the embers of the silver question. The only prospect, a prospect no one anywhere can desire, is that further disasters on your side may carry conviction to your people. I can not believe that any tariff amendments can bring you any prosperity while you are obliged to export to Europe in competition with the exports of all those nations in Asia and South America which are bonused by a gold premium in their ports of from 100 to 200 per cent premium on gold.

* * * * * * *

Believe me, dear Senator, sincerely yours,

MORETON FREWEN.

The only way, in my judgment, to reach an international agreement is for this great nation of ours to stand out as they did in 1776 and say, "We will regulate our own affairs." Whenever we do that, then, in my judgment, the European nations will sue for an international conference. If they did not do that, it is my opinion that they would lose the trade of the world, and when you strike their pocketbook you strike their patriotism. They will not, it seems to me, under any circumstances enter into an international conference which means the restoration of silver until they are absolutely compelled to do so.

This view of the case was what induced a number of Republicans to leave their party at St. Louis, and holding to these views is what induced us to issue an address a few days ago, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the paper to be read in full or to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire it to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Silver Republicans of the United States:

There could not be a better illustration of the great law by which in free government the rise, progress, and decline of parties are determined than that afforded by recent and present political developments in the United States. Political parties are practical instruments for executing the will of the people in respect to principles and policies of government.

They, therefore, should represent and respond to public opinion in its attitude toward the problems which the experience of the nation from time to time brings forward for solution. It is not parties that make issues, but it is issues that make parties.

APPROACHING A SETTLEMENT.

For years events have been forcing upon the country, with ever-increasing definiteness and emphasis, the necessity of reform in our monetary system as respects both the coinage of the metallic money and the regulation and control of credit currency. Under stress of experience and consequent investigation, opinions have been gradually crystallizing. In this process the line of cleavage has paid little regard to previously existing party demarcations, and to-day the most careless observer can not fail to see that the genius of the nation is approaching a settlement of this momentous controversy through the agency of political instruments now being fashioned to its hand.

In the story of these formative events the so-called Silver Republicans have taken an important part and discharged a necessary function. In doing so they have not surrendered their conviction on certain other great principles of political economy and government, but they realize that these principles are not capable of successful application under the present monetary conditions. They believe, therefore, that the adequate treatment of all other issues must await the correct decision of the dominant one thus presented. In this spirit they cooperated with the organized forces of bimetallism in the last campaign. Every consideration of patriotism and expediency seems to counsel a continuation of that policy.

REPUBLICAN HISTORY.

Silver Republicans believe themselves to be in harmony with the original spirit of the old Republican party, and they claim a property in its great names and glorious traditions, justified by the splendid services and sanctified by the sacred memories of the time when that party embodied the aspirations and spoke the purposes of the great masses of the American people. That party was born in answer to the cry for a champion of liberty. Its early words were words of comfort and assurance to the oppressed. Its great deeds, by which it will hereafter live in history, were deeds of patriotism. Its policies professed above all things to hold dear the safety and welfare of the American people as against the rest of the world.

The Silver Republicans can not forget that history. They can not to-day follow those who have usurped the dominion of that party into a shameless abandonment of American interests and the tyranny of an alien money system. They believe that the duty of the hour demands that they maintain their identity and perfect their organization.

Circumstances have sometimes in the past thrust upon the undersigned responsibilities on behalf of Silver Republicans which, in the absence of formal organization, we have felt warranted in assuming. Recently, however, we have received a vast number of anxious inquiries from various parts of the country upon the question of party policy, and requesting us to give some definite direction thereto. These communications exhibit a surprising and gratifying unanimity in sentiment and plan.

APPEAL TO SILVER REPUBLICANS.

Responding to these earnest suggestions, and at the same time expressing our own deliberate opinion, we urge upon the Silver Republicans of the United States, and upon all citizens of whatsoever previous party association, who are willing to cooperate with us in political action, until the great monetary issue is settled, and settled right, that immediate steps be taken to perfect organizations in the various States and Territories, to the end that thereafter a national convention may be held for the purpose of making an authoritative pronouncement to the country and effecting a national organization.

As soon as possible each of the States and Territories should designate a member of the provisional national committee of the Silver Republican party, which committee will have charge of the calling of the national convention and of all matters preliminary thereto. Meantime we have taken the liberty of naming Mr. CHARLES A. TOWNE, of Minnesota, as chairman of said provisional national committee, whose official address for the present will be the city of Washington, and to whom all communications should be sent. The provisional national committee is hereby called to meet in executive session at the city of Chicago, at a place to be seasonably announced by the chairman, on Tuesday, the 8th day of June, 1897.

Signed at the city of Washington this 22d day of February, 1897, the anniversary of the birth of the "first American," whose life was a sublime example of patriotism, and whose precept, placing duty to country above and beyond all party obligation, is a deathless watchword of political liberty.

H. M. TELLER.	JOHN P. JONES.
FRED T. DUBOIS.	CHARLES A. TOWNE.
FRANK J. CANNON.	CHARLES S. HARTMAN.
R. F. PETTIGREW.	JOHN F. SHAFROTH.
LEE MANTLE.	C. E. ALLEN.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the adoption of the gold standard at St. Louis, as I said, was what impelled Republicans to leave that convention, and when they left it, the Republican party of the Pacific Coast walked out with them; when they left it, there went out with them from that convention Republicans from every voting precinct in the United States, and I say to my former political friends on this side of the Chamber that they have left you for good. You may not lay the flattering unction to your soul that they will come back. There will be ten of your party to join us where one of ours goes back to you so long as you adhere to the single gold standard, and you will fool nobody by your pretended international agreements; you will fool nobody any more by your misleading planks in platforms. You may cajole and corrupt a few by offices, for business opportunities are scarce, but you will not induce many to sacrifice their principles for place.

The issue is squarely joined in this country. It is squarely joined in this Chamber. You must meet it, and meet it fairly. When I say meet it fairly, I mean that you must declare for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; that you must make gold and silver equal in the eye of the law, and open the mints to both of them without discrimination.

I trust that your forthcoming tariff bill may bring prosperity to this country, but it will not, in my judgment, and it can not so long as you adhere to the single gold standard. The rates of exchange are too great against you for any protective tariff to avail, and when your tariff fails, when prosperity does not come back, then you will be brought face to face with this question, and, in my judgment, it will crush you out as a party.

As I said a day or two ago in this Chamber, and as we said to you at St. Louis, the Republican party has written its last law on the statute books of this country by its own votes. You name a President for the last time. He can peddle out the post-offices, the marshalships, etc., and reward those who betrayed their people and sometimes their principles, but your effective force and power is gone. My remarks are qualified all the time with the statement that this condition is upon you and will remain with you unless you abandon the gold standard and shake loose the trusts and moneyed powers which now control your policies.

I shall not take up any more of the time of the Senate, Mr. President, for I know how precious it is in these closing hours of the session.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may read from the desk the House amendment to section 2 of the bill now under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the House of Representatives is, on page 2, line 4, of the Senate bill, to insert the following:

And he is further authorized, if in his judgment the purpose specified in the first section hereof can thus be better attained, to appoint one or more special commissioners or envoys to such of the nations of Europe as he may designate to seek by diplomatic negotiations an international agreement for the purpose specified in the first section hereof. And in case of such appointment so much of the appropriation herein made as shall be necessary shall be available for the proper expenses and compensation of such commissioners or envoys.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment by the Senate of the United States under the statement made by the proponents of the bill will be an official confession of the absolute failure of the mission of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the nations of the earth in the alleged interest of an international agreement for bimetallism. If he had accomplished the purpose which was claimed for his mission, no further expenditure of time or money by envoys extraordinary of the United States would be required.

Mr. President, it might be inferred, by one who has been suspicious of this movement from the day that it was proposed in St. Louis until now, that the junior Senator from Colorado was sent abroad not to secure favor for international agreement, but to secure opposition to it. That the mission has absolutely failed is proved by the amendment suggested by the committee of the House of Representatives, adopted by the House, and now favored by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] who has charge of the measure. It was not until the absolute failure of the mission of the junior Senator from Colorado to Europe was announced in the public press of Europe and the United States that the gentlemen who advocate this method of settling a question purely American in its present aspect concluded that it was wise to spend public money to send other envoys abroad.

I say, sir, that if one had been so suspicious of the proposition from the beginning as perhaps the result may in the end justify, he would have inferred from the situation that the junior Senator from Colorado went to Europe to sound the troubled waters there, to see whether there was any danger of an international agreement on the monetary system before the United States should take any step in that direction.

I desire at this point, Mr. President, to ask permission to have the Secretary read the article which I send to the desk, from the editorial columns of the Scranton (Pa.) Republican of the date of February 24, 1897.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WOLCOTT'S MISSION.

Senator WOLCOTT had no faith when he left this country that he would succeed in his mission in the interests of bimetallism and he is not going to be disappointed. No international convention will be held, and it is in nowise likely that anything practical will result from the Senator's tour, unless it be to cause the early abandonment of further thought of an international movement in behalf of silver. This is evidently the opinion of the London Pall Mall Gazette, for it closes a long article on Mr. WOLCOTT's mission with these words:

"Senator WOLCOTT came as a private advocate of a cause discredited by a majority of his fellow-countrymen. Under such circumstances to expect he would receive official support from the foreign opponents of such a cause required a degree of childlike simplicity rare anywhere and which no one would expect to find in Colorado. On his return Senator WOLCOTT will find that the newspapers alone will display any anxiety regarding the result of his personally conducted European tour. He has met many distinguished people in England, France, and Germany, but in not one of these countries did he find that bimetallism was considered necessary to its welfare. Though the mission was absolutely fruitless, it was quite as successful as it deserved to be."

The real cause of Senator WOLCOTT's failure crops out in the foregoing lines. "In not one of these countries did he find that bimetallism was considered necessary to its welfare," says the Pall Mall Gazette, and that remark explains why nothing will result from Senator WOLCOTT's mission. The nations of Europe do not want bimetallism and will not move to restore silver to its former position as a monetary metal, believing that, like gold, iron, and copper, it should stand on its own merits. Are they not right?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, nothing but the strange circumstances under which this legislation is proposed would have justified any comment upon a member of this body who is absent in a foreign country, but the insistence upon the passage of this bill, and its becoming a law during the term precedent to the inauguration of President McKinley, forces at this time, and in the absence of the junior Senator from Colorado, all such comments as either the friends or the foes of the measure will have opportunity to make.

We have a very large diplomatic appropriation bill. We send abroad the chosen figures of our national life to represent the best thought, the highest purpose, of the United States. I take it that this amendment, coming from the House of Representatives, so entirely dominated by the will of the greatest man in the party soon to come into power—that this amendment, coming from a House so entirely in accord with the declaration for the gold standard at St. Louis, is notice to the country that no man who, in his official capacity would advocate bimetallism, will ever be sent by the next President of the United States as a minister, an ambassador, or a consul to any foreign nation, and that, in order to secure a presentation of the wish of more than a majority of the people of the United States, it is necessary for Congress to appropriate $100,000 for the selection of some envoys extraordinary or special commissioners, who shall go to Europe to treat on behalf of the United States in this the greatest issue which confronts the people in practical life.

If the bill as it went from the Senate was nonsense, as many people believe, it has come back to us costly nonsense. A man to go from the United States as a special commissioner, an envoy extraordinary, to present the cause of bimetallism to the nations of Europe! The cause is discredited in the very fact. I presume we shall have men at the court of St. James, men in knee breeches before the Russian Czar, men dancing attendance upon the War Lord of Germany, who will say: "The appearance of these men, who come as envoys extraordinary and special commissioners, is but the outburst of that 'turbulent' people, who must have a little concession in order that they may be contented with the promises of the Administration coming into power."

I intend to vote for this amendment, as I voted for the original bill. The Senator who proposed the bill stated that it was only fair that the friends of the measure should have it exactly in the form they desired. Mr. President, they have it so; and I warn the Senators who propose to satisfy the people of the United States with these promises and with continued efforts, which mean nothing except delay, that the mass of the voters of this nation will not be satisfied if this measure shall be put into diplomacy, and if we shall have the State Department dealing with the prosperity of the people of the United States as it has dealt with the lives of our citizens in the Island of Cuba. They have sat and smiled and fished and smirked before the people of the United States while citizens have been tortured and assassinated, and it is proposed now to put into the custody of the State Department this great question, which belongs as entirely to the people of the United States as the glory of their own country, as their leadership in the liberty struggles of the world.

I know that the next Administration will have a tariff bill. That has been decided upon. It was decreed before the victory was won. The determination that a revision of the tariff must be had upon lines satisfactory to the commercial interests of this country was in itself the decision of the election; and a victory was secured by means that were delicately indicated by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire the other day, when, in his speech, he alluded to the efficient aid which the money power of the United States had conferred upon the Republican party in the last campaign.

I do not know what other silver Republicans in this body may think concerning the prospect of tariff, but from all the conferences which I have had with those gentlemen who are distinguished within the great Republican party, to which I once gave all the effort that I was capable of offering, all the devotion which my soul could hold, and all the belief which one man can entertain toward an earthly party, I am convinced that they have counted the men in this Chamber, and that they know that from some States where no Republican victory was won in the last election will come the necessary two votes to enable them to carry a tariff bill. But that will not answer the needs of the people of this country. No amount of glory which can surround the inauguration of a President on the 4th day of this month will satisfy the demand of the people, almost an instant demand.

The backbone of the patriotism of this country, the strength of its prosperity, has been among the agriculturists and the toilers. Will putting a high tariff on manufactured goods, thus enhancing the price, relieve the agriculturist who sells his product in the markets of the world at the world's market price? The farmer's loaf has been getting less and less in size each year, because he has bought in a protected market and has sold in a free-trade market. The knives of national legislation have been cutting a slice off each end of the farmer's loaf each year, and as the people walk along Pennsylvania avenue on the 4th of this month and witness the glory of that spectacle, some of them will think that the inaugural expenditure by the Government and by the people of this great city, the capital of this mighty nation, but ill accords with the conditions among those who toil. When the people come to read the appropriations of this Congress, perhaps the greatest in the history of the country; when every man of moderate means or every man in poverty has been compelled to cut himself short of comforts and deprive those who are dependent upon him of some of those things which he would gladly give as the result of his toil, they may conclude that the country, its Legislature, and the people who inaugurate Presidents with mighty pageantry have forgotten the needs of the common mass and their circumstances.

If an international agreement can be procured, if it can win back to the people of the United States not only their old-time prosperity, but if in bringing prosperity it can give back to us the national dignity, which we are losing by chasing after the false gods of the Old World, I shall be as grateful as the most ardent advocate of this method; but I do not believe that any such result can follow. I think there will be ensuing "confusion only worse confounded." I think that the next Administration will be the same as if Grover Cleveland had been elected for a third term.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not wish to call names or express the suspicions which I entertain of bad faith on the part of the Republican party in pretending that they are in favor of restoring silver by an international conference, or otherwise. There are exceptions, and I make the author of this bill, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], one of the honorable exceptions.

But what is the situation of the Administration? When the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] first went to Europe, the tone of the European press was kindly, at least, but events happened here which led them to ridicule his mission and say that he represented nothing and nobody, and was entitled to no consideration.

That was the language and substance of the leading journals of London a short time ago. But that language was not used until events occurred here showing the position of the Administration and it was rumored that Mr. Gage, a banker of Chicago, might be appointed Secretary of the Treasury. Following that rumor, Mr. Gage went to Canton and had an interview with the President-elect. He went home and announced his views. There was some question at first as to whether they were really his views, but it turned out that they were views which he had expressed in a deliberate address and which he indorsed.

In that address, as reported by the papers, he declared that he is in favor of retiring the greenbacks, of retiring the silver certificates, of selling the silver which the Government has in its vaults, and of having no money in this country except gold and national bank issues. That was the position which the person who is to be Secretary of the Treasury declared. It was published in Europe, and immediately upon that publication Mr. WOLCOTT's mission was ridiculed. That was as clear a declaration as could possibly have been made that the United States did not intend under any circumstances, or that the Administration that is to come in did not intend under any circumstances, to change the situation. By their acts you shall know them. This act of the President-elect in selecting Mr. Gage, who is the most radical gold man on either side of the Atlantic, is proof positive of the position of the incoming Administration.

If we wanted further evidence of that, it is found in this proposition, which intrusts this matter to the Secretary of State. We all know who is to be Secretary of State. We all know his record upon this question. We know that he was the author of the bill to demonetize silver; that he has done more than any other man who ever lived to fasten the gold standard upon the world. This matter is to be intrusted to him by our Government. When this is reported to Europe, and they find that the subject has been delegated to the Secretary of State, they will be further reassured that the new Administration will do nothing; and that the New York Evening Post and other papers which declared that the provision in the platform was merely for political purposes were right, and that Mr. Smalley was right when he wrote his letter to the Cabinet minister, which is reported by Moreton Frewen, in the letter to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], which he has just read, that there was no movement in this country among the powers that be for silver; that they have regarded the verdict of last fall as a verdict for the single gold standard, and intended to adhere to it.

I am aware that there are some Republicans who still entertain the hope that there is good faith on the part of their party in going to Europe to ask permission to exercise the functions delegated to Congress by the Constitution of the United States. I am willing that they shall try the experiment. I regret, however, that that experiment is to be tried at the expense of the honor and dignity of the United States, for there is no more humiliating position which the people of this country can assume than that of appealing to Europe for permission to pass laws regulating our domestic affairs. It is the most humiliating spectacle that has ever been presented. While it degrades our people, while it is anti-American, I am willing that it shall be done if there is still one man in the Republican party who in good faith wants it done. I want the object lesson given so that it can be understood. It has been understood by me for many years.

I have felt the contumely which has been heaped upon us every time we have supplicated for an international conference, the sneers and jokes and light expressions which have occurred; the assumption that the delegates are there and must be treated politely, must be treated as delegates from a great country; must be treated politely personally, but must be told that their mission is fruitless, that there is no idea of seriously considering it. Great Britain's delegates have done this at every conference, and have treated with contempt every proposition looking to the restoration of silver. That is the attitude of Great Britain to-day, and to go there again and present our supplications for relief is indeed humiliating to the land of Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson, and the heroes who made this a country. But if it must be done in order to satisfy the American people that they must take care of themselves or suffer, let it be done again.

The platform pledges the Republican party to this. The Senator from New Hampshire has taken that platform in earnest and has brought forward the pending bill, but the President-elect, by the selection of this Cabinet officer, has advertised to the world that the provision was put there for political purposes and nothing else. He has advertised to the world that what the New York Post says in regard to it is true; that it was for political purposes, to gain a few votes in the election. Those votes having been secured and the victory won, that is all that is required. That victory, they claim, is a victory for the single gold standard, so far as the incoming Administration is concerned, and every step has borne witness to the truth of what the New York Post and the Sound Money League of New York have constantly proclaimed.

Let us have this object lesson again. Let the country be humiliated. Let them send their monometallic commissioners, as Mr. Cleveland did in his first Administration. Let Edward Atkinson go as he went before to find out on the other side why the people of the United States have no right to manage their own domestic affairs. If Manton Marble stands for what he did a few years ago, he is a good agent. Send them. Send the editors of the New York Evening Post, pay them your money, and they will find arguments to make reports why this country is dependent upon Europe for its existence as a nation, why we have no right to legislate here, but must apply to the governments of Europe to exercise our legitimate functions under the Constitution. This spectacle, I think, will convince the American people that the provision in the platform calling for an international conference was merely to catch votes, and those whose votes were caught by this trap will be slow to be deceived again. Some new dodge must be invented. I thought this dodge, after it had been played for twenty years, was understood, but it appears not. It will serve its purpose again, and I want to say to them, "Go on with it. Let the monometallic representatives of the Cabinet send their agents abroad, let them spend your money, and let their reports come in again." You will see what those reports will be. You will see that they will carry out the verdict of the Sound Money League of New York, and not the promise of the platform.

If it had been intended to stand by Mr. WOLCOTT, a Secretary of the Treasury would have been appointed in harmony with his mission. If it had been intended to negotiate fairly on this great question, some other person would have been selected for the post of Secretary of State. These two selections in my mind establish the fact that the pledge in the platform was not in good faith, but for the purpose of deceiving the American people.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate with any general discussion of this question. I was compelled to be absent from the Chamber when the bill passed the Senate. Had I been present I should have expressed, perhaps at some length, my views upon the subject. I am not recorded as having voted for the bill, although I left a pair—I do not know whether or not it was announced—in favor of so doing. I should not have voted for it with any hope or expectation that any result would come from it save that of convincing the American people that bimetallism in this country could not be secured through international agreement. At this late hour, with the appropriation bills pressing on the Senate and the anxiety of all to get through and to close up the business of the session, I shall not enter into any detailed examination of the efforts that have been made by this country to secure an international agreement.

It is enough to say that in the three very determined efforts we have made we have signally failed, and there is nothing now in the condition of the world which indicates that the time is any better for an international agreement than heretofore, if we continue to insist as we always have insisted and as we now insist, at least as the Republican party that is coming into power insists, that it shall be with the consent and approbation and assistance of Great Britain.

When the Republican party at St. Louis declared that the gold standard should be maintained until the consent of the leading commercial nations of the world was obtained to get rid of it, those who proposed it as well as those who listened to it, those who voted for it as well as those who voted against it, knew that it was beyond the bounds of reason to hope or expect that Great Britain would change her attitude on the money question which she has steadily maintained since 1816, and which to-day she is more determined to maintain than heretofore. I need not and I shall not go into a discussion of the reasons why Great Britain will not agree to an international agreement which shall restore silver to its old place, to the place it occupied before 1873 in the currency of the different countries of the world. One of the facts I will state is that Great Britain last year bought nearly $700,000,000 more of the products of the world than she sold, paying for them from her great interest accumulations and her investments in foreign lands.

Her interests are for low prices. She so declared in every monetary conference ever held where that question was presented. I know that of late we have had some apparently encouraging reports from Great Britain. I know we have been told that public sentiment is changing. It matters little what the public sentiment of Great Britain may be. It matters little what the great public of that country think. The question is, What do the powers that control it intend? And every time they have made an utterance it has been against an international agreement.

I should have voted for the bill, however, as I have voted for others, and as I have proposed myself several for conferences which we have never succeeded in securing. I should have done it because I am one of those who believe that there would be nothing derogatory to American dignity to enter into an arrangement with other countries for an international agreement concerning the money question, although I do feel that when we make the declaration to the world that we will not ourselves exercise that prerogative of sovereignty unless they agree, we do humiliate and degrade the American people. But there would be nothing derogatory to American dignity in entering into an agreement for an international conference on equal terms, saying to them we prefer to have bimetallism with your assistance than to have it alone; for we recognize the doctrine that the whole is greater than the part, and what this nation can do alone, nobody can doubt other nations can do in connection with us.

I believe an international agreement could be made that, as I said before, would not be derogatory to our standing, not a surrender of any prerogatives, not the yielding of anything we ought to reserve any more than is the making of a postal arrangement with another country. So my opposition to that phase of the Republican platform is not that I am against an international agreement, but I am opposed to it because the limitations and restrictions put upon it are of such character that no man of ordinary intelligence who has examined this question and kept pace with the condition of public opinion in the world believes it is possible to reach the limit there provided.

Mr. President, I do not like to say, and yet I think I ought to say it, that in my judgment the provision for an international agreement was put there exactly as the New York Advertiser, a Republican paper, declared recently, for the purpose of getting Western votes. When that provision appeared in the public press, the great Republican papers of this country published in the East, and even in Chicago, declared that it was a simple declaration for the gold standard; for every sensible man, they said, knew that Great Britain, the leading commercial nation of the world, would never consent to an international agreement to restore bimetallism throughout the world, and, as the Senator from Idaho said a few minutes since, that phase of the platform was as acceptable to the gold-standard people as any other. Yet it was a phase of the platform that not one of them would have agreed to if he had believed it was possible to carry it out.

In the commencement of the session I indicated a disposition to discuss the question with some others, but the business of the Senate seems to have precluded that being done in the proper manner. I shall take occasion undoubtedly in the Senate at the next session to say what I proposed to do at the present session. I do not for myself propose to let this question die. I know that this is the greatest question the American people have ever had to consider, and when on the opposite side we are told that all the wealth of the country, the great corporations, the great syndicates, and the combines are determined to commence a campaign of education, that they intend to keep up the discussion, I can reply to Senators that while we do not have the ability to carry on a campaign as they do, while we have not unlimited funds to call on and to use, we will carry on this contest, and we expect to make it a lively contest.

I should like to say just a word more with reference to an international agreement, or the possibility of an international agreement, even at the risk of extending my remarks further than I intended.

There will never be an international conference that will be a success until it originates with some nation or people who are earnestly anxious to secure results. If the United States shall call an international conference, as this provision seems to indicate, it must be preceded by diplomatic correspondence with other nations. The great trouble with the last conference which we had was that our delegates went to the conference, the United States Government having called it, without any plan. There had been some diplomatic correspondence touching the greater and enlarged use of silver, but none touching the question of agitating the public mind in this country. Until the United States Government shall enter into correspondence with other nations to establish an understanding as to what we are willing to do, and what they are willing to do, every international conference that will be called will be an absolute failure.

The Republican party is coming into power; and I mean to say nothing offensive to anybody. We know, or we think we do, who is to be Secretary of State. We know—at least we think we do—who is to be Secretary of the Treasury. The selection of these two persons indicates what the policy of the Administration must be. We all know that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who has given great attention to these subjects and has had large experience, does not believe in an international conference. We have no reason to suppose that the Senator from Ohio will enter into any arrangement for that purpose. We know, if we can depend upon the declarations of the supposed new Secretary of the Treasury, at least as we get them through the press, that he has no sympathy with an international agreement. If there is any reason to suppose that the President-elect has any sympathy with an international agreement, Mr. President, it must come from his votes in the House and his declarations made before the campaign began, for no man can find an utterance of his after his nomination that would indicate that he is friendly to an international agreement, save and except the perfunctory admission on his part when he accepted the nomination that he would support the platform. Every statement from the cottage porch indicated that he had gone over to the gold standard in earnest and would there remain.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the pending bill, because I will vote for anything and everything that offers a reasonable hope of relief to the American people, and I shall do it without reference to who may be in power or what party may control the administration of public affairs. While I may not be disposed to act with the party upon its party lines, I shall be, I hope, patriotic enough always, whenever I see a movement or measure that is intended for the benefit of the American people, to approve of it.

We are about to inaugurate a President with the pomp and splendor of monarchy, I am told. We are told that nothing in the history of the country compares with it. There will be undoubtedly a grand and magnificent display. I do not complain of that. I think that when the Executive of seventy-odd million people is to be inducted into power and office there should be something more than the ordinary condition of public affairs. But it must be painful to those who will witness it to realize that on that day there will be more idle Americans, more Americans hunting for food and hunting for work than at any other time in the history of this Republic; that there are more men, women, and children supported by charity to-day than at any other time in the history of our country. I may say free as this country has been, and rich and great as it is, I think there is but one other country where there are as much want and distress to-day, and that is in the Asiatic region, where British domination of their finances has brought those people to dire distress. I do not hold the British Government responsible for the famine, but I hold them responsible for having destroyed the accumulations of those people for generations, to the extent, not as the Senator from New Hampshire indicated the other day, of three or four or five hundred million dollars, but almost a thousand million dollars, for that is the value they have destroyed by the decrease of the value of their property, which is simply the accumulation of silver.

At the proper time I will take occasion to discuss this question at length, but not now.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I expect that I shall stand very nearly alone in voting against this bill, and I desire now to put upon record very briefly indeed some of the reasons why I oppose it, and also to give some assurance to the gentlemen who have spoken this morning, who were recently members of the Republican party, that in their departure from that organization for the purpose of reestablishing the double standard in this country, they have and will have my firm support under all circumstances until that great event is accomplished.

I do not wish Senators to feel that they stand alone and apart from the members of the Democratic party proper, who are committed, as I understand it, in the platform of their party and in their position, as well as by the creed which they profess, to the use of gold and silver, and without discrimination against either metal, for the purpose of coinage into money.

Senators have said that they will vote for this bill in order to furnish an opportunity to its friends and to the Republican party to redeem certain pledges which they made to the people of the United States that they would exert themselves with all their power in the direction of obtaining consent of European powers to bimetallism in its present interpretation. We know that the thought of Europe on the subject of gold and silver is represented entirely in Great Britain; that there is a dominance of financial power in Great Britain which directs entirely the current of financial events throughout the entire Continent of Europe, unless perhaps Russia may be excepted. So in dealing with this subject we are dealing really with Great Britain. If Great Britain to-morrow were to restore the free coinage of silver as it existed in 1816, all of America except the party that was represented at Indianapolis would be throwing up their hats and shouting with joy for the redemption of mankind from an evil which seemed otherwise impossible to get rid of.

Now, I will suppose it cabled across the Atlantic Ocean to-day that the Parliament of Great Britain had reestablished the law as it was prior to the act of 1816. That would bring in the free and real use of gold and silver coin in that great realm, and it would also carry with it the privilege of free coinage which has existed among the British subjects from the time of Queen Anne without interruption; and the American people would be rejoiced beyond even the joy that the Republican party feel and a great many other people in the United States feel in the great event which is to take place here on the 4th day of March. There is nothing human thought can comprehend in respect to the situation of the people of the United States that would produce such profound happiness as if we could announce on the floor of the Senate that an act of Parliament had restored gold and silver to their proper uses, as they were intended to be by the Almighty, and as they were from the time of Queen Anne down to 1816.

How does it happen, Mr. President, that any nation on this earth has got that much power over the American people? How does it happen that we are looking out for a remedy, a relief and deliverance from terrible evils, of which we have now experienced the hardships for nearly thirty years, and that we would be so happy in welcoming this act on the part of Great Britain? It is because Great Britain has us in leash, because she has the power over us, and because she uses it without hesitancy and without compassion against the people of the United States and the people of all other silver-using countries in the world, but more particularly those of America.

Now, in order to achieve that deliverance which we so much desire, which would bring us such happiness, such joy, such triumphant exclamations of delight, I prefer to rely upon the wisdom, strength, power, and conscience of the American people. If it would rejoice us to have this benefit bestowed upon us through the compassion of Great Britain, how much more should it rejoice and make us proud if we felt that we could lay our hands upon it by the strength of our own right arm and our own sagacity. The commission that is proposed in this bill is intended to be sent simply to Great Britain, for, while other nations will, if there is any convention at all, probably send their delegates there, it will all be subordinate to the whole of that imperial power.

When the commission get to Great Britain, if they have been fortunate enough to obtain any concessions whatever, even the slightest, they will return here with glory written on their banners as having succeeded in begging out of that great Empire the privilege to the American people of exercising one of their sovereign functions as a republican government under the Constitution. Whether the advantages they gain in Great Britain are slight or whether they are great, whether they extend to the whole subject of the remonetization of silver and its free use equally with gold or whether it is only a partial success, they will come back with rejoicings and they will pronounce in our favor a new independence obtained by them from the thraldom under which we are now to that great power.

I do not know what the form is going to be. If the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who is said to be averse to the effort (I do not know whether he is averse to it), should form after all a treaty with Great Britain that both Governments should agree to the remonetization of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and the free coinage of silver should occur in both of the great English-speaking countries, and if he were to send that treaty into the Senate of the United States for our ratification, we would be compelled to ask ourselves a question that no man can answer with safety to this Government. What is that question? Shall we put the rights of the United States in respect of the coinage of gold and silver under the obligation of a treaty with Great Britain? Can we do it?

Mr. President, I do not wish to ever place the right of coining gold and silver according to our own wishes or purposes, or any other sovereign power of the American nation, under the guardianship or within the protection of a treaty obligation. There is a very plain reason for that. Treaties are made to bind governments together by certain penalties; that is to say, when they engage solemnly that they will do certain things, they are held bound in honor and in duty to do those things. But they are held by a still stronger tie to do them; that is to say, if either nation willfully violates the treaty, that nation is bound to answer to the other in war or in damages.

Will I ever consent to vote for the ratification of a treaty that will establish the ratio of 16 to 1, if you please, between gold and silver, and give free coinage to both metals, when, if we choose to depart from that system, or if Great Britain chooses to depart from that system, the only possible remedy that we have at all under the treaty is to go to war? I do not propose to put the sovereign rights of the United States under the control of any government in the world to such an extent or in such a method that that government will have the right to complain against us that we have violated a treaty when we depart from that rule, and the penalty of the violation is war. When we do that, we surrender our sovereign power into the hands of Great Britain by a contract that stands outside of and violates the Constitution of the United States and the whole system and sovereignty of the United States.

Therefore I could not vote for such a treaty, although it might accomplish the very purposes I desire, for I would not bind myself or my country under a treaty obligation to establish the coinage of silver and gold at a ratio of 16 to 1 and leave the coinage unlimited. No American statesman who understands the genius and theory and framework of the American Constitution can ever consent to have a financial question of this kind come within the control and grasp and reach of the treaty-making power. That is out of the question. We had just as well surrender the power to make war and declare peace into the control of Great Britain as to surrender the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. Now, this is all I desire to say upon that proposition.

I will suppose that the commissioners will come back with what is called an academic agreement, the recommendation of a great convention in which all the Governments of Europe and the Government of the United States have agreed that we will enact legislation in all those countries for the purpose of the coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold, with the free coinage of both metals. Then we shall have to enact laws to carry that into effect.

In the measure that we are passing to-day are we pledging ourselves that we will enact laws to carry that into execution according to the basis that may be agreed upon between our commissioners there and their commissioners in that convention? If we are doing that, it is very dangerous ground we are treading upon. We all know that that is not to be the effect of it, for the reason that when this agreement comes back here it must be submitted to the Congress of the United States for ratification, and we know that the next Congress after that can repeal that law without responsibility to Great Britain. But if we enter into what is called an international agreement that we will adopt legislation in Parliament and legislation in the Congress of the United States under parallel bills for the free coinage of gold and silver, and the next Congress of the United States find that that is a bad policy for this country, and they wish to depart from it, then we have created between our Government and the Government of Great Britain by this compact a relation which is violated in its essence and in its spirit by the act of Congress; and in doing that we have hampered our legislative powers to such an extent as to make the situation not only extremely disagreeable but very dangerous.

Now, it is useless for us to undertake by anticipation to realize these things through any commission that we can send there. When they come back, I care not whether they come with a treaty or whether they come with recommendations for legislation, the result is going to be precisely the same. The United States can not enter into such an engagement with them in either form without subjecting this Government to the disagreeable penalty of going to war in order to have the privilege of making our monetary system conform to that of Great Britain or any other powers in Europe.

So, Mr. President, seeing that nothing can come from this at all except a mere perfunctory effort to perform a party pledge given in a platform, I am not willing by my vote to sanction a measure so extraordinary as this is. I am opposed to it now because I know that when the agreement comes back, if they should ever succeed in making one, I shall be compelled to oppose its ratification. Therefore I oppose it now.

Senators have predicted that the whole effort would be entirely futile, that nothing would result from it. I concur fully in the opinion. It is a mere effort to delay, and the action of the Senate to-day, that we are about to take on this bill, will be appealed to by partisans in this Chamber and in the other House of Congress, and possibly by the President of the United States, as a reason why we should not take care of our own financial system, because we have sent commissioners across the water to get the consent of other governments as to the method and means by which that care shall be taken. That is all of it. It will be made, as it has heretofore been made, a mere pretext for the delay of the consummation of that wish of the American people which to-day lies closest to the hearts of the voters of this country.

There is no mistaking the situation. The people of the United States realized this one fact, that the Almighty made these precious metals for use by man as money, and he made them for nothing else, you may say, except for decoration. They are not useful in any other sense; and people have realized that when a nation, whether it is Great Britain or the United States, undertakes to depart from that law and degrade and destroy one of these precious metals the penalties necessarily follow.

The penalties of Great Britain are twofold; first, the excessive riches of her ruling classes, and next, the excessive poverty of her subjects, not merely in that island of 35,000,000 people, but out through the whole broad reach of that great realm. To-day the people of India are suffering more from the fact that they have been impoverished for the want of means of living by the closing of the mints in that country than by any dispensation of Providence visited upon them through some other agency. These sufferings will come. The Almighty does not intend that these divine decrees shall be violated by the nations of the earth. He made these metals for use as money, and when we abolish their use, so as to give the control and dominion to one metal over the other and break down that competition which exists in their very nature, we violate that divine arrangement and that divine command. Nothing but punishment can ever fall upon a people who thus violate the laws of God and of nature. There is where it comes to.

Great Britain has done it and grown rich, but while she has grown rich in her upper and titled classes she has swept myriads of people into paupers' graves, broken up many millions of households, and has brought distress and despair to untold millions of human beings. In order to enrich her upper classes by giving predominance to gold, she visits destruction upon those who are upon the substratum—the peasantry, the producer, the toilers on land and sea. That is my conviction about it. The framers of the Constitution of the United States made a very wise, distinct, and firm provision, but if they had made no provision upon the subject, I would feel that I was raising a sacrilegious hand when I undertook to strike down one of the precious metals in order to make the other more valuable and the people who own it more powerful financially.

No man doubts that the use of gold in the world has built up enormous riches for those who are wise enough and mean enough to take advantage of humanity. No man can shut his eyes to that picture, or to the other in which humanity appears degraded, starved, diseased. When these things present themselves to us in the history that we are in contact with day by day and hour by hour, it is time for the American people to stop and consider whether they had not better conform their laws and their institutions to this divine command rather than conform them to the will of Great Britain.

I shall vote against concurring in the amendments to this bill.

Mr. MANTLE obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. I wish to make an observation in reference to the order of business.

Mr. MANTLE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I am only going to make a suggestion. What I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill is that it was the understanding when it was agreed that it might interrupt the progress of the appropriation bill that it would take but a short time, and the Senator from New Hampshire assured us that the debate would not be lengthy. I merely wish to say that if the debate is prolonged the Senate will soon be confronted with a condition in which the appropriation bills will be in danger. I shall consider it my duty very soon to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of appropriation bills. I make the suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire so that he may, if possible, arrange to get a vote on the measure.

Mr. CHANDLER. Neither the Senator from Maine nor myself would want to interrupt the Senator from Montana in the remarks which he is about to make. I believe after he has spoken we shall very shortly get a vote upon concurring in the House amendments.

Mr. HALE. I hope that will be the case, and that the Senator will contrive, so far as he can, to bring it about, because very soon we must get on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, I would not detain the Senate at all, for I know the time of the Senate is precious, were it not that this question is one which seems, from the nature of the debate and those participating in it, to involve peculiarly those Republicans who felt it their duty to dissent from the national platform adopted at St. Louis last summer and also to withdraw their support from the candidate nominated upon that platform. Having been one of those, I feel that it is not out of place at this particular time for me to say a few words.

I want to say at the outset that I am heartily in favor of any and every effort to bring about an international agreement with reference to the coinage of gold and silver upon equal terms. I recognize the fact that, although many of the leading journals of the country, many of the leading Republicans of the country, and, I believe, Senators in this Chamber, affect to say that that provision was placed in the St. Louis platform without any real purpose or sincere intent of carrying it into effect, the great majority of Republicans who supported the Republican platform in the last campaign accepted the pledge to promote an international agreement honestly and sincerely, and they are anxious to see the pledge redeemed if it be possible to do it.

Mr. President, I think the responsibility is with the Republican party to bring about this result. I do not think it is within my province to lay any obstacle in its path, nor is it my intention to do so. I would much rather aid in bringing about that consummation; for while I am an ardent believer in the proposition that this Government of ours is rich enough and strong enough to adopt its own financial policy, just as it does every other policy, without asking or waiting for the advice of any other nation, yet I concede that if an international agreement can be had, that is by all odds the most desirable method of bringing it about.

Mr. President, having said this much, I feel in all honesty bound to add that I am afraid, very much afraid, that this new attempt will meet the same fate which has attended every other effort in a like direction. There is nothing, so far as I have been able to discover in the proceedings of any international conference heretofore had, that holds out the slightest encouragement for success at this time; nor has anything transpired since the holding of the last international conference which, to my mind, holds out any real hope of ultimate or near success, and I say this with great deference to the opinion of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who I know differs from me in this opinion, but it seems to me that every interest of England, at least, is opposed to the proposition which we are advocating.

I say the responsibility is upon the Republican party, which is in honor bound to carry out the pledge made to the people. I have for the distinguished man who is soon to occupy the Presidential chair an unbounded admiration. I regard him as a splendid specimen of American citizenship, of American manhood, and American opportunity; and here, too, let me add that I can say the same of the distinguished gentleman who was his opponent in the late campaign. I believe each of them in his way is an honor and a credit to this country of ours. I believe that it is Mr. McKinley's intention to do all that lies in his power to bring about the consummation sought, and I feel that the effort ought to be made, even while my judgment and my conviction tell me that the effort will be futile.

I was one of those, as I have said, who found that in order to be consistent, to maintain my own self-respect, and to redeem the pledges which I and my party had made to the people I have the honor in part to represent, I could not remain with the party after the declaration contained in the St. Louis platform upon the question of bimetallism; and so I gave my support to the opposition candidate. I did that without any bitterness or ill will and without any unjust or unkind criticism of the party which I had left; and I may also say that there is no act of my life which caused me deeper regret or more profound sorrow than the act of separating myself from the party with which I had associated all my life, for I had never before cast anything but a Republican vote. That condition, however, was not my fault. The Republican party itself was to blame for the state of sentiment existing throughout the West, for they had led us to say to the Republicans in the West that the Republican party of the nation was the friend of silver; that it would solve the silver question; that it would do all that could be done in that direction; and we had repeatedly gone home from national Republican conventions preaching that doctrine to the people of the West, telling them that the Republican party was the friend of silver. Then we found ourselves suddenly confronted with this declaration in favor of maintaining the gold standard.

I know that there are leading Republicans of this nation who say that there is no practical difference between the declaration contained in the St. Louis platform upon the financial question and the declaration contained in the platform adopted at Minneapolis four years before, but it seems to me that it will require a great stretch of the imagination to so believe. The Minneapolis platform declared in favor of gold and silver as standard money, and when it used that word "standard" it has always seemed to me that it stated the whole case, for standard money is money that stands alone, that stands by itself, which does not have to depend upon some other form of money. There was the widest difference in those declarations; and, thus believing that the Republican party had abandoned one of its great cardinal principles of faith, I felt, in consideration of my own views, of my own earnest convictions, and in consideration of the sentiment existing among Republicans in my State, that I could no longer follow the Republican party in that declaration, in that aberration from what I considered its former belief and practice. It is needless, perhaps, for me to add that I was sustained by a large majority of the Republicans of the State of Montana in the course which I adopted.

Lately I have signed a declaration which seeks to organize the Silver Republican party of the United States. I have done that in pursuance of the same ideas and purpose, because I realize that so long as this great question divides us there is no possibility of Silver Republicans and Gold Republicans acting in unison.

Mr. President, this is not a happy condition of affairs for me to view. I sincerely hope that the Republican party may solve the financial question; that it may do justice; that it may restore to us the money of the Constitution; and if it does this, it will solve the greatest question now before the American people, and one in which is involved, as I believe, the happiness and prosperity and welfare of the great masses of our country. And if it shall do that successfully, the Silver Republicans will be the first to say "Well done," and we shall be happy to return.

It is said that a protective tariff will restore prosperity to the country. I do not think so, and yet I shall lay no obstacle in the path of a protective tariff. God knows, Mr. President, this country needs prosperity, and if a protective tariff will bring it, I say by all means let us have a protective tariff. I do not believe it will bring prosperity, because I believe industrial conditions throughout the world have reached such a stage of development that a protective tariff will no longer equalize the differences which exist, as it was wont to do in the years gone by; and so, after this protective tariff shall have been passed, I expect to see the same conditions largely prevail. Then this financial question will again confront us, and when it comes to that, as I have seen no reason so far to change my views, I shall continue in the future to act and vote upon that question as I have in the past. I can see no hope for a protective tariff to bring about the old condition of prosperity to this people. If we are to have any real, genuine, honest prosperity, it must begin with the masses of the people. All the wealth of this world comes from the earth; it comes up through the channels of labor, and any permanent prosperity which is to come to us must come through the toilers of the earth. They must be made prosperous, at least to a degree, before there can be any general and permanent prosperity for the whole people of this country.

Mr. President, I shall not take up the time of the Senate any further now, and I am sorry indeed that I felt called upon even to say this much at this stage of the parliamentary proceeding.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope we may have a vote now, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill now before the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I now ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, after line 9, to insert:

Amounts due the Central Pacific Railroad Company: To pay the amounts due the Central Pacific Railroad Company as set forth in House Document No. 284 of this session, $12,238.53.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 15, to insert:

Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, upon return to him of Treasury warrant No. 30, issued in July, 1896, for $541.26, and made payable to the order of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, in payment of the appropriation in that amount made by the deficiency appropriation act approved June 8, 1896, "To reimburse the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and others, defendants, for costs paid by them for printing in case of the United States of America, plaintiff, vs. The Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and others, defendants, in the United States circuit court for the northern district of Iowa, in pursuance of stipulation made between the parties and approved by the court in relation to said costs of printing," to issue his warrant to A. J. Van Duzee, clerk of the United States district court for the northern district of Iowa, in the same amount, who shall distribute and pay to the parties entitled thereto as provided by said stipulation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 11, to insert:

Payment of Treasury settlements: To pay the amounts found due the Sun Mutual, Commercial Mutual, Atlantic Mutual, and the assignees of the Washington Marine Insurance companies, of New York, by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and certified by the Secretary of the Treasury in Senate Document No. 178, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, and reported to the Senate in Senate Document No. 51, this session, $23,661.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 21, to insert:

For payment of certain Treasury settlements heretofore certified to Congress, numbered 9656 and 9696, and reported in House Executive Document No. 234, page 12, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 2, to insert:

For payment of Treasury settlement numbered 6301, certified in Senate Executive Document No. 40, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 6, to insert:

For payment of Treasury settlement numbered 5000, certified in Senate Executive Document No. 5, page 2, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 10, to insert:

To pay the claims (Treasury settlements) certified in Senate Document No. 60, second session Fifty-fourth Congress, $23,000.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert:

Reimbursement of D. N. Morgan: To reimburse D. N. Morgan, Treasurer of the United States, for five sheets of silver certificates, lost in his office without negligence on his part, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 4, to insert:

Reimbursement of J. W. Adams: To reimburse J. W. Adams, superintendent of the mint at Carson, Nev., for payments made to T. R. Hofer and L. L. Elrod for services, respectively, as acting chief clerk and bookkeeper at said mint, $301.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 9, to insert:

Reimbursement of A. P. H. Stewart and Charles A. Weed: To reimburse A. P. H. Stewart and Charles A. Weed, formerly doing business under the firm name and style of Stewart & Co., late of Mobile, Ala., for money advanced by them on behalf of the United States at said Mobile, in the year 1865, to pay freights and expenses on Government cotton, $21,541.68, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 18, to insert:

Payment to heirs of Sterling T. Austin: To pay to Florine A. Albright and Missouri A. Pollard, heirs of Sterling T. Austin, deceased, for the proceeds of sale of 360 bales of cotton, the property of said Sterling T. Austin, seized by the civil and military authorities of the United States and received into the Treasury, as found by the Court of Claims, $59,287.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if that is one of the Bowman claims?

Mr. HALE. To which one does the Senator refer?

Mr. VEST. The clause beginning in line 19, on page 10, for payment to the heirs of Sterling T. Austin.

I want to state to the Senator that it is my purpose, as soon as we reach one of the so-called Bowman claims, to offer an amendment including the balance of those claims.

Mr. HALE. I understand that that amendment will be offered at the end of the bill, and that will be a question for the Senate to decide. The committee did not put on the bill either the so-called Bowman claims or the French spoliation claims, but put on individual claims, which had already passed the Senate and passed the committee, but did not put on the general Bowman claims.

Mr. VEST. I want to state frankly that I should prefer, as one of the friends of the Bowman claims, to offer that amendment immediately in juxtaposition to this one, which has been preferred by the committee and put in the bill.

Mr. HALE. I prefer that the Senator should wait until the amendments of the committee are acted upon. He can offer the amendment, of course, at the end of the bill or at any part of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I should like, in this connection, to ask a question of the Senator, which has given rise to some inquiry on this side of the Chamber. By turning to page 90 of the bill I find a provision:

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims reported to Congress at its present session in House and Senate Document No. 217.

What claims are those which amount to $834,155.83?

Mr. HALE. Those are the regular judgments, the list of which is contained in the document referred to. The House puts in all the judgments that are certified up to the time when they make up the bill, and the Senate committee then calls for the subsequent judgments, and they are put into the bill, and are found, as the Senator will see if he wants to look at the items, in the document referred to, which the clerk of the committee will furnish him.

It is the same with the amendments on the next page regarding Indian depredations. The House of Representatives puts in all that are certified up to the time of their action upon the bill, and the Senate the balance. The document shows what the cases are.

Mr. VEST. What I want to know is whether they are connected with the Bowman claims?

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator from Maine whether there are any Bowman claims in the bill?

Mr. HALE. The Bowman claims are not here. There may be individual cases where the Senate has passed a bill for a special claim, and in which case they are, under the decisions of the Senate, in order; but the usual Bowman claims reported from the House and from the committee are not in this bill.

Mr. VEST. Some of them are, because the Chouteau claim is here. That is the identical claim——

Mr. HALE. I say there are certain claims which the Senate has already passed upon individually and separately that are in the bill, but what are called the Bowman claims are not here.

Mr. VEST. What does the Senator mean by saying, "the Senate has already passed upon?"

Mr. HALE. The Choteau claim first passed the Senate as a separate bill; it was put on the appropriation bill last year, passed through the Senate, went to the House, and was struck off there.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator from Maine were not the Bowman claims put on in the Senate by an amendment last year, agreed to by the House of Representatives, and then the President vetoed the bill, and when the new bill came in they were left out.

Mr. HALE. As also were the French spoliation claims.

Mr. BERRY. The Bowman claims and the spoliation claims also were left out.

Mr. HALE. That is what I said, as also the spoliation claims. The Committee on Appropriations has not now put on either the spoliation claims or the general list of Bowman claims. The Senate can put both on if it chooses, and let them go to the House.

Mr. MILLS. The Bowman claims are judgments of the Court of Claims, are they not?

Mr. VEST. Findings.

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows how they are judgments. They are judgments that are sent back for action by the committees of Congress. They are not like the judgments provision for which is found on page 90 of the bill, which are absolute and complete judgments.

Mr. VEST. The Bowman claims were put in the appropriation bill first by the Senate at the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, and at the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and by overwhelming majorities they passed the Senate. The Chouteau claim is one of the Bowman claims, because the proceeds are going to one of my constituents, and I know something about that.

Mr. PLATT. The claim the Senator is talking about is evidently a Bowman claim, not a judgment.

Mr. VEST. It is a judgment.

Mr. PLATT. Not a regular judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator from Maine to let either the list of all the Bowman claims be passed over or let them be considered together, or I will offer my amendment now.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the Senator offering it now.

Mr. VEST. Very good.

Mr. BURROWS. I ought to say, in answer to inquiries on this matter, that I hold in my hand the findings of the Court of Claims, or rather the action of the Court of Claims, upon the item to which the Senator from Missouri refers, from which it appears that the Court of Claims declined to take jurisdiction of the matter, upon the ground that a preliminary inquiry as to the loyalty of the party disclosed that he was not loyal.

Mr. VEST. What claim is that?

Mr. BURROWS. The claim of Sterling T. Austin, to which I understand the Senator refers. I have here the findings of the court in that case.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will allow me to suggest that the majority of the court did not find that there was any disloyalty on the first hearing, but that the loyalty had not been fully established; and out of a claim for some $300,000 they did find for the amount shown in this amendment, it being the amount received by the Government for certain identified bales of cotton for which the money is in the Treasury.

Mr. BURROWS. The item embraced in this bill?

Mr. WARREN. The item embraced in the bill for that portion of the claim—a little less than $60,000. The case was a very peculiar one. It at first balanced very nearly on the dividing line as to the loyalty of the claimant, that his loyalty was not sufficiently established in the minds of the majority of the court at that time, but since then the loyalty has been clearly proven. The original claimant is dead, and the bill is in the interest of the heirs, always loyal, deserving citizens of the United States.

Mr. BURROWS. May I inquire of the Senator whether the claim embraced in this bill was passed upon by the court?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; the court found for the amount named, but did not pass on the loyalty, except as I just stated.

Mr. BURROWS. That was my understanding.

Mr. WARREN. That was true; and this amendment is proposed in favor of the heirs who brought proof before the committee and before the Senate as to loyalty, and a bill for the payment of the claim was considered and unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims and unanimously passed by the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the matter has been passed over temporarily. It is in the amendment, as I understand it, to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri, embracing the findings of the Court of Claims; and if this is in the amendment, there is no use of passing upon it twice.

Mr. VEST. I now offer the amendment.

Mr. BATE. I have an amendment to offer in the name of my colleague [Mr. HARRIS], which is the same as Senate bill 2433, which was referred to the Committee on Claims. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] if it is the same bill that he has reported here? I have not seen his report.

Mr. BURROWS. I am unable to state, because I have not examined it; but I am informed by the clerk of the committee, who has compared it with the one introduced, that it is identical.

Mr. BATE. Then, if it is identical, the amendment I was about to offer on behalf of my colleague to this bill is unnecessary, for all we desire is to effect the object—that is, to get the provisions of that bill placed upon the appropriation bill. The bill I hold in my hand has a long list of what are known as Bowman claims, which have been examined and passed upon by the Court of Claims and referred to Congress for action.

Mr. VEST. They are identical.

Mr. BERRY. I would ask the Senator from Tennessee if that list of claims includes all claims which have been passed upon by the Court of Claims up to the present time, or is it simply a list that was in the bill a year ago?

Mr. BATE. I think there have been one or two added since. I think it includes all which were passed upon up to the commencement of this session.

Mr. BERRY. The bill of a year ago, I think, only included those claims which had been passed upon up to the beginning of the Fifty-fourth Congress. I think it did not include a large number which have been subsequently passed upon by the court.

Mr. BATE. I supposed the list contained all the claims passed at the last session, and upon the cursory examination I gave it, and upon conferring with the Senator from Missouri, I found but two exceptions. If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri embodies the same claims that are embodied in the bill to which I refer, I shall of course sustain the amendment, and I ask the Senator from Michigan whether two bills of the same kind were introduced?

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee is the same as the bill introduced by his colleague at the last session and reported upon, as the one offered by the Senator from Missouri at the present session, passed upon by the Committee on Claims, and reported back to the Senate with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to the fact that this bill was introduced on the 16th of December last? It has been before the committee of which he is a member, and I suppose the committee perhaps preferred the other bill, and that may be the solution of the matter.

Mr. BURROWS. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri was submitted in February of the present year.

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir. If I understand the Senator, his committee have made no report upon the bill introduced by my colleague on the 16th of December last.

Mr. BURROWS. I think not.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand, then, that the committee substituted the other bill, the one introduced by the Senator from Missouri, for the one introduced by my colleague? Was that the report?

Mr. BURROWS. I think that was the case.

Mr. VEST. The amendment I offer contains the claims that were embraced in the amendment which passed the Senate in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, except two claims which have been taken out and passed in special bills by both Houses of Congress, and signed by the President since that time. Of course those two claims are out, because it is unnecessary to reenact them. This amendment embraces 235 claims of claimants in 12 States of the Union and the District of Columbia. The whole amount of these Bowman claims is $567,901.45.

We established the Court of Claims for the purpose of relieving Congress from the drudgery of examining into the details of these personal claims which are brought before us from session to session. The Court of Claims have passed upon and adjudicated them; they were honestly due, and the claimants have been seeking here from session to session for the payment of as honest a debt as ever was incurred by any Government upon the face of the earth. The committees have passed upon them; and, as I said, the Senate has adopted them twice. The only possible argument that could be found against them was that the condition of the public Treasury was such that money could not be spared at that time to pay even an honest debt.

If the argument which has been made is worth anything on this case, it was a hundred times more forcible as applied to other claims that have been put by the committee in these bills. Some of those claims are now in the bill, conspicuously the Choteau claim. President Cleveland vetoed the bill at the last session expressly on account of the Chouteau claim, which he named in his message. Why should this discrimination be made? I stand here as the representative of the State of Missouri to state that these other claims are just and equally binding upon the Government, and the Chouteau claim has no superiority over any other in that regard. Why should we establish a tribunal and then ignore its findings? Does anybody pretend to say here that the money is not due? What excuse can we give? We are soon, it is said, to have an era of prosperity, with an overflowing Treasury, higher tariff, more money. Yet we say to these claimants, after our own tribunal, the Court of Claims, has passed upon the claims and adjudicated in their favor, "We will put you off to another season."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 11, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and known as the Bowman Act, namely:

Mr. STEWART. In regard to these claims, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that they have been referred to the Committee on Claims year after year. We have diligently examined them and reported them, and have continued to do so, and there is no doubt about the just indebtedness of the United States. If they can not be paid, I hope they will never again be referred to a committee of which I am a member. I do not want to be engaged in the idle work of examining claims and adjusting them and reporting them if Congress does not intend to pay them.

They are as honest debts as any the Government has, and it seems to me that after organizing a court and a committee, and having all the means in the power of the Senate to ascertain the justness of the claims, after they have been thoroughly examined, not only by the court but by the committee, they should not be refused consideration year after year. It seems to me this repudiation will be ascribed by the poor people who have claims against the Government to the fact that they have not the power and influence to enforce them. I think this Government, as great and strong and wealthy as it is to-day, should do by the poor as it does by the rich.

They have been kept waiting all the way from five to twenty-five years, struggling to get their rights. You will see that in a number of cases the money is to go to the administrator or legal representative. If the claims had been disposed of when they should have been, they would not be here now. They would not have accumulated. They have piled up, and now Senators say it is too much. I do not think it is dealing squarely with the creditors of the Government. I think they ought to be paid, and I hope that some disposition will be made of the claims. If they are never to be paid, let us know it and repudiate them squarely. To keep generation after generation waiting, refusing to make appropriations to pay their claims, it seems to me, is trifling with our credit and brings dishonor upon the Government. I hope we may have a vote upon the amendment, and that if these claims can not be paid now it will be understood that the Government intends to repudiate them.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, since I was on the floor before, I have examined the two amendments of which we have been speaking. The one presented by my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] was submitted on the 16th day of December. That was before the Committee on Claims, and I find the committee offered some amendments——

Mr. ALDRICH. It is impossible to hear what the Senator from Tennessee is saying.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind Senators that it is impossible to hear the remarks of Senators. There is constant complaint of conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. What became of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BATE. I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island addressed an inquiry to the Chair.

Mr. BATE. I did not hear it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask what became of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BATE. That is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question, upon which the Senator from Tennessee has been recognized.

Mr. BATE. I do not desire to make a speech upon it, although I might say with emphasis what has already been said by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] in regard to the character of these claims. They are just and proper claims; they have been passed upon by the Committee on Claims and are here, and the Government owes the money. But I do not care to go into that. I only want to put my colleague and myself right. The amendment, as I have said, was introduced on the 16th of last December, and the one now offered in January following. It went before the committee. The committee acted upon it and reported it favorably, and they have made some amendments in it. Some claims are inserted and some stricken out, especially those paid since, and the committee, regarding it as best, have adopted, it seems, in lieu the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with these amendments on it, and thus it stands. I desire to say that under these circumstances I will not press the amendment which has been offered by my colleague, notwithstanding I think it entitled to precedence; but I will heartily cooperate with those who are seeking to put through the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. But in point of fact, my colleague, Senator HARRIS, who is at this time sick and unable to be in the Senate Chamber, introduced on the 16th of December last the bill containing the list of claims which had been passed on by the Court of Claims.

Mr. VEST. I want to state, in order to dispose of this collateral question, that I did not know the Senator from Tennessee had introduced the amendment. I introduced it at the instance of a large number of claimants in my State who were pressing me upon the subject. I should very gladly have got rid of it, as of any other business, if I could.

I propose that the clause beginning with line 23, on page 46, down to and including line 15, on page 47, referring to this Chouteau claim, be added to the amendment and be stricken out of the body of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. VEST. It is to transfer the Chouteau claim from the body of the bill to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BURROWS. That will conform, allow me to say, to the amendment as reported by the Committee on Claims. The modification leaving out the Chouteau case is a modification made without the authorization of the committee.

Mr. VEST. That was in my original amendment, and was changed in the Appropriations Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22 of the amendment, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

For payment to Charles P. Chouteau, survivor of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, of St. Louis, Mo., the amount stated in the findings of facts by the Court of Claims on two separate occasions, to wit: First, in a proceeding under the general law (Ninth Court of Claims Reports, page 155); second, upon a reference by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives (Twentieth Court of Claims Reports, page 220) in the Forty-eighth Congress, said amount being the balance due and to be in full satisfaction of all claims arising out of the construction of the ironclad steam battery Etlah, constructed under the contract made by the Navy Department on behalf of the United States with Charles W. McCord on the 9th day of July, 1864, $174,445.75.

Mr. BURROWS. That conforms to the amendment as reported by the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, on the general subject of the payment of judgments awarded by the Court of Claims, I desire to submit a few observations.

The Congress of the United States by giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction of certain claims against the Government of the United States invited these claimants to enter its doors and make good their claims against the Government. A good many claimants against the Government have availed themselves of that invitation of Congress as embodied in the law and have filed their suits in the Court of Claims, and findings of the Court of Claims on the facts and on the amounts due have from time to time been handed down by that court and transmitted to Congress.

While that has been the case, and while Congress has from time to time appropriated money to pay some of these awards, it is a fact that none of the claimants whose awards have been favorably acted upon since 1890 have been paid. In the years from 1890 until now, the Court of Claims has been going on with its work of investigation of these claims and making awards in them, and yet Congress, having invited these claimants to present their claims to this judicial tribunal, has been recreant to its duty in respect to providing money to meet judgments after they have been rendered.

It is high time that the Congress of the United States should either pay these judgments or else say to the claimants that they do not intend to pay them. As it now stands, the Court of Claims is a tribunal in which these claimants are ensnared to the extent of going to the expense of employing lawyers and the payment of witness fees to make their claims against the Government, and after this tribunal, selected by the Government, shall have rendered this award in favor of the claimants, Congress withholds the money to meet the judgment. It is an outrage upon the claimants, and the time has surely come when these awards of the Court of Claims should be paid.

Mr. LINDSAY. I understand the amendment introduced by the Senator from Missouri is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri is pending, to which the Senator from Missouri has offered an amendment, which is now before the Senate.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I will wait until the pending amendment to the amendment is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator when the amendment to the amendment is disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment it is proposed to add——

Mr. HALE. Where does that come in? At the end of the amendment already adopted?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes.

Mr. VEST. My amendment came in after line 2 on page 11.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add on page 12, after line 2——

Mr. HALE. Have we reached page 12 of the bill? It ought to have been offered before the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment has not been adopted. It was the amendment to the amendment which was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. This is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I thought the amendment was just adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment which he offered has been agreed to, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] offers an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. HALE. Where is it to come in?

Mr. LINDSAY. After line 2, on page 12 of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 12, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Thomas W. Campbell, of Louisville, Ky., the sum of $5,142, being the amount found due him by the Court of Claims for property taken during the late war by the United States Army as reported to Congress in House Miscellaneous Document No. 25, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

To pay to Edward H. Murrell, amount collected by the Treasury agents of the United States from property in New Orleans, La., belonging to him and turned into the Treasury, the sum of $1,409.34.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 2, line 3, after the word "act," I move to strike out "namely" and insert "and all claims where the amount or amounts were found by said Court of Claims in its finding of facts in cases under the general jurisdiction of said court, namely."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, or some Senator who is familiar with what has been done in the last four or five minutes, what amount in the aggregate is involved in the amendment as it now stands?

Mr. VEST. I have not counted up the claims which we have just added, but the amount I read as in original amendment was $567,901.45. There has been something added—for Louisville, $5,000, in round numbers, and for Louisiana, $1,000; possibly $6,000 more.

Mr. ALDRICH. It must be evident, I think, to the Senator from Maine at this time that the proposition which I suggested this morning is now being acted upon. It is very manifest that the Senate is to put on the bill all claims which have ever been approved by the Court of Claims and all private claims that have been approved by any committee of this body or have ever passed the body; and if that is to be so, I do not know any reason why individual Senators who have claims which have never been approved by committees or perhaps have never been presented to the Senate should not take this opportunity of having the Government pay any claim which Senators think the Government is in justice bound to pay now or hereafter.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] says we ought to pay these claims now because they have been accumulating for the last seven years. I have an impression, which I think is shared by a great many people in this country, that the Treasury of the United States is not exactly in condition to pay the accumulated claims of two or three wars, and the accumulated claims which have been pending before the Court of Claims and before the various committees of this body for the last twenty-five years—I will not say for the last twenty-five years, because some of these claims have been pending fifty years.

Now, there can be but one result from this, it seems to me. Either the amendments will encounter fatal opposition in another body or the bill will meet the fate which a similar bill met last year, and deservedly met last year. I am not in the habit of indulging——

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the Senator why he thinks this bill will meet a similar fate? I am satisfied that if the authority to which he refers had any idea that these bills ought not to be paid he would have mentioned it in his message sent to us; but he carefully avoided making any comment upon this character of claims.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from West Virginia is much nearer the authority to which he refers than I am, and perhaps is a better representative of that authority upon this floor; I am only speaking now of what a man occupying the position to which he refers would feel bound to do, it seems to me, in a case of this kind; that is all.

Mr. FAULKNER. Why more so now than then?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose he will occupy the same position he did then. I understand the Executive veto last year was based largely upon the French spoliation claims. If there is any justice or equity in any claim, it certainly pertains to the French spoliation claims. They have passed the Court of Claims and have been through all the various formalities which the claims now presented have been through. I am not in the practice of criticising the Committee on Appropriations, because I know how arduous are their duties and how earnestly they try to do what is right; and I saw with great regret this morning that that committee had undertaken to discriminate in regard to private claims which have been pending before the Senate, and I knew the Senate would put upon this bill before it passed substantially every claim which is now pending before Congress or has been pending in the last twenty-five years.

Mr. HALE. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations last year was submitted to precisely the same thing when it put no claims on.

Mr. ALDRICH. But they were put on, I will state, by a combination of interests here. They were put on by the Senate itself——

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALDRICH. In opposition to its own rules or in spite of its own rules.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly a rule that the Senate committee always tried to observe of jealously excluding every claim was overruled, and claim after claim was put on—Bowman claims, spoliation claims, and other claims—much more numerous than anything that has been put on to-day or is likely to be put on to-day, I think.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that any justification for a standing committee of this body in bringing in amendments to an appropriation bill that are clearly an evasion of or in violation of its own rules?

Mr. HALE. Yes; the Senate Committee on Appropriations made no deviation from the course that was taken in the body last year, and it did not discriminate. It did not put on either the spoliation or the Bowman claims, because they were distinctively claims by themselves, and the spoliation claims were especially the ground of the President's veto; but it put on all the claims that came under the rule the Senate adopted last year, leaving it to the Senate to strike them out if it chose, or to take the chances with the House and with the President. Now, the Senate can put on thousands and tens of thousands of claims more if it chooses, and it is likely to do so; but it does not follow that it would not have done it if nothing had been put on by the committee, because last year when nothing was put on the same result was reached. The truth is, the Senate is bound to put these claims on and the result, quite likely, will be what it was last year running the gantlet of the House and the Executive, and not one of them will pass. Senators take that chance when they put these claims on the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to inquire if some of the Bowman claims are not in the bill?

Mr. HALE. There are some that have been segregated, which have heretofore passed the Senate, which are distinctive and by themselves.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to state that other claims have passed the Senate distinctively in the same way. These have been put on by the committee; they have been selected by the committee and taken out from that class and attached to this bill.

Mr. HALE. No; they have not.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 10 is the payment of the claim of the heirs of Sterling T. Austin.

Mr. HALE. That case has passed the Senate time and again distinctively.

Mr. DANIEL. So have these others.

Mr. HALE. No; they never were included in the list of the Bowman claims.

Mr. DANIEL. They are of the same class.

Mr. HALE. These never have been included in the Bowman claims. They were in a separate and distinctive bill.

Mr. DANIEL. They were found to be due by the Court of Claims.

Mr. HALE. If the Senate chooses to put on the Bowman claims, of course it can do it and take its chances. The Senate can make this bill, as it has heretofore, a bill of claims. The result will be, after a while the pendulum will swing back and the Senate will insist upon its rules that not one claim shall go on. But the reverse has been the case, and the Committee on Appropriations has now, for the first time, selected the claims that have already been passed by committees and put them on, and has taken the chances.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to ask the Senator if this claim is not put on under the rules of the Senate?

Mr. HALE. It is the rule that the Senate fixed at the last session.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not in the rules of the Senate that if an amendment is reported by a committee it may be offered as an amendment?

Mr. HALE. That is what the Senate has decided, that private claims may be put on this bill.

Mr. DANIEL. One, I think, is as much of a rule of the Senate as the other.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. I have not made any point of order against the Bowman claims, the Senator must have noticed.

Mr. DANIEL. I was only inquiring for information from the Senator. He seemed to forget that the Senate was following its own rule.

Mr. HALE. I do not make any point of order. I do not think any of them are in order under the written rules, but the Senate has decided otherwise.

Mr. DANIEL. It seems to me they are within the rule.

Mr. HALE. That is the decision the Senate has made. I do not think under the clause at the end of Rule XVI any claim is in order, but the Senate has decided otherwise, and has decided that a bill which has passed the Senate and has been reported by a committee has already been adopted by this body in one way or the other and is in order. I made no point on the Bowman claims on that account.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I realize that the opinion or the vote of any individual Senator is powerless in this matter. These claims and the interests they represent are so widespread, they reach into so many States and to the representatives of so many States, that my words are simply wasted. But I desire to suggest to Senators who have the responsibility of these enormous appropriations that if these claims are to be paid in spite of the established rules of the Senate, some period ought to be selected for their payment when the Treasury is in a different condition from what it is to-day, when the country is better able to pay, when the revenues are somewhere near adequate in view of these great expenditures. Wait until next year. I am in hopes we shall then have a revenue sufficient to pay any legitimate claims upon the Treasury. Postpone your zeal in behalf of your own constituents or your own friends for a while. Do not load up this bill with all the claims, as I have already stated, that have been pending before the Senate for a generation. We can not afford to do it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question before he sits down. He has been investigating this matter. Has he heard any suggestion anywhere, or will he make one himself, that these claims are not absolutely just and due from the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. There are two questions which I am suggesting to the Senate: First, that if these claims are just, they should be paid in another way and at another time. I am not undertaking to say whether the claims are just at all. They are here in violation of the rules of the Senate. They are put upon this bill in violation of the rules of the Senate. An appropriation bill is not the proper place to legislate for claims, whether they are just or otherwise.

Mr. HOAR. What is the proper place? The Senator says these are claims a generation old. The French spoliation claims, claims as honest, righteous, and just as ever existed, claims against the Government of France which we took and used to pay off a great international obligation and saved ourselves from war, perhaps, have been pending for over ninety years. These claims, the Senator says, are a generation old; that is, they are claims that we have not paid when the Treasury was full and running over; and I should like to know whether the Senators who object to this way of paying them believe them to be honest or not?

Mr. ALDRICH. I imagine some of them are honest and some of them are very dishonest; that is, if the truth could be accurately known. If the Senator wants a categorical answer, I have no doubt some of them are honest and some of them are very improper claims.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator mention those he thinks are dishonest? The Court of Claims has found them to be claims of a high order, and a committee of the Senate composed of eleven able Senators, every one of them fit to be chief justice of the State where he lives, or nearly every one of them, has examined them and found them all honest. Now, will the Senator point out which of the claims which these two tribunals have approved are defective?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts expects me to answer that question. I think the Senator must be as well aware as I am of the character of his own question.

Mr. HOAR. The reason why I do not expect my friend to answer the question is because he can not answer it without getting into a logical scrape.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think so at all. I have two reasons for protesting against placing all this class of claims upon this bill. In the first place, I say it is a violation of the rules of the Senate, which were adopted deliberately, or the authority of the Senate to prevent legislation upon appropriation bills, or to pay private claims upon general appropriation bills. That has been the policy of the Senate from the commencement. If private claims are just and honest, they ought to be passed in the ordinary and usual way, as other bills are passed. The Senator from Massachusetts is now in charge in the Senate of the general bankruptcy bill, the adoption of which he believes is essential to the continued prosperity of the country. There is no more reason why that bankruptcy bill should not be put upon this general deficiency bill, as far as the rules of the Senate are concerned, than that the claims which are now presented and which the Senator is advocating should be placed upon it.

Mr. HOAR. It is true I am in charge of a general bankruptcy bill, but I never proposed to have the United States go into bankruptcy, and if I did I should hope at least she would never go into fraudulent bankruptcy. I think the repudiation of these claims is just that.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no repudiation of claims at all involved in the course which I have suggested. It is that they shall be paid by legislation in the course which the Senate and House of Representatives have adopted to govern legislation of this kind. It is not that you shall put on by a logrolling scheme (and I do not mean to be offensive at all in that suggestion) all the claims which every Senator has ever presented to the Senate at any time and to pay them in one fell swoop from the Treasury of the United States when that Treasury is in the condition of our own to-day.

The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, has served for a long time upon the Committee on Claims, and I have no doubt that he has given a great deal of honest and conscientious work to his investigations in that direction; but the fact that the Court of Claims and the Committee on Claims have reported favorably bills to the Senate is no evidence to my mind that the Senate ought to violate its rules and pay those claims by a different method than is prescribed in those rules. If the Senator from Massachusetts is in charge of a claim here that is honest, it ought to be paid. With his zeal and intelligence and fidelity he can secure the passage of a bill here, and if the claim is of the nature he suggests it can be passed in the other House and become a law upon its merits, and not because it is placed here in an aggregation involving an expenditure of millions of dollars that he knows will secure votes enough on account of its magnitude to pass the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I will state the position in which we are placed. The Senate has found by experience the contrary of what my honorable friend from Rhode Island assumes. Let a claim be as clear as daylight, unquestioned by anybody, thoroughly sifted, found just by the ordinary courts of the United States, then referred to the Court of Claims and reaffirmed as just without a division, then brought to a committee of this body and scrutinized again, then pass this body and scrutinized again, and you carry it to another place and say to the highest authority there, "All this which I have just recited is the fact about this claim, this demand," and that authority will reply, "I know it; it is absolutely just and honest, and the citizen of the United States to whom it is due is suffering and poor and in distress, but I will not let this body act on it. I will not even submit it where a two-thirds vote is required, because if I do the gate will be opened and millions and millions of unjust, extravagant, and dishonest claims will pour in." That proceeding will be supported and submitted to, and the result is that these honest claims against the Government of the United States become old and stale and a burden, and wearisome to the flesh of everybody who has legislative responsibility here. At the same time that action will be accompanied by attacks in the press and attacks in deliberative bodies upon the Senate as a body that wastes time and discusses things, and does not carry out promptly the will of the people by reason of securing here an opportunity for debate.

The Senate of the United States had the rule which has been cited, and in view of that condition of things it adopted a year ago, and I do not know but earlier, a policy which is either a repeal of that rule or a destruction of it, one or the other, and declared that these things should be so enacted here that they at least should be presented to the other body, whose concurrence in legislation is necessary. While as an original question my honorable friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] and my honorable friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] are right, the thing is settled by precedent and construction here the other way, and it has been, in my judgment, righteously settled.

I do not think we ought to be frightened by the suggestion that there are so many of these claims pending against the Government. Either the Senate and the House of Representatives can be trusted to deal with them honestly, if they can be explained and discussed, or if they do not deal with them honestly when they are explained and discussed the public will find them out, and sooner or later they will furnish a remedy. The way to secure honesty of legislation in any free country is freedom, and not to put the legislative body into a straight waistcoat or tie it up in a sack. I have little respect for a man who keeps his credit good at his bank, pays his business paper when it is due, and cheats his grocer or his washerwoman because they can not affect his credit. And I have as little patriotic pride in that particular in a country that prides itself on the scrupulous good faith with which it pays its bonds and cheats by these delays or evasions honest citizens whom it has plundered of the property which belonged to them under its Constitution and laws.

The Senator from Rhode Island talks about logrolling. I never heard of this amendment until I came into the Senate, long after it had been offered and when the discussion had gone on for some time. But how is it possible that these claims, every one of which in its order has passed the Court of Claims and has passed the Committee on Claims, can be liable to such a charge? It is the regular bill intended to carry out the judgments of the Court of Claims, which comes in here as carefully guarded to secure against such an evil method of legislation as it is possible for the wit of humanity to guard.

Mr. President, we enacted the Bowman Act, which was an act drawn by a very industrious and useful colleague of my own, whose legislative career was cut short too soon for the interests of the Commonwealth and of the country he so faithfully served. It was regarded as a great measure of legislation. We said: "We are going to do what few governments on earth do. We are going to let the citizen who has got a good claim against his country come into court as an equal and have his fair trial before a court of our own selection, before learned judges appointed by the President and approved by the Senate." And now when those judgments come in, where all the care and safety of a judicial inquiry exists, where the Attorney-General was present, and where the court, if it erred at all, errs by the common judgment of everybody who knows about it in an overscruple, I think we are bound to see that justice is done the people who have these just claims. If we can do it in accordance with our ordinary rule, very well; but by the rules, through the rules, or over the rules, I think this justice ought to be done to these citizens.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not think that any person in the Senate or out of it can properly accuse the Senate of the United States of illiberality in their treatment of private claims or injustice in regard to private claims. We have, under the rules of the Senate, nearly 365 days in the year, when the Senate is in session for that length of time, or whatever number of days it may be in session, during which private bills and private claims may be considered by this body, and there is no restraint upon any Senator offering claims of this kind. They go to the Committee on Claims of this body, which no man has ever ventured to accuse of illiberality in their treatment of claims. They are then reported to the Senate, and each case is treated upon its merits and passed upon by the Senate, or should be, with deliberation. They are then sent to the other House for its approval, and to the Executive for his approval. Those bills can be considered in order at any time and in order anywhere except upon general appropriation bills.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. There are many of these bills which have passed the Senate once, twice, three, four, and as many as five times. I have known of entirely unobjectionable bills passed by the Senate at each session of Congress for as many as four succeeding Congresses which did not pass the House. They would go over there and everybody there said they did not have any opportunity to have them taken up and considered. So they go and come. If you look at the history of these bills, you will find that many of them, as I have said, have passed repeatedly in every Congress, and what are we to do about it?

Mr. ALDRICH. During my sixteen years of service in the Senate I have very rarely known the Senate to refuse to pass a bill to pay any private claim which had any pretense of honesty in it.

Mr. STEWART. The Senate does not refuse to pass the bills. The refusal is in the other House.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no doubt about that. If those claims pass the Senate and do not receive the approval of a coordinate branch of this Government, are we to say that "unless you do approve those specific bills there are to be no appropriations made to carry on the Government"?

Mr. STEWART. We do not intend that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Shall we say to the other body, "We will force you to do one of two things—either that no appropriations shall be made for this Government or else you must take them with the additions that we propose"? Are you going to say to those gentlemen that these claims, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, whether the claims are just or unjust——

Mr. STEWART. They are just.

Mr. HOAR. If my honorable friend will allow me, I did not say that.

Mr. STEWART. I do not accuse the House of injustice, but that it does not consider such bills and has not considered them. They are not taken up, and can not be taken up.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Nevada will allow me to go on with what I have to say.

Mr. STEWART. I do not say that those bills are not reported by the House committees, but that they are not considered by the House itself.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I did not say what he has attributed to me.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not desire to misquote the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Massachusetts deliberately said that by the rules, or over the rules, these claims must be paid.

Mr. HOAR. That is a very different thing from saying what the Senator just stated, that I had said whether they were just or unjust they must be paid.

Mr. ALDRICH. Wait a moment. The Senator from Massachusetts can not undertake to say to me or anybody else that he knows whether those claims are just or unjust or proper in amount.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not within the power of any man, however great his ability may be, to know whether such claims are just or not; and when the Senator says that those claims, by the rules, or through the rules, or over the rules, are to be put into an appropriation bill, it becomes a menace, a threat to the House of Representatives and to the President of the United States, that "if you do not sign this bill, including these claims, then the Government of the United States must stop for the want of appropriations."

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will allow me for a moment——

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I said that these claims were ascertained to be just by the court of our own creation, by the committee of our own creation, and by the Senate; and being so ascertained, that, if I could accomplish it, they should pass by the rules, through the rules, or over the rules. That I stand by.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me——

Mr. ALDRICH. I decline to yield.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator to allow me a word further. When the Senator from Rhode Island stated that I had said those claims should be put on whether they were just or unjust—not purposely, I know, but very carelessly, very recklessly, very unjustly—he made a gross perversion of my language.

Mr. ALDRICH. If I understand the position of the Senator from Massachusetts—I certainly have no desire to misrepresent him—it is this: That the Court of Claims has said that these claims were just, and the Senator from Massachusetts, or the Committee on Claims of this body, have said they were just.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. ALDRICH. And the Senate having said they are just, though the House of Representatives do not agree with that opinion, and the President of the United States, clothed by the Constitution with authority of approval or disapproval of those measures, should conclude that they were not just, that then, through these rules or over these rules, I will force those gentlemen to accept these claims, whatever may be their character.

Mr. HOAR. That is your logic, and not my statement at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. If that is not the logical conclusion from the Senator's statement, I do not understand the English language.

Mr. HOAR. My friend will pardon me. He understands the English language very well. He does not understand logic the least in the world. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I used the word "logrolling," and the Senator suggested that there is no logrolling in this scheme. I said I did not intend to use the word "logrolling" in an offensive sense. I said these claims reached out in so many directions and included so many States and so many Senators that it was impossible here to resist their adoption upon the floor of the Senate. That is what I said; and I meant no offense to any Senator by saying it. I said that this amendment and those referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] are only the commencement of the amendments to be offered this afternoon and adopted by the Senate. The $600,000 involved in this amendment will grow, as the Senator from Maine knows, before this bill is passed, into so many millions, or more; and all I ask and all the suggestion I have to make is a word of protest, which I know is absolutely futile and useless, that this legislation ought not to be carried on in this way and ought not to be adopted at this time, in the present condition of the Treasury.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Claims never puts a claim into this bill which has been rejected by the other House. That, I believe, is a rule well understood. There are many claims in this bill which have repeatedly passed the Senate and have been repeatedly approved by the committees of the House of Representatives. After they have gone through Congress after Congress, and have not been acted upon, it is not antagonizing the other House or questioning its judgment when it is a notorious fact that that House has never had an opportunity to vote upon the bills. If they had been rejected by the House of Representatives they would not have been put into this bill.

There may be some bills which have been rejected by the other House, perhaps, but I think it is very seldom that such bills have been subsequently reported favorably by the Senate committee. But when they have been once discussed in the other House and rejected on their merits, the committee regards that as the end of the claim. But these bills have been repeatedly passed through the Senate, and the only reason assigned by anyone in the H use of Representatives for their not passing there is that there is no opportunity to bring them to the attention of the House. You go to the chairman of a committee there and inquire what has become of a bill, and he will say, "Here it is; a just bill, but I can not get the eye of the Speaker; I can not get the bill up; there is so much other business pressing." It can not be done; the House can not consider it.

The fact that the House of Representatives can not consider these claims and does not consider them imposes an additional duty on the Senate to bring them to the attention of the House in some form. A single bill involving two or three hundred dollars, which has been reported upon favorably and about which there has been no doubt, does not attract attention in the House, and can not in that large assemblage, in the way it is organized. There is no disguise about the fact that they can not consider these bills in detail, and do not do it.

Mr. TURPIE. I offer an amendment to the pending amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, line 21, after the word "claims," it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representative of the estate of George McDougal, the sum appropriated in the general deficiency bill of August 4, 1886, to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of John Paul Jones, administrator, in the same manner as though said judgment had been affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to wit, the sum of $81,250, but without interest or costs, which said sum shall be accepted in full for all claims for principal and interest.

Mr. HALE. Is that reported by any committee?

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, the validity of this claim has been reported from the Committee on Claims, in support, however, of a separate bill which was passed by the Senate six days ago. This claim passed the Senate at the last session. It has gone to the other House and has been favorably reported there, but it has not been acted upon, and will not be reached. It has passed twice through the favorable report of the Committee on Claims of the Senate after it had been adjudged in the Court of Claims. It has every possible evidence of verity. The foundation of it is for meat and flour—$80,000 worth of it—sold to the commissioners of the United States to treat with the Indians in 1850, in their country which we had taken possession of without treaty and against treaty. These supplies were furnished at that time when the Indians were almost at war against the miners of California. The claim has been ever since pending. It has not been denied; it has never been disputed; it has always been admitted.

I think it is perfectly in order to offer it, and that it is not subject to the point of order. I know that Senators have urged against a claim of this kind that it is in violation of the rule. I submit such claims are not in violation of any rule; that they are not urged against any rule. The Senate has a right to make a rule to-day in any case and by any vote, and that special rule bears the same resemblance as a special act does to a general law. It is as regular, it is as constitutional as any printed rule there is numbered among those published as such. Those laws published as such were made by the aggregation of votes; they were made, if I may use the colloquialism, by logrolling; they were made by compromise; and the Senate may to-day make a special rule in favor of this claim or in favor of any claim by special vote for its allowance.

Nor is this claim urged against the coordinate branch of the Legislature. It is not a matter outside of conference or concurrence. It has not been rejected in the House, and it is submitted in this bill as the Bowman claims are submitted to the House; just the same.

The conference committee is composed of an equal number of members of both Houses, and when it acts upon either claim both Houses act, and when they concur or nonconcur in a report the Houses must afterwards act upon the action of the committee before it.

There is no possible parliamentary objection to the consideration of this claim or any of those which are offered as amendments.

Mr. HALE. If the amendment comes under the rule the Senator declares it does, then that is the end of it. I want to say, however, to Senators that they should bear in mind that the more heavily this bill is loaded the more danger it will encounter elsewhere. I do not need to elaborate that. Every Senator knows that. I should like to have a vote on the amendment which has been presented by the Senator from Missouri, and then go on; and after this I must insist that the order be carried out, that the committee amendments, as they are reached in the reading of the bill, shall be acted upon, and when we are through with those amendments, then Senators, in their discretion and in their judgment, must consider whether it is worth while to seek to put everything onto this bill.

The rules and the policy which the Senate has adopted in the last year or two are very liberal, but they may be well found to react against the very object of those rules and prevent anything being done. So, Mr. President, I hope we may now have a vote upon the proposition of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has an amendment pending to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the pending question is upon the amedment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and the amendment of the Senator from Indiana will first be disposed of.

Mr. HALE. Let me say further, Mr. President, that I am very desirous that we should pass this bill, and if it shall be passed, as it easily can be, unless hindered by discussion, by 6 or half past 6 o'clock, then there will be no need for an evening session, because then the committees of conference can go to work. But if the bill is delayed and runs over that time, we shall have to take a recess and have a night session, and the Senators know that if that can be avoided, after those we have had, it is worth their while.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to prevail.

Mr. VEST. I want to make a single statement to the Senator from Indiana. I want to state that I will vote for the amendment of the Senator, but I would prefer, if agreeable to him, not to put the claim provided for in his amendment on the Bowman claims. It is not one of those claims. They are sui generis, under the Bowman Act, while this claim is not. I will vote for it because it is a just claim; I have no doubt, if the Senator states so, but I do not want to endanger the Bowman claims.

Mr. TURPIE. I will submit to the Senator from Missouri, and to the Senate also, that although this is not properly a claim under the Bowman Act, as there is no question of loyalty involved in it, the original claim being that of an Indianian for supplies furnished to the Indians of California upon the order of our commissioners engaged in the acquisition peaceably of the gold mines in California. McDougal took the same place that Vigo did with George Rogers Clark in the Northwest, in furnishing commissary supplies to the Federal commission in 1850, at that time treating with the Indians of California. Although this is not properly offered as a Bowman claim, yet it was considered by the Court of Claims in the same manner as those under the Bowman Act, and received the same adjudication with reference to its correctness, its verity, its honesty, and I trust it will not be excluded from the category of cases which are now to be added to this bill.

These provisions were furnished to the Indians at the request of United States commissioners and were paid for in drafts upon the Department of the Interior, which the Department refused to pay because no appropriation had been made for that purpose. More than forty years have since elapsed. Let us make the appropriation now. The amount includes no interest; it only covers the face of the drafts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANIEL. Was the vote taken on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submitted the question, and the "noes" seemed to prevail; but the Chair will again submit to the Senate the question on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I would state that the amendment which I send up is an award or finding by the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 9 of the amendment, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

To Marie Eliza Payne, of Natchitoches Parish, $5,476.

Mr. VEST. Is that under the Bowman Act?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir; it is under the Bowman Act, and has been adjudicated by the court.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ROACH. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to offer an amendment which I think ought to come in here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

That out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated there be paid to the heirs of Margaret Kennedy, the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, the sum of $1,621.56, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Margaret Kennedy," approved October 19, 1888: Provided, That the amount herein provided to be so paid to the heirs of said Margaret Kennedy is to be in full compensation for all claim or demand of the heirs of said Margaret Kennedy, as the executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, or of the claim or demand of the heirs or representatives of said John Kennedy by reason of timber, fences, fruit trees, and other property taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war of the rebellion from the farm of said John Kennedy in the District of Columbia, being the farm on which Fort Sedgwick was erected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think that ought to be passed.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will not object to that claim. The man has been here for twelve years that I know of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I must ask that the rule be enforced and the bill be read so that the committee amendments may be taken up. That course has already been agreed to. Then after that is through Senators can offer their amendments. That has always been the rule, and I must insist upon its being enforced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, after line 2, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 90, in line 12, after the word "seventeen," I move to insert "and Senate Document No. 167."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 91, in line 8, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment striking out "thirty-six thousand eight hundred and seventy-one" and inserting "seventy-five thousand two hundred and fifty-three," before the word "dollars," was agreed to, and that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 91, beginning in line 8, after the word "session," I move to strike out the words "one hundred and thirty-six thousand eight hundred and seventy-one dollars and fifty cents" and to insert "two hundred and four thousand twenty-seven dollars and sixty-six cents."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 70, after line 3, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 3, on page 70, it is proposed to insert:

To pay the amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in favor of Edward Baxter, special assistant United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee, on account of the appropriation for the special assistant attorneys, United States courts, for the fiscal years as follows: For the fiscal year 1896, $2,000; for the fiscal year 1895, $2,000; for the fiscal year 1894, $2,000; for the fiscal year 1893, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 35, after line 11, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

For the opening of North Capitol street northward through the property of Annie E. Barbour and others, and to pay the owners of the land necessary to be taken for public use in the extension of said North Capitol street according to the report of the appraisers appointed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia March 16, 1894, to appraise the land necessary for the extension of said North Capitol street, as said report was confirmed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia June 22, 1894, and finally adjudged by the court of appeals of the District of Columbia March 4, 1895, so far as the same relates to the land of said Annie Barbour and others. That the following sum is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, for the purposes following, namely: $21,078 to pay the award of said appraisers, confirmed and adjudged as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is all.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I wish to say, however, that if we can finish the bill in the course of the next half hour, there will be no necessity for an evening session so far as the Committee on Appropriations are concerned.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to what I suppose is an omission on the part of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say, if the Senator will pardon me, that I hope there will be a brief executive session before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine——

Mr. MARTIN. I offer an amendment, which has been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the amendment is read, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not.

Mr. HALE. Let me say further, in addition to my suggestion, that the report of the conferees on the sundry civil bill will be in when this bill is finished.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator from Alabama for the purpose of making a correction in an amendment which has been passed over.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to what I suppose is an omission.

Mr. HALE. I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. On page 4, line 16, there should be inserted after the word "respectively" the words "their heirs or assigns," so that the money can be taken by those to whom it belongs.

Mr. HALE. Those words may be inserted.

The SECRETARY. After the word "respectively," in line 16, page 4, it is proposed to insert the words "their heirs or assigns;" so as to read:

Spanish and American Claims Commission: To enable the Secretary of State to distribute and pay to the claimants, respectively, their heirs or assigns, the sums due them upon a balance of net increment received by the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 8, on page 40, it is proposed to insert:

For the compensation and reimbursement of Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va., for the occupation of its buildings and grounds by United States troops and officers for the period of about eight months, said occupation commencing in April, 1865, and for injury to and destruction of the buildings, the apparatus, libraries, and other property of said college by said troops and officers, the sum of $25,000, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money be so paid except upon accounts of such occupation, injury, and destruction, and the damage caused thereby, duly verified and proven.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. On page 90, after line 17, I move to amend by inserting what I send to the desk. It is in order under the rules.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, on page 90, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, $80,907, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being compensation in full for the use by the United States, to wit, in 66,907,513 cup-anvil cartridges, of the invention secured to John C. Howe and his assigns by letters patent of the United States issued to him August 16, 1864, and numbered 43851, during the entire term of said letters patent, as appears in the findings of law and of fact made by the United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut in the case of Forehand and others vs. Porter, reported in volume 15 of the Federal Reporter, at page 256, and as further appears in the findings of fact made by the Court of Claims, after full testimony and full hearing in Congressional case No. 1, entitled Forehand and others vs. The United States, heard on reference of the matter to said Court of Claims by the Committee on Claims of the Senate under and pursuant to the act of March 3, 1883, commonly known as the Bowman Act, said findings of fact having been certified to the Committee on Claims of the Senate by said court on the 26th day of April, 1889.

Mr. HALE. From what committee does that come?

Mr. HOAR. From the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORDON. On page 86, at end of line 20, I propose to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the said named parties are severally selected by the Fifty-fifth Congress to fill the several positions now severally held by them in the House of Representatives: And provided further, That if these said named parties are not so selected, then these several sums shall be paid to those who are selected to fill these several positions respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to come in after line 17, on page 5.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, on page 5, it is proposed to insert:

For editing, under the direction of the Secretary of State, with a view to future publication, all reports, papers, and documents belonging to the United States relating to the war of the Revolution, and the operation, organization, and administration of the forces therein engaged, now in the custody of the State Department, $15,000.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] was adopted, in regard to the heirs of Margaret Kennedy, to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], as I desire to offer it as a separate amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAY. I offer the amendment to come in on page 12, after line 14.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated there be paid to the heirs of Margaret Kennedy, the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, the sum of $3,000, less any sum heretofore paid her in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Margaret Kennedy," approved October 19, 1888: Provided, That the amount herein provided to be so paid to the heirs of said Margaret Kennedy is to be in full compensation for all claim or demand of the heirs of said Margaret Kennedy, as the executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, or of the claim or demand of the heirs or representatives of said John Kennedy by reason of timber, fences, fruit trees, and other property taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war of the rebellion from the farm of said John Kennedy in the District of Columbia, being the farm on which Fort Sedgwick was erected.

Mr. MCMILLAN. On page 18, after line 6, I move to insert:

For rifle practice and matches for the fiscal year 1897, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. From the Committee on Claims I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, page 11, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Briscoe B. Bouildin, deputy collector of internal revenue, the amount of expense incurred by reason of wounds inflicted while in the discharge of duty, $205.15.

Mr. DANIEL. I will state, in brief, that a bill to this end has twice passed the Senate. It was favorably reported in the House and it is recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of line 15, on page 42.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That in order to reimburse Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn., for the use and occupation of the building and grounds and for consumption of materials, for the injury to its buildings, apparatus, cabinets, and other property injured or destroyed by troops of the United States during the late war, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the proper authorities of said institution, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum, not exceeding $25,019.96, as the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, under direction of the Secretary, may find to be duly proven on account of such injury and destruction, use, occupation, and consumption of the building and grounds of said college.

Mr. HAWLEY. I invite attention to page 97. I move to strike out from line 22 down to and including line 6, on page 98. It will take quite a little time to state the case in full.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am working in the interest of officers' claims which have been established three times at least by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Beginning in line 22, on page 97, it is proposed to strike out:

That hereafter the accounting officer of the Treasury shall not receive, examine, consider, or allow any claim against the United States for pay or allowances which have been or may be presented by officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, which have heretofore been or may hereafter be adopted as the basis for the allowance of such claims, which accrued more than six years prior to the institution of proceedings on which such decisions were or may be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator from Alabama a further amendment?

Mr. PUGH. Yes, sir. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which has been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let us hear what it is.

The SECRETARY. After the Bowman claims amendment, which has been adopted, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Mobile Marine Dock Company, or to its authorized agent or attorney, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $36,202.65, in full payment for the use and occupation of and damage to property taken of said company from April 16 to November 15, 1865, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer an amendment to come in after line 17, on page 73.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

That the proviso in the act of May 20, 1896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, which reads as follows: "That in the ninth judicial district, in addition to the term or terms held in San Francisco, a term of the circuit shall be held in each year in two other places in said district, to be designated by the judges of said court," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer an amendment to come in on page 9, after line 14.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Catherine Burns, of Annapolis, Md., the widow of Lewis Burns, for pay and rations as mate on the United States ship Potomac, from April 4, 1871, to July 9, 1873, heretofore certified to be due by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and certified to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury as a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for prior years, the sum of $701.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 14, on page 12.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That for the purpose of encouraging the propagation of the blue and silver fox the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue leases to the islands of North Semidi, South Semidi, Ukomok, Long Island, Little Koniushi, Pearl Island, Carlsons Island, Little Naked Island, and Marmot Island, in Alaska, for a period not exceeding twenty years, for the purpose of breeding and domesticating blue and silver foxes; and he may issue leases of such other islands in Alaska for this purpose as may seem, in his opinion, to be in accordance with the public interest; all such leases to be held under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That persons actually engaged in caring for and domesticating such foxes on any of said islands shall be accorded the preference right to lease the island or occupy the same under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and such lessee shall have the privilege of killing the foxes and disposing of their furs, subject to the rules and regulations aforesaid.

Mr. THURSTON. I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 8, on page 40.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

To pay Henry T. Clarke, of Omaha, Nebr., for the value and rent of buildings on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2, township 13, range 13, Fort Crook, Nebr., and being the buildings on said land acquired by the United States by condemnation proceedings in the suit of the United States against Henry Zucher in accordance with a proposition made by Henry T. Clarke to the Secretary of War, on July 29, 1889, which said proposition was for the sale of land to the United States for a new Fort Omaha, now Fort Crook, and by which proposition all said buildings were retained by the said Henry T. Clarke, $2,000, the same to be received and accepted by said Henry T. Clarke in full for all claims against the United States for or on account of said buildings.

Mr. MANTLE. I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 19, on page 60.

The amendment was read, as follows:

To C. J. Baronett, of Gardiner, Mont., for the bridge known as "Baronett's Bridge," over the Yellowstone River, and the approaches thereto, $5,000.

To James C. McCartney, of Gardiner, Mont., for certain buildings at or near Mammoth Hot Springs, taken and used by the United States, $3,000.

To Matthew McGuirk, of Los Angeles, Cal., for certain buildings at or near Mammoth Hot Springs, taken and used by the United States, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. On page 5, after line 17, I submit an amendment to come in after the committee amendment already adopted.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Emile M. Blum, for services as commissioner-general to the international exposition at Barcelona, Spain, the sum of $5,000 and to James M. Seymour, jr., for services as assistant commissioner the sum of $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to Senators to let the bill with all that has been placed upon it be put upon its passage.

Mr. WHITE. That would be unjust to those of us who have had no part in filling it up.

Mr. HALE. I certainly did not know that there was any Senator here who did not have a part in it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have an amendment I should like to have go in the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is a matter I can not control. I hope Senators will see what the result will be, however.

Mr. QUAY. I desire, I will say to the Senator from Maine, to reduce the bill slightly instead of adding to it. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to page 64. I propose to strike out line 25, on page 64, and on page 65 to strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4. I am not acquainted with the facts in relation to the claim, but I am told by a gentleman that the beneficiary of the appropriation was at the time the service was rendered to the Interior Department an Indian agent and under pay from the Government. It is the item for payment to J. R. Jewell.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that. That will give an opportunity for us to look into it in conference.

Mr. QUAY. Yes; let it go into conference. I am not personally acquainted with the facts. It is said that the salary would be duplicated and that the service rendered was worthless.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph moved to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 64 and 65 strike out:

Payment to J. R. Jewell: To pay J. R. Jewell, of Olean, in the State of New York, for his services, rendered for the Interior Department, in investigating and reporting upon the alleged interest of the so-called Ogden Land Company to or in the reservation lands of the Seneca Nation of Indians, in the State of New York, $500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to strike out of the text of the bill what has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I offer an amendment on page 40 to come in after the amendment already adopted, which follows line 8.

The amendment was read as follows:

Arming and equipping the militia: The permanent annual appropriation made by the act of April 23, 1808, designated as section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, and which was increased to $400,000 by the act of February 12, 1887, being for the procurement of ordnance stores and quartermasters' stores and camp equipage, shall also, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be available for the procurement of other military stores, including official publications of the War Department for the use of the militia of the country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I have two amendments to offer. I move to add to page 59, line 22, what I send to the desk. I have attracted the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to this amendment, and I think there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 22, page 59, insert:

To pay amount found to be due under contracts for the survey of public lands in the State of California prior to June 30, 1890, $34,834.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. The next amendment I propose is to strike out. I desire to make a motion for the purpose of getting an explanation from the Senator in charge of the bill. I refer to the last seven lines on page 90, which I move to strike out, being an allowance of $1,310,427.08 to the Southern Pacific Company. I understand this is upon a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims. We all know that the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Government is a matter in process of adjustment or that must be adjusted. This, it is true, is a judgment in favor of the Southern Pacific, but I notice that in the testimony which was taken before the Fifty-third Congress the attorney of the Southern Pacific Company, Judge Payson, testified as follows:

The Southern Pacific Company has leased the Central Pacific for ninety-nine years upon the payment of a certain amount of money guaranteed, and whether there is any provision of the lease between the Central Pacific Company and the Southern Pacific Company as to these outside expenses I do not know; but I should say, practically, it does not make any difference what the contract is, because, substantially, the shareholders of one are the shareholders of the other, and it is like paying out of one pocket into another pocket of the same man's clothes.

There are judgments in favor of the Central Pacific Company which are held up in consequence of the position of matters between that corporation and the Government, and it appears to me that it may be that in the equitable adjustment of the entire subject, the same persons being interested in both corporations, and the one being merely nominally different from the other, the Government may have a valid reason for not paying the money and appropriating it for defraying the indebtedness of the Central Pacific if it be found that they are really operated as one institution and by the same individuals. Therefore it appears to me it ought to stand over and not be on this bill, and I move to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 90, lines 18 to 24, inclusive, the following words:

To pay balance of judgment of the Court of Claims No. 10697, in favor of the Southern Pacific Company, certified to Congress in House Executive Document No. 168, Fifty-third Congress, second session, $1,310,427.08.

Mr. HALE. This is the same kind of appropriation that has been made for years and years. They are judgments rendered for this company which are not legally offsetable. I do not think it worth while to take any time of the Senate, because there is no Senator here who has not heard the matter discussed over and over again. The policy of the Senate has been fixed for these appropriations for years. I am willing to have a vote upon the question at once.

Mr. WHITE. I simply wish to say that I do not concur with the Senator that it is clear they are not offsetable, as he says. I think the circumstances are such that it may be developed the Government has a proper offset for this item. But I do not wish to detain the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to be heard upon it. I want to ask the Senator from Maine what has been the policy of the bill?

Mr. HALE. Such claims are proposed to be paid.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand from another member of the committee that this same identical claim has been before the Committee on Appropriations year after year for several years, and they have rejected it.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senate has put matter of this kind on the bill for at least a dozen years.

Mr. MORGAN. This proposition has always been rejected heretofore by the committee, I am informed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the same claim that the Senate has put on the deficiency bill repeatedly. The House has stubbornly and determinedly opposed it and never would permit it. Now, the House comes in and inserts it in the deficiency bill. It is believed by some, you know, that the cause was the enormous contribution to a certain fund which was used up to and prior to the day of election in November last. Whether that was true, I do not know, for I have not the secrets of it; but I am stating that that is believed by many to have been one of the inspiring causes which brought the House to make this appropriation, when it had fought it so stubbornly year after year.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator should make any imputation of that kind upon another branch. I have no idea that there is anything whatever in such a rumor. The Senator knows from our experience about other matters that it happens every year in our lives that we put on items, the House stubbornly resists, and, upon reflection, the House changes its ground and puts it on a subsequent bill. This bill has several other items which the House has resisted year after year, and, doubtless becoming convinced, they put the items on the bill as they have done in this case.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the point. What convinced them? That is the objective point. It is the charge and belief of very many good people that it was the contribution of the president of the road of a large sum of money to be used during the last campaign.

Mr. HALE. I do not suppose there is the least foundation for believing that such a charge had any influence whatever upon the House. As I have said, the House does that in other matters where there could possibly be no connection with such a charge; and I should not want to make such an insinuation against the other body as being influenced by a thing of that kind. I have no idea there is anything whatever in it; but I am entirely willing to take the vote of the Senate upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I rose to sustain the position of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. I had neither any information nor any suspicion of the political use that might be made or had been made of this item of appropriation. I am informed that for the last eight or ten years, ever since that judgment was rendered, the House has persistently refused to put it on any appropriation bill or to make any provision of law for it in the way of an appropriation. The reason of the refusal, I understand, has been the pending unsettled state of accounts between the Central Pacific Railroad and the United States. The United States have not ostensibly any interest in the Southern Pacific Railroad, but they have a very large debt against the Central Pacific Railroad. Now, it is contended, and I am sure the evidence is stated beyond the possibility of reasonable denial, that the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad are as identical as my two hands as a part of my body.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will permit me, the quotation that I read and the citation I made from the remarks of the counsel of the Southern Pacific before the Congressional committee fully sustain his statement.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no doubt about it. Now, in all fairness, a matter of this kind ought to be presented here in a separate bill, so that the Senate by itself and disconnected from a general appropriation bill might consider this very vexed and very tangled question.

But this is not the only question between the Central Pacific and the United States and the Southern Pacific and the United States. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is owned in a very large part by the Southern Pacific Company, and the Southern Pacific Company is the lessee of the Central Pacific, with practically, yes absolutely, I believe, the identical board of directors.

Mr. HALE. I find it will be impossible to finish the bill this afternoon. Will it be convenient for the Senator to go on later if we take a recess from now until 8 o'clock?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would allow this as a more convenient time (because the people who gather here in the evening are interrupted by an executive session) to devote five minutes to the consideration of executive business before he makes a motion for a recess.

Mr. HALE. Let us try to get a unanimous-consent agreement first.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice to the Senate that I wish to present at the earliest possible moment the conference report on the sundry civil bill, and that there are many things in that bill which must go back to the House for a separate vote and discussion there, wherein we have disagreed respecting amendments that were put on in the Senate. Therefore it is important that we shall certainly be here as early as 8 o'clock, when I will ask the Senator from Maine to lay aside the pending bill until the conference report can be agreed to, in order that it may go back to the House for its consideration as early as can be done to-night. It is manifest, and must be to all, that if the appropriation bills are to pass at this session, wherein there are many differences between the two Houses, opportunity must be given in each House for more or less debate. I do not wish to interfere with the convenience of Senators in reference to a recess; the recess should be taken now, and we should reconvene here at 8 o'clock, when I hope to take up the conference report which I have in hand.

Mr. HOAR. It is desirable to have a brief executive session. If we do that this evening, there will be a very large number of citizens from all parts of the country coming here at this interesting season who will be in the galleries. Perhaps it is the only opportunity many of them ever will have to see the Houses of Congress in session, and it would be a very serious disturbance to them to hold an executive session later in the evening. They would all have to be turned out and lose their places, and so on. I therefore move that the Senate——

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us test the sense of the Senate on the question whether we are to have an executive session or not.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that at half past 6 the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, to convene at that hour in open session.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called, and to enable the President to otherwise promote an international agreement;

A bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use to the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown;

A bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation;

A bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River, at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PERKINS, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

PERRINE LAND-GRANT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Public Lands in regard to the issuance of patents of the Perrine land grant. The subject has attracted considerable attention. The Committee on Public Lands, in regard to the issuance of patents to the Perrine heirs, had a very full and complete investigation, examined a great many witnesses, and have come to a conclusion, with the exception of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. The subject has attracted a great deal of attention, and I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD, and also as a document.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to say a word in regard to this report. I wish the Senator from Idaho would withdraw the report until to-morrow morning, as I desire to make a brief statement in regard to it, or I am willing to make the statement now. I desire to make it at the time when the report is submitted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I shall very gladly comply with the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will withhold the report until to-morrow morning, I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. HILL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 358) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Strike out, in line 3, section 1, the following: "That in all cases hereafter arising" and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "That in all criminal cases, and in such civil cases as may hereafter arise."

DAVID B. HILL,
O. H. PLATT,
C. D. CLARK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HENRY M. BAKER,
D. B. HENDERSON,
J. E. WASHINGTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MUTILATION OF UNITED STATES COIN.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5732) to amend section 5459 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing the punishment for mutilating United States coins and for uttering or passing or attempting to utter or pass such mutilated coins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. ALLISON. If the bill is a short one and leads to no debate, I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota; but beyond that I must ask for the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I do not like to object to the consideration of the bill, but if the proposed law is to the effect that a man is a criminal if he happens to take a coin that has been defaced or mutilated, it seems to me that that is going too far.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg leave to state to the Senator from Nevada that the bill was very carefully examined by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and myself. It covers only the offense of uttering, which seems to be defective in the present legislation.

Mr. STEWART. Constantly people take when in a hurry coins that have been worn and mutilated, and all that kind of thing, and they will not pass afterwards, and sometimes they pass them without thinking about it. If it only means that if they shall do it with fraudulent intent, and that point is carefully guarded, I do not object.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill expressly says that it shall be done with fraudulent intent.

Mr. STEWART. Then I have no objection.

Mr. BROWN. What is the exact change proposed in the law?

Mr. DAVIS. I will state the exact change in the proposed amendment. The statutes as they are are substantially retained, but there is a defect in the statutes in regard to the uttering of defaced or mutilated coin. The object is to cover it.

Mr. BROWN. What is the change? What is made criminal that was not before criminal?

Mr. DAVIS. The offense of uttering.

Mr. BROWN. Was it not fully defined in the statute?

Mr. DAVIS. It was not fully defined before. The Senator from Colorado and I examined the matter very carefully, and agreed that this defect should be covered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 5459 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5459. Every person who fraudulently, by any art, way, or means, defaces, mutilates, impairs, diminishes, falsifies, scales, or lightens, or causes or procures to be fraudulently defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened, or willingly aids or assists in fraudulently defacing, mutilating, impairing, diminishing, falsifying, scaling, or lightening the gold or silver coins which have been, or which may hereafter be, coined at the mints of the United States, or any foreign gold or silver coins which are by law made current or are in actual use or circulation as money within the United States, or who passes, utters, publishes, or sells, or attempts to pass, utter, publish, or sell, or bring into the United States from any foreign place knowing the same to be defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened, with intent to defraud any person whatsoever, or has in his possession any such defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened coin, knowing the same to be defaced, mutilated, impaired, diminished, falsified, scaled, or lightened, with intent to defraud any person whatsoever, shall be imprisoned not more than five years and fined not more than $2,000.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Thomas Rosbrugh, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4913) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Wyse, widow of Lieut. Col. F. O. Wyse, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 719) to restore a pension to Harriet M. Knowlton, with the veto message of the President, to report it with a recommendation that the bill pass, notwithstanding the President's objection thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, with the accompanying message, will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6671) for the relief of Charles A. Nazro, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

LANDS IN FLORIDA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 824) to require patents to be issued to land actually settled under the act entitled "An act to provide for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of Florida," approved August 4, 1842.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, after section 4, to insert:

SEC. 5. That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to interfere with any valid adverse right asserted under any law of the United States to any of the lands settled upon under the armed invasion act.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; agrees to a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 18, 27, 44, 47, 52, 53, 54, 57, 69, 75, 76, 81, 84, 86, 87, 94, 95, 97, 154, 156, 157, 163, 175, 183, and 192.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 45, 51, 55, 59, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 77, 79, 82, 83, 85, 88, 93, 142, 145, 150, 151, 152, 153, 158, 161, 164, 167, 171, 172, 173, 174, 176, 177, 178, 181, 182, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, and 189, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, the following: "The present limit of cost of said building not to be exceeded;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Provided, The present limit of cost of said building shall not be exceeded;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend the $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, heretofore (in 1896) appropriated for the purchase of site for a court-house and post-office at Salt Lake City."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$475,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$126,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$132,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the first sum named in said amendment insert "$209,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay Dr. Leonard Stejneger the sum of $940, and to F. A. Lucas the sum of $630, for extra services and expenses while detailed to assist in the scientific investigation of the fur-seal fisheries, out of the appropriation heretofore made for such investigation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and on page 55 of the bill, in line 24, strike out the word "five," and in lieu thereof insert the word "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Interior," in line 19, down to and including line 25 of the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The reindeer to be transported by a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$420,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$276,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$295,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 160, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$213,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For lodge and gateway, $2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$188,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 10, 12, 24, 48, 49, 50, 58, 61, 62, 63, 72, 73, 74, 78, 89, 90, 91, 96, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 144, 146, 147, 148, 149, 168, 169, 170, 179, 180, and 190.

WM. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH G. CANNON,
W. A. STONE,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. HILL. It is quite impossible to understand precisely what the conference report is. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Iowa whether there was any change made in the conference report in regard to the electric lighting amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendments in relation to electric lighting in this District are still in disagreement. They have not been agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I have two questions to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations: First, What became, under the report of the committee of conference, of the Overfalls Shoal light vessel?

Mr. ALLISON. The House conferees receded from the disagreement.

Mr. QUAY. In what condition are the river and harbor improvements left?

Mr. ALLISON. I think, perhaps, I had better give in brief the questions about which the two committees were unable to agree.

We were unable to agree as respects the amendments relating to public buildings, except the public building at Helena, Mont., where there was an additional authority given to purchase land. The House conferees receded from their disagreement to that amendment.

They also receded from the amendment relating to the public building at Milwaukee, Wis., wherein it is proposed to make a slight change.

They agreed to the provision respecting the public building at Salt Lake, Utah, wherein it is proposed to authorize and direct the purchase of a site and the commencement of a public building. The House conferees were not willing to authorize the commencement of the building, but agreed to the remainder of the amendment, which provided that the Secretary should be authorized and directed to purchase a site.

Mr. BROWN. At what amount?

Mr. ALLISON. At the amount named, not to exceed $75,000. That is the situation as respects public buildings.

The House conferees would not agree to amendment numbered 24, appropriating $175,000 for a revenue cutter in the harbor of New York, and that is still in disagreement.

They also refused to make the changes reported by the Senate committee respecting the Omaha Exposition, and those amendments are still in disagreement.

They also refused to agree to amendment numbered 58, making a change in the collection districts in the State of Vermont.

They also refused to agree to the appropriation for the sugar bounty, being amendment numbered 61.

They also refused to agree to the amendment numbered 62, appropriating a small sum to A. T. Kimball, etc.—not a very important amendment.

They also refused to agree to the provision respecting the appropriation for the heirs of those who were killed in the explosion at the gun-cotton factory on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport.

They also refused to agree to amendment numbered 72, restoring to the public lands the reservations recently made by the Executive order of the President.

They also refused to agree to amendments numbered 73, 74, and 78, relating to the increase of the appropriation for the Report on Mineral Resources, wherein we had changed the amount from $20,000 to $45,000, and inserted certain provisions for procuring statistics relative to the production of gold and silver.

They also refused to agree to the electric-light amendments which we had proposed in the Senate.

They also refused to agree to the appropriation to improve the roads from the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to the town of Lafayette, Ga.

As respects the river and harbor amendments, we found so much difference and so much controversy respecting those amendments that all of them from amendment, I think, numbered 98 to 141, inclusive, are still in conference. They are among the amendments disagreed to.

They also refused to agree to the amendment numbered 144, appropriating $35,000 for an additional building for the Garfield Hospital.

They also refused to agree to amendment numbered 146, appropriating $150,000 for the survey by the deep-waterways commission.

They also refused to agree to the Aransas Pass appropriation.

Also to the appropriation of $50,000 for the improvement of Pearl Harbor.

Also to amendment numbered 149. They refused to agree to an appropriation for an investigation as to the proposed memorial bridge, etc., across the Potomac River.

They also refuse to agree to amendment numbered 168, appropriating $100,000 for the Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, S. Dak.

Amendments numbered 169 and 170 are still in conference, although they are merely computations depending upon other amendments disagreed to.

They refused to agree to amendment numbered 179, being the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], relating to the codification of the criminal laws.

They also refused to agree to the appropriation of $150,000 for the Nicaragua Canal Commission, being amendment numbered 180.

And also to amendment numbered 190, authorizing the Joint Committee on Printing to have prepared plans, etc., for the improvement of the Government Printing Office.

All the other amendments have been agreed to in conference.

The Senate committee receded from a number of amendments which I will state in brief.

Mr. CHANDLER. Can the Senator give the numbers?

Mr. ALLISON. I can give the numbers.

The Senate conferees receded from amendment numbered 44, page 45, which relates to the purchase of the fish hatchery in California.

They also receded from a small amendment relating to the details of printing paper for internal-revenue stamps.

The Senate conferees receded from amendment numbered 57, on page 57, in relation to immigrants.

They also receded from certain amendments relating to the Geological Survey printing, etc., which are not very important.

Also the small amendment which we had inserted for the unveiling of the statue of Professor Gross.

We also receded from amendment numbered 97, on page 93, that being the clause providing for a lease of lands in the Gettysburg National Park, which was struck out by the Senate.

The Senate conferees also receded from the amendment which provided for a republication of the constitutions of the States and Territories, being amendment numbered 183.

These, I believe, are the principal amendments. There may be some small amendments where we receded, as in the case of the Soldiers' Home. There were some amendments that on revision the House conferees refused to agree to, which the Senate conferees receded from in order to reach an agreement on the subject. The question of stating the accounts of Soldiers' Homes is still in disagreement.

All the other amendments, I believe, at least the important Senate amendments, were agreed to by the House conferees.

I shall be glad to answer any question any Senator desires as repects any particular amendment. If no inquiry is made, I hope we shall have a vote on concurring in the report.

Mr. VILAS. I observe by the report that there is still in disagreement the amendment in relation to the deep-waterways commission. I had hoped to have found an opportunity to invite attention in some more formal way to the great improvement involved in that work for which the Committee on Appropriations added the amendment to the bill, but the progress of the session, and the pressure of business rendered it unfit that the time should be consumed. The vast importance of it to the people of the Northwest, the vast importance of it for the defense of the northern border of this country is so great that I hope the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist upon maintaining the amendment which the Senate put on.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say, as respects the amendments disagreed to, that the conferees on the part of the House insisted that there should be opportunity in the House for their consideration, and especially was that stated in regard to the deep-waterways survey, on the ground that there was no estimate for this appropriation, they making the same objection to the continuation of the Nicaragua Canal survey and also the Pearl Harbor improvement in Hawaii.

I will ask that there be inserted in the RECORD a brief statement which I have here of the disagreements, that Senators may see them in the morning and know from this statement exactly the matters that are still in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa, the memorandum sent to the desk will be incorporated in the RECORD. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following amendments, namely, numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 10, and 12, relating to public buildings, as follows:

Appropriating $100,000 for additional land for extension of public building at Bridgeport, Conn.;

Appropriating $14,000 for completing approaches to public building at Charleston, S. C.;

Appropriating $100,000 for public building at Norfolk, Va., and extending the limit of cost of said building from $150,000 to $250,000;

Appropriating $25,000 for additional site for and $75,000 for extension of public building at Topeka, Kans.;

Appropriating $325,000 for purchase of the Corcoran Art Gallery property;

Appointing a commission to examine sites and consider prices of lots suitable for a memorial building for the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; and

Appropriating $50,000 for purchase of a site for a public building at Butte, Mont.

On amendment numbered 24, appropriating $175,000 for a revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic coast.

On amendments numbered 48, 49, and 50, appropriating $75,000 additional for the Omaha Exposition.

On amendment numbered 58, creating an additional customs collection district in the State of Vermont.

On amendment numbered 61, appropriating $1,085,156.66 for the payment of sugar bounty.

On amendment numbered 62, appropriating $2,011.13 to pay A. T. Kimball for damage to his property from the break in the Pine River Reservoir, Minnesota.

On amendment numbered 63, appropriating $15,000 to the heirs of those who were killed by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, R. I.

On amendment numbered 72, restoring to the public domain lands in Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota, reserved by Executive orders and proclamations of February 22, 1897.

On amendments numbered 73, 74, and 78, increasing the appropriation for Report of Mineral Resources from $20,000 to $45,000.

On amendments numbered 89, 90, and 91, relating to the electric lights in certain parks of the city of Washington.

On amendment numbered 96, appropriating $26,000 to improve the road from the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to the town of Lafayette, Ga.

On amendments numbered 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, and 141, relating to river and harbor works, by which the Senate reduced the appropriations of the House $2,450,168, and added new works amounting to $1,313,000.

On amendment numbered 144, appropriating $35,000 for an additional building for the Garfield Hospital.

On amendment numbered 146, appropriating $150,000 for the Deep Waterways Commission.

On amendment numbered 147, appropriating $5,000 for a board of engineers to ascertain the character and value of the improvements made at the Pass of Aransas, in Texas, by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company.

On amendment numbered 148, appropriating $50,000 for the improvement of Pearl Harbor, Hawaiian Islands.

On amendment numbered 149, appropriating $2,500 for a survey, designs, and estimates for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River.

On amendment numbered 168, appropriating $100,000 for a Branch Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, S. Dak.

On amendments numbered 169 and 170, correcting a total and relating to the manner of disbursement and accounting for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

On amendment numbered 179, providing for three commissioners to revise and codify the criminal laws of the United States.

On amendment numbered 180, appropriating $150,000 for the Nicaragua Canal Commission.

On amendment numbered 190, authorizing the Joint Committee on Printing to have prepared plans for additions and improvements to the Government Printing Office.

NET REDUCTIONS BY SENATE IN RIVER AND HARBOR ITEMS IN HOUSE BILL.

Reductions	$2,450,168
Increase	1,313,000
Net reductions	1,137,168

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that as to the Pearl Harbor improvement there is a very careful report prepared by Admiral Walker, which gives all the necessary information and gives an estimate of the entire cost of completing the improvement at $100,000.

Mr. ALLISON. So we stated to the conferees on the part of the House, but they insisted that it did not appear in the Book of Estimates and therefore was a matter that must lie in the judgment of the two Houses, and they did not agree to that amendment.

So as respects the waterways commission, we called their attention to the complete and elaborate report of the commission, who had already made a preliminary survey, but the same answer was given.

Mr. VILAS. But in that case the report of the commission came in Congress too late to have been put in the Book of Estimates. It did not properly go before the Secretary of the Treasury to be included in his estimates in any case.

Mr. ALLISON. That is very true.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if he will permit me. What was done with the amendment numbered 56, the Alaskan seal-fishery provision?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senate that we receded from that portion of the amendment numbered 56 which provides for the continuation of the scientific investigation, etc., retaining what I have no doubt will be agreeable intelligence to the Senator from Minnesota—the provision for the compensation of those faithful men who served the commission last year.

Mr. NELSON. That is agreed to?

Mr. ALLISON. That is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments to the bill and ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. VEST. It is impossible for us to understand what the disagreements and agreements are until we hear from the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the Senate. I should like to know what the numbers given mean.

Mr. CARTER. I insist that the announcement of the numbers bears no more significance to the Senate than the reading of the report in the Greek language.

Mr. GALLINGER. They would mean more if the Senator had the last print of the Indian appropriation bill before him.

Mr. CARTER. The bill, I understand, has not been printed with the amendments numbered.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is so printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is printed with the numbers, and the Senator can get a printed copy of it.

Mr. CARTER. I did not know that was the fact.

Mr. VEST. As the Senator from Montana has stated, it is simply impossible for us to understand what has been done by the conferees. I should like, in order to bring the matter to an issue, to ask the Senator from South Dakota what has been done in regard to the amendment of the Senate in reference to the Uncompahgre Reservation, and what has been done in regard to the Indian Territory?

Mr. PETTIGREW. After the reading of the report has been completed I will answer the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. It is simply nonsense to sit here and listen to the reading of the report, in which the amendments are stated simply by number.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The bill is printed with every amendment numbered.

Mr. VEST. But we have not had time to look at the printed bill.

The reading of the report was concluded. It is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 21, 28, 40, 41, 43, 70, 74, 84, 96, 97, and 103.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 71, 72, 73, 76, 78, 80, 82, 85, 86, 89, 98, 100, 101, 104, and 105; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "Territory," in said amendment, the following: "Or adjoining State or Territory;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$22,375;" and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the allottees of land within the limits of the Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, are hereby authorized to lease their lands or any part thereof for a term not exceeding three years, for farming or grazing purposes, or ten years for mining or business purposes. And said allottees and their lessees and tenants shall have the right to employ such assistants, laborers, and help from time to time as they may deem necessary: Provided, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age or disability any such allottee can not improve or manage his allotment properly and with benefit to himself, the same may be leased, in the discretion of the Secretary, upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by him. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this are hereby repealed. All chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw Agency shall be recorded by the clerk of the United States court at Miami, in the Indian Territory."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"That the adult allottees of land in the Peoria and Miami Indian Reservation in the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., who have each received allotments of 200 acres or more, may sell 100 acres thereof under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment, after the word "sum," the words "or so much thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "so much;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment after the word "purposes," in line 4 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out after the word "purchase," in line 1 of said amendment, down to and including the word "Dakota," in line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the words "of land;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For extension and completion of steam plant, $6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$62,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in lines 8 and 9 of said amendment, the words "for steam-heating plant, $15,000;" and strike out, in line 9, the word "eighty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "That," in line 1 of the said amendment, the word "hereafter;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of said amendment, the words "to be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is made;" and the Senate agree to the same.

"For resurvey of the lands of the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., $141,500, to be immediately available: Provided, That such resurveys shall be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey by such persons as may be employed by or under him for that purpose; and such surveys shall be executed under instructions to be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and subdivisional surveys shall be executed under the rectangular system, as now provided by law: Provided further, That when any surveys shall have been so made and plats and field notes thereof prepared they shall be approved and certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and two copies of the field notes shall be returned, one for filing in the Indian Office and one in the General Land Office, and twenty photolithographic copies of the plats shall be returned, one for filing in the Office of Indian Affairs and one in the General Land Office, which shall be certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and the others filed in the General Land Office, with the facsimile of the signature of the Director of the Geological Survey, and the same provision shall also extend to the plats to be filed of the surveys already made or to be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey within the Indian Territory, and such surveys, field notes, and plats shall have the same legal force and effect as heretofore given to the acts of surveyors-general: Provided further, That all laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby declared to be inoperative as respects such surveys, and in making the resurvey the former land survey is to be disregarded, the latter now being declared null and void: Provided further, That hereafter in the public-land surveys of the Indian Territory iron or stone posts shall be erected at each township corner, upon which shall be recorded the usual marks required to be placed on township corners by the laws and regulations governing public-land surveys."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Rosebud Indians and with the Lower Brule Indians in South Dakota for the settlement of all differences between said Indians; and with the Rosebud Indians and the Lower Brule Indians, the Cheyenne River Indians in South Dakota, and with the Standing Rock Indians in North and South Dakota for a cession of a portion of their respective reservations and for a modification of existing treaties as to the requirement of the consent of three-fourths of the male adult Indians to any treaty disposing of their lands; all agreements to be submitted to Congress for its approval."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Except when otherwise specifically provided by law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert after said amendment as a separate paragraph the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Indians entitled thereto for the allotment in severalty of all the lands in the Cattaraugus and Allegany Indian Reservations in the State of New York, and said inspector shall report thereon with all convenient speed to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit the same to Congress for its action thereon, and no agreement made shall be binding until approved by Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert after said amendment as a separate paragraph the following:

"Immediately upon the passage of this act, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be examined, by an officer of his bureau thoroughly acquainted with the history of the issuance and redemption of the "scrip" hereinafter mentioned, all payments made in redemption of "Kaw or Kansas Indian scrip" issued or claimed to have been issued under the treaty of 1859, as amended in 1862, and further amended in 1863, and to report to Congress, for its consideration and action, as early as practicable, the amount of money, principal, and interest paid out of the Kansas Indian funds in the redemption of any part of said scrip, which was issued without authority of treaty or law, as decided by the Attorney-General of the United States, and report all interest paid on said scrip."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"That the claim of the Fond du Lac band of Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior for compensation arising from the alleged difference in area of the reservation as actually set apart to them and that provided to be set apart under the the fourth subdivision of article 2 of the treaty between the United States and the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, made and concluded at Lapointe, in the State of Wisconsin, on the 30th day of September, in the year 1854, proclaimed January 29, 1855, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear and determine the difference, if any, between the area of the reservation actually set apart to said Indians and that provided to be set apart in said treaty, if any, the said action to be brought by the said Fond du Lac band of Chippewa Indians against the United States by petition, verified under oath by any duly authorized attorney for said Indians, within thirty days from the passage of this act; and in hearing and determining the said matter the court shall take into consideration and determine whether since the date of said treaty there has been any equitable adjustment made to said Indians in whole or in part for the alleged difference in area. The Attorney-General shall appear and answer said petition within thirty days from the filing thereof, unless the time for pleading be extended by the court for cause shown; and said action shall have precedence in said court, and when completed the court shall make a full report to Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following:

"That all children born of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman by blood, and not by adoption, and who is recognized by the tribe, shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, either by blood or descent, as any other member of the tribe, and no prior act of Congress shall be so construed as to debar such child of such right."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a discreet person as a commissioner, who shall visit the Chippewa and Christian Indian Reservation, in Franklin County, Kans., and make a thorough investigation and full report of the title of the individual members of said bands in and to the several tracts of land therein which have been allotted to said members, for which certificates have been issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided in the first article of the treaty of July 16, 1859, with the Swan Creek and Black River Chippewas, and the Munsee or Christian Indians of Kansas.

"That said commissioner shall take a census of said Indians, the enrollment to be made upon separate lists; the first to include all of said bands who hold title to land, either by original allotment and certificate, by purchase and approved conveyance, or by inheritance, with a description of the land so held or owned by each, and where any tract is claimed by tenants in common, either as heirs of a deceased allottee or otherwise, the interest of each claimant in such tract to be clearly and distinctly stated, the ownership of lands of deceased allottees to be determined under the laws of Kansas relating to descent; and the second list to embrace all of said bands who have not received an allotment of land, but would, if there were sufficient land, be entitled thereto under the treaty.

"That upon the approval of said census and the report of said commissioner by the Secretary of the Interior patents in fee shall issue in favor of those persons found by the Secretary of the Interior to be entitled to the land held by them.

"That where there are several heirs, and the partition of land is practicable, the partition shall be made by said commissioner, but if not practicable, said land may be appraised and sold as hereinafter directed, and the net proceeds paid to said heirs according to the respective title or share each may have in said land.

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent in fee to the Moravian Church, or its constituted authorities, for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12, of township 17 south, of range 18 east, in Kansas.

"That the residue of their lands shall be appraised by a commission consisting of said commissioner, the Indian agent, and a person to be selected by the Indians in open council, who shall report the same to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; that said commission shall place a valuation for purposes hereinafter named on all tracts of land now owned or held by inheritance, and make a separate report thereof.

"That upon the approval of said appraisement by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall offer said residue of lands at the proper land office in Kansas, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem advisable, except that the time for full and complete payment shall not exceed one year, with clause of absolute forfeiture in case of default: And provided, That the same shall be sold to the highest bidder, and at a price not less than the appraised value.

"That where an allottee has died leaving no heirs, or has abandoned his or her allotment, and has not resided thereon or lived within the said reservation for three consecutive years, the lands and improvements of such allottee shall be appraised and sold in like manner as other lands herein described, as provided herein.

"That the net proceeds derived from the sale of the lands herein authorized to be sold, after payment of the expenses of appraisal and sale thereof, shall be placed in the Treasury for the benefit of those members of said bands of Indians who have not received any land by allotment, and shall be paid per capita to those entitled to share therein who are of age, and to others as they shall arrive at the age of 21 years, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, or shall be expended for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interest.

"That when a purchaser shall have made full payment for a tract of land, as herein provided, patent shall be issued as in case of public lands under the homestead and preemption laws.

"That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum shall be reimbursed as follows: All expenses of appraisal and sale out of the proceeds of such sale, and all other expenses out of the funds of said Chippewa and Munsee, or Christian Indians, not held for them by the United States, said sum being on the 1st day of January, 1896, $42,560.36.

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay over to the said Chippewa and Munsee or Christian Indians, per capita, the remainder of said funds, of $42,560.36, trust funds now to their credit on the books of the Treasury Department, after deducting the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this section.

"That no proceedings shall be taken under this section until the said bands of Indians shall file with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs their consent thereto, expressed in open council."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 9, 30, 59, 60, 61, 62, 83, 87, 88, 90, 92, 93, and 95, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the report of the committee of conference, and insist on a further conference.

Mr. QUAY. I hope the Senator from Montana will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to make a statement in support of the motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is debatable.

Mr. QUAY. I know, but I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that can not be done. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I should like to make a statement.

Mr. President, as suggested early in the reading of this report, it was extremely difficult for any Senator upon the floor of the Chamber to comprehend its significance. Many amendments were added in the committee of the Senate and adopted in the course of our deliberations in the Cnamber. Many of those amendments have been stricken out and the substitutes, it appears in many cases, are much more elaborate than the portions disagreed to. The far-reaching consequences or significance of any one of these extensive amendments no one, in the limited time here allowed, can possibly predict or comprehend.

I will call the attention of the Senate to one item. During the last session of Congress, on the Indian appropriation bill, a treaty was ratified whereby the Indians of the Blackfoot Reservation, in the State of Montana, ceded about 900,000 acres of land to the United States, and in consideration for such cession the General Government is obligated to-day to pay those Indians about $1,500,000.

The purpose of this cession was to take out of the Indian country a certain valuable mineral region and to throw it open for location under the mining laws by citizens of the United States. As the bill passed the Senate before it appeared in conference, every citizen of the United States, regardless of his place of residence, was given a fair, free, and full opportunity to purchase any portion of those lands from the Government upon which he might discover valuable mineral. In conference, however, and without any opportunity to deliberate upon this floor, a proviso was inserted to the effect that any person who might, prior to the time the land was surveyed, make a location within that country, and should have such location protected. This gave to the Indian agent in charge of the country—and he remains in charge until it becomes a part of the public domain—the exclusive right to designate the persons who might explore that valuable mineral region and make locations within its limits.

I make no accusations upon this floor, but I am informed by persons whose truth and veracity I can not question that the Indian agent upon that Blackfoot Agency, in collusion with divers and sundry speculators thereabout, has issued permits to certain favored individuals, who have taken from this purchase by the Government every foot of mineral land worth occupying or developing. The proviso under which this great wrong and monopoly was consummated, or sought to be consummated, was interjected in conference without the knowledge of the Representative in the other House or either Senator from Montana upon this floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. In what State was it?

Mr. CARTER. In the State of Montana. Now, for the purpose of preventing this overreaching combination from gaining advantage, as the result of their underhanded operations, we have sought in this bill to repeal the proviso which gave the advantage in a surreptitious manner in a former bill, and the committee of conference disagrees, and says that this remedial legislation in the interest of common honor and common honesty shall be disagreed to by the American Congress.

Upon this one proposition alone, if no other element appeared in the conference report, this report should be disagreed to. The report should be analyzed; the component parts of it made plain to every Senator; the record placed upon these desks, to the end that each Senator charged with a duty here should be permitted to vote intelligently upon the subject-matter of this important piece of legislation.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator state to me exactly what is the point of difference?

Mr. CARTER. The point simply, I will state to the Senator from Nevada, is that an Indian reservation was to be opened under a cession from the Indians to the United States, and a proviso was inserted whereby any person who might, through the good graces of the Indian agent, be permitted to enter that land before the cession was consummated could make a mining location within its limits, and that location would be validated by the proviso.

Mr. STEWART. That was a fraud.

Mr. CARTER. It is a fraud—plain, palpable, and bold. Language need not be employed to brand it more dark and damaging than it appears upon the surface.

This report should be disagreed to, and the disagreement insisted upon until this piece of proposed legislation in favor of all the people of the country at large shall be permitted to become a part of the law of the land.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, it has been very difficult to understand what has been done by the conferees in this conference report. The first thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is this: In the amendment numbered 14, which relates to transferring court jurisdiction over the Osage and Kansas Indian reservations from Oklahoma to the Indian Territory, it will be remembered that I suggested, when the amendment was proposed in the Senate, that the amendment altered the boundaries of the Territory of Oklahoma, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] thought not. He said that it was not intended to take the Osage Reservation out of the Territory of Oklahoma and put it into the Indian Territory, but simply to transfer the jurisdiction of the court. It was a matter which we had not heard of until it was proposed by the amendment, and it was suggested that it was not the intention to lessen the area of the Territory of Oklahoma, and that it could be fixed in conference; but now in conference it stands as it was passed in the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. On what page was that?

Mr. PLATT. It is on page 27, amendment numbered 14.

Now, I wish to say that I think that that method of breaking up one of the Territories of this Union is entirely improper. The amendment as it stands takes 3,000 square miles from the Territory of Oklahoma and puts it in the Indian Territory. That was not the intention of the amendment. It was disowned by the Senator from Nebraska, who said that he did not desire to change the boundaries of Oklahoma, and he thought that his amendment did not; but I have examined the matter, and I find that it does. I submit that that ought not to be done under the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection whatever, so far as I am concerned, to have the words "for judicial purposes" inserted in line 21, after the word "Oklahoma." That will obviate the difficulty the Senator from Connecticut suggests.

Mr. PLATT. It would if we could amend the provision, but it being in a conference report, we can not amend it. This is only one thing I am going to speak of with reference to this conference report. If we disagree to the report, undoubtedly that matter can be fixed in conference.

The legislature of Oklahoma has unanimously passed a resolution protesting against being despoiled of its territory, and I do not think it ought to be done in this way.

I wish the Secretary would recur to amendment numbered 81 to see what has been done there, for I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, as requested.

Mr. PLATT. Before that is done, I will read the amendment as it is in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. On what page?

Mr. PLATT. Amendment numbered 81, on page 68. It reads:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Yankton tribe of Indians of South Dakota for the purchase of a parcel of land near Pipestone, Minn., on which is now located an Indian industrial school.

That is all there is of the amendment. Now, will the Secretary read how it will be according to the report of the conference committee?

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment No. 81: Insert after said amendment, as a separate paragraph, the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Indians entitled thereto for the allotment in severalty of all the lands in the Cattaraugus and Allegany Indian reservations, in the State of New York; and said inspector shall report thereon with all convenient speed to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit the same to Congress for its action thereon, and no agreement made shall be binding until approved by Congress."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. GEAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. Let me say this, first.

Mr. GEAR. I merely wanted to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. PLATT. I will yield in a moment.

Either something has been inserted here which has not been before the Senate at all, or something has been inserted here which was voted down by the Senate. My recollection about it is that it was voted down by the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I was just looking at that amendment. That amendment was offered on the floor and was voted down.

Mr. PLATT. That is my recollection, that that amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate and voted down, and now it is inserted as a continuation of a provision about negotiating with the Yankton Indians.

Now I will listen to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GEAR. I was merely going to suggest that the amendment as amended takes out of the State of Minnesota over 1,200 miles, and transfers it to the State of New York.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Connecticut understand from his investigation of this report, which nobody knows anything about, and, it not being printed, which nobody can understand—does he mean to say that an amendment which was voted down in the Senate has been written into this bill by the conferees?

Mr. PLATT. I so understand it, either that or else it was never acted upon at all by the Senate; I do not know which.

Mr. HALE. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I want to call attention to one other amendment of the same character.

Mr. HALE. I shall wait for the Senator, and then I am going to move to proceed with the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill, and let this report be printed, so that Senators can see what there is in it, and see how much the conferees have written into it that the Senate has either rejected or not considered.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Secretary would turn to amendment numbered 91. I should like him to read that amendment as it stands in the bill as passed by the Senate, and as it is proposed to be amended by the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Amendment numbered 91——

Mr. CULLOM. That is a committee amendment.

Mr. PLATT. That is as the bill left the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Senate inserted, on page 72, after line 20, the following:

For completion of the digest, now being prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of the decisions of the courts and the Interior Department, and of the opinions of the Attorney-General relating to Indian affairs, under authority of the Indian appropriation act approved June 10, 1896, $2,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize said work to be performed by a clerk of the Indian Office out of office hours and pay a proper compensation to such clerk therefor. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to settle the accounts of Kenneth S. Murchison, allowing him credit for such sums as he has disbursed under the appropriation heretofore made or may hereafter disburse under this appropriation for this purpose to himself or to Millard F. Holland, under authority of the Secretary of the Interior, for services heretofore, or that may be hereafter, rendered by them in connection with the preparation of said digest.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Secretary to now read the amendment as agreed to by the committee of conference.

The Secretary read as follows:

Immediately upon the passage of this act, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be examined by an officer of his Bureau, thoroughly acquainted with the history of the issuance and redemption and of the "scrip" hereinafter mentioned, all payments made in redemption of "Kaw or Kansas Indian scrip," issued or claimed to have been issued under the treaty of 1859 as amended in 1862 and further amended in 1863, and to report to Congress for its consideration and action as early as practicable the amount of money, principal and interest, paid out of the Kansas Indian funds in the redemption of any part of said scrip, which was issued without authority of treaty or law, as decided by the Attorney-General of the United States, and report all interest paid on said scrip.

Mr. HALE. I should like to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has listened to the proposition originally in the bill, and it has listened to the substitute of the committee of conference.

Mr. CHANDLER. The addition.

Mr. HALE. The addition. I should like to have the Senator state if he can what possible relation there is between the one and the other.

Mr. PLATT. None at all. The amendment as it left the Senate was a questionable amendment in my mind, and it related to the preparation of a digest of the decisions of the courts and the Interior Department, etc., relating to Indian affairs. We put such a provision in last year. I think it went in in conference last year, but I am not certain about that. It was said then it would only cost $2,000, and here it comes for $2,000 more, performed, as I understand, by a clerk in the Indian Office, who is a favorite there. But I do not make any objection to that amendment.

However, when it comes back from the committee of conference it has attached to it a provision about Kaw Indian scrip which never was heard of in the Senate or in the House until it was put in the conference report.

Mr. CULLOM. Where does it come from?

Mr. HALE. Has it in any way any relation to the original proposition?

Mr. PLATT. Not the slightest.

Mr. CULLOM. Where are the Kaw Indians?

Mr. PLATT. They are in Kansas, and, if I am correctly informed, one or more of them happen to be members of the other House, which may account——

Mr. CULLOM. One or two of the Kaw Indians?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; which may account for the fact that this has crept into the conference report.

Mr. President, these are all the instances I have been able to gather during the reading of the report and in the confusion of the Chamber, but these certainly are instances in which it seems to me the committee of conference has exceeded its powers. I think the report ought to be printed and rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose we have it rejected first.

Mr. PLATT. Or rejected first, and then printed.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can reach that by moving that the report be tabled and printed.

Mr. CULLOM. That it go over and be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not make that motion until the Oklahoma matter can be properly explained. I do not think there will be any difficulty about that when the Senator understands it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the Senator intended by the amendment, when he submitted it, to change the boundaries of Oklahoma Territory.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all.

Mr. PLATT. I did not so understand.

Mr. ALLEN. It did not detach the Osage Nation from the Territory of Oklahoma except for judicial purposes.

Mr. PLATT. That I did not object to, and do not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the Senator from Connecticut had yielded the floor.

Mr. PLATT. I will yield the floor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is another reason why I think the report should go back to the committee. The bill came from the House with a provision that changed the law as it stands now as to the rights of mixed bloods. It is clear that the law is right as it stands and ought not to be changed. The provision, as I understand it, as it was read at the desk, now proposes absolutely to reverse the law from what it is at this time.

The policy of the Government has been and the law is now that when a white man marries an Indian woman she shall be segregated from her tribe, and that she and her children shall follow the status of the white man. They are a part of the people of the United States. They have the rights of citizens of the United States, and they take no part with the tribe. This proposes exactly to reverse that provision, and to make the children of a mixed marriage of this sort become citizens of the tribe and entitled to equal rights with all the other citizens of the tribe. The policy has been to prevent that sort of thing. Assuming the superiority of the white man and the belief that when a white man marries an Indian woman he does not and ought not to lose his status as a citizen of the United States, it is provided now that his children shall take their status from him, and that his children shall not follow the status of the Indian woman.

This ought not to be changed. It is the law now. It is right as it is. The tendency ought to be to have the intelligent and superior people of the United States absorb these people and not to have them absorb the people of the United States. Besides it is not fair to have the children of these people, men who marry Indian women for no other purpose in the world than to get a part of the patrimony, to become interested in the tribal rights. It ought not to be encouraged. It ought, on the contrary, to be discouraged, and no white man marrying a woman in that way ought to be allowed to have any rights in the tribe. It seems to me the action of the conference committee is radically wrong in that respect, and the Senate ought to stand by its action in striking out that provision of the bill. I hope that for that reason the conference report will go back to the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I wish to reply briefly to the Senator from Arkansas, and to say that I can see no distinction whatever between the child of a white man and an Indian woman and the child of an Indian man and a white woman. There may be a distinction. In either instance, however, the children are half-breeds, and the same reason that would segregate the child of a white man and an Indian woman from the tribe should segregate the child of an Indian man and a white woman from the tribe. If any of these children are to be recognized as members of the tribe, they should all be recognized. If the marriage of an Indian woman and a white man ought to be discouraged, then the marriage of an Indian man and a white woman is equally to be discouraged.

The law as it stands now is not just—that is, it is not just as respects the issue of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman. The Senator from Arkansas seems to think that the white man marries into the Indian tribe for the purpose of obtaining a status in the tribe, and doubtless that is true in many cases; but what is the truth with respect to the white woman who marries into an Indian tribe? Does she not marry the Indian man for the purpose of obtaining a status in the tribe as an Indian, just as much as the white man does to obtain a status as an Indian?

If it is to be discouraged in one instance, it should be discouraged in the other, and there is no kind of sense or policy in permitting the issue of an Indian man and a white woman to became members of the tribe and at the same time deprive the issue, a half breed, of a white man and an Indian woman of like privileges. If the one is wrong, the other is wrong. The same reason that excludes the one excludes the other.

I do not know but that it would be good policy to say that whenever an Indian man marries out of his tribal relations he shall cease to be a member of the tribe, and to apply the same rule to an Indian woman who marries a white man. Let them be segregated from their tribe and have their station in society as citizens of the United States.

Mr. VILAS. I do not propose to discuss the pending motion; but I am a little surprised at the complaint which some Senators have been making as if in the conference report there had been a violation of the rules. If I am not vastly mistaken, nearly every Senator among those now crying out at the infraction of this sacred rule voted at the last session to despoil the Indians of the Indian Territory of some of their dearest rights, and against their most earnest protest; notwithstanding after the Senate had ruled all those amendments out upon a point of order, they were brought in out of whole cloth on the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. VILAS. I do not know what the Senator wants.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that so far as I am concerned, I opposed that from the very beginning; believed it to be an infraction of the rules and an outrage upon the Senate, and endeavored in every way to prevent it. I agree with the Senator that it was in the same line that seems to have been pursued in this report, of putting in new legislation in conference reports, and it is about the worst abuse that can obtain in the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, Mr. President, this is hardly a speck, this is not a mote in the eye compared to the monstrous work of the last session in violation of this rule.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin in that.

Mr. VILAS. Let us justify the conferees by precedents of our own creation.

Mr. HALE. But that was not a precedent that committed us who opposed it at the time. Simply because the majority did it, against the protest of some of us, does not in any way bind us to agree to this report.

Mr. VILAS. I should be very glad if the principle were established that the rules should be observed because they are rules, but when this very bill was before the Senate the rules of this body were trampled under foot as if a herd of buffalo had run over them, and amendments went upon the bill utterly regardless of the rules of the Senate. Talk about rules! We might as well recognize the fact that there is no principle and that there is no rule obligatory during the construction of a bill in this body except the will of the Senate for the time being.

I only say this in reference to what seems to be severe—and, when you look to the rule and not to the usage and precedents, justly severe—criticism, which has been indirectly rather than in direct adjectives applied to the conferees. But I call attention to the excuse they have in the action of the Senate itself. I have no desire to discuss this proposal in the least, or to interfere with the order which is sought by Senators and which I suppose is a very proper order to make, at least that we should understand thoroughly what is proposed before action is taken.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the iniquity of breaking a rule is nothing especially criminal or disgraceful. The question is whether, in addition to breaking the rule, we have not put in that which is actually wrong. I find prevailing about the Senate a very strong sense of indignation. We were probably misled last year, especially those of us who, from our location, can not be expected to be thoroughly informed on Indian affairs, and we will be very grateful to the Senator from Wisconsin if he will tell us what was the wrongdoing if not the fraud that we were led into last year, and just what fraud to avoid this year.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have been requested by some of the Seneca Indians who are here to bring to the attention of the Senate the clause in the conference report in reference to their rights, by which authority is given to sell their lands without any negotiation with the tribe or any tribal consent. Some of these Indians, who are located in the State of New York, are making very serious objections to that provision of the bill which authorizes the lease of their lands for the purpose of oil wells. I think that ought not to be done upon the pending bill, and if such a provision is desirable, it ought to be the subject of more serious consideration in some bill brought before the Senate at its next session as to which all these parties may be heard and their rights duly provided for and protected.

I was requested to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate, in order that when the disagreement shall take place, the conferees may be advised that there are serious objections and protests against this provision of the conference report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, in regard to the matter of which the Senator from Montana spoke, I wish to state in behalf of the committee that last year there were three treaties ratified in the bill, two of them in Montana and one in relation to the San Carlos Reservation, in Arizona. The Arizona treaty was prepared by the Department and negotiated by one of its inspectors. That contained a provision that persons who had a mining claim upon the reservation should have a preference right after it was opened to settlement to take the land.

This provision was recommended by the Department and earnestly urged. In conference members came before the committee and desired that the same provision, the same words and terms, should be applied to the reservations in Montana, representing that it accorded with justice and the protection of rights; and the committee feeling that it could safely be extended to the other reservations, made the three treaties correspond.

It appears that some complaints have arisen with regard to the reservation in Montana. An amendment was submitted and referred to the Committee on Appropriations to repeal the provisions of the treaties of last year. While I do not think, perhaps, it is proper to say, ordinarily, what the Committee on Appropriations has done, I will say in this connection that the Committee on Appropriations, after fully discussing the matter, voted unanimously not to put it into the bill. It went on the bill of the Senate. The conferees on the part of the House refused to agree to it, and the argument used was that if any rights had attached under the law of last year, there was nothing we could do to take them away. Therefore, we could accomplish nothing by insisting upon the amendment. However, so far as I am concerned, I am willing that every one of the objections to the conference report raised by Senators shall be submitted to the Senate. I should like to take the sense of the Senate upon each and every one of them, and I shall be very glad, if any one of them is not acceptable, to have the conference report rejected and again go into conference on this subject.

Now, in regard to the oil leases in New York, that is the House provision. The Senate struck it out. The House insisted upon it. Members from New York came before the committee, Judge DANIELS, for instance, who has held court in that portion of New York for years, being circuit judge. He stated that after careful and thorough investigation of the whole question he was convinced that it was in the interest of those Indians to have that lease confirmed. Therefore the Senate conferees receded.

In respect to the Osage Indians, that is a provision which was put on by the Senate. The House accepted it.

As to amendment 99, with reference to the mixed-blood Indians, it is a House provision. The Senate struck it out, the House insisted, and the conferees yielded. Upon that question I shall be very glad to take the sense of the Senate. I should be pleased if the Senate would insist that that should be stricken out of the bill and insist to the point of defeating the bill, for I believe it is wrong and unjust. Therefore, I say, instead of making one motion I should like to take the sense of the Senate upon each of these propositions.

Mr. GALLINGER. That can not be done.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me it can be done.

Mr. HALE. You can not do it on a conference report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. By unanimous consent we can take the sense of the Senate most certainly upon each proposition.

Mr. TELLER. The committee certainly has the right to take the sense of the Senate upon any proposition which we may bring forward.

Mr. ALLISON. After the report is nonconcurred in.

Mr. TELLER. After the report is nonconcurred in.

Mr. HALE. The first question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should be glad to take the sense of the Senate upon these questions.

Mr. CARTER. It is and has been far from my purpose to cast any possible shadow of reflection, or to convey any kind of insinuation intimating directly or remotely, any purpose on the part of any Senator or Representative in any way to connive at or lend aid to the unfortunate provisions of law of which I complain. Since, as appears, an agent of the Interior Department framed a provision of law relative to ceded Indian lands in Arizona, New Mexico, or elsewhere, such provision, probably through inadvertence, was added to the acts relating to the ceded Indian lands in Montana. In assuming that anyone could make a valid mining location on an Indian reservation, such agent simply acted in ignorance of the plain spirit and letter of the general mining laws of the land. The law is that all persons upon an Indian reservation, save and except the agents and employees of the Government of the United States, and the wards of the Government for whom the reservation has been established, are trespassers in the eyes of the law, and as such, prior to the complete extinguishment of the Indian title, no right can be acquired by settlement, mining location, or otherwise.

Hence it is that a provision of the law complained of, which proposes to validate existing rights, contemplates the creation of rights where none exist. No right can be initiated by or through a wrong or a trespass. Any individual going upon an Indian reservation to explore or to occupy Indian lands without the consent of the United States is a wrongdoer, and as a wrongdoer he can not initiate a right by the proceeding.

The act of the last session proposed that all persons having mining locations upon that land at the date of the survey and segregation from the Indian reservation should be recognized as valid owners of valid mining claims. Now, what was the consequence of that? The Indian agent could permit anybody to go upon the reservation as a prospector, and in the case in Montana reputable citizens have advised me that the Indian agent had the Indian police, paid by the United States, industriously chasing people off that reservation throughout the entire autumn and summer preceding it, to the end that the few favorites in the ring might have the free and untrammeled privilege to locate every part of mining country there worth locating or staking out.

The names of the individuals are said to appear upon the location notices within the Indian reservation to-day. These gentlemen are said to have located every water right within that reservation which is worth having or that can be utilized for any useful purpose. They have located every conceivable or available town site within the limits of this land, for which the United States has paid the sum of about $1,500,000, and they propose to profit by and through this overreaching scheme in consequence of the law passed at the last session through inadvertence and mistake. What we now ask is that, before the consummation of this scheme, Congress shall step in and repeal the section under which this unconscionable advantage is sought.

No one need feel hurt or injured, no person need wince or apologize, because no one is accused. We will call it inadvertence or oversight and ask that the mistake be corrected, and upon that ground and that ground alone I ask the Senate to nonconcur in the conference report.

Mr. PEFFER. Is the motion subject to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not subject to amendment. Its effect is either to concur or nonconcur in the report.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I will ask, instead of putting it in the form of a motion, that the conference report be printed, so that we can have it in separate form.

Mr. CHANDLER. That it be laid upon the table and printed.

Mr. PEFFER. That it be laid upon the table and printed, so that we may have it convenient to refer to in the further consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas ask that as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PEFFER. I do not know that that is exactly the way to put it. I am in favor of the Senator's motion, but at the same time I should like to have the report printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will all be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PEFFER. But separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They can be printed separately. Is it the purpose not to take any action on the report to-night?

Mr. PEFFER. No; I do not care about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Kansas is that the report of the conferees may be printed as a document.

Mr. PEFFER. That is it.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no reason, I will say to the Senator from Kansas, for printing the report if it is to be acted upon now. It seems to me that either there ought to be an agreement to reject the report and have a new conference, or the report ought to be laid upon the table and printed, and the deficiency bill taken up. It seems to me that is what ought to be done.

Mr. PEFFER. Whichever is the better form.

Mr. CHANDLER. For my part——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that the purpose of all the Senators may be accomplished by agreeing to send the report back to the conference committee and to print the report at the same time as a matter of guide to the Senate to see what has been reported up to this time and the points as to which difficulty exists.

Mr. CHANDLER. If that would be satisfactory to the conference committee——

Mr. HAWLEY. Nonconcur first.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Nonconcur first.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nonconcur in the report and let it be printed.

Mr. PEFFER. That will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that some progress be made at this time. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas can be fairly met by disagreeing at this time, in conformity with the motion now pending, and thereupon have at least the report printed for the information of the Senate, and several matters may be agreed to in the morning, notwithstanding the agreement to-night.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know whether I can have the floor a moment or not. There seem to be two or three Senators on the floor talking at the same time. If Senators standing claim the floor, of course I will yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am waiting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado. The Chair can not prohibit Senators from standing.

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean to complain that they are standing, only I did not know whether the Senators were claiming the floor. I do not desire to interfere with them if they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. I heard only a portion of the complaint. I heard practically nothing except what the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] stated; but I understand the complaint is that there is legislation on the bill and the conference committee have added some more to it. That is the fact. There is not any question about it. There are some things here that ought not to be in the bill. We probably added some things that ought not to be in the bill; but it ought to be borne in mind by the Senate that we are in the last hours of the session, and that there is a general desire that the bill shall pass. We ought to realize the position in which the conference committee is placed, that is, that conferees may have to make some concessions.

It can not be an offense to put legislation upon this bill. There is more legislation upon the bill than usual, but there has never been an Indian appropriation bill passed since I have been in the Senate that has not contained more or less legislation. In fact it is the only way that you can get any legislation on some questions. The best part of the legislation for the last twenty years touching the Indian question has been upon Indian appropriation bills.

The Senate the other night insisted (and I voted with them because I believed it was necessary; I believed that the good of the public service required it) that we should put on certain legislation, and I do not think it can be now complained of if there shall be a little more added in the same general direction. That is all that has been done, and that has been done to facilitate, if possible, the passage of the bill.

The Senator from Montana complains that there was some legislation put on last year. If the provision in this bill that he refers to was put in, it was put in because somebody in that section of the country demanded that it should be placed in the bill. I have no personal recollection of it, but I will venture to say that it came from some Representative of the State where this property lies. It would not have been put in without it. A similar provision has been put in a number of bills heretofore in exactly the same language, and it has been put in because every time somebody who lived in the section of the country was anxious to protect certain rights.

In regard to my own State, legislation has taken place here (I will not say it was on an appropriation bill, for I think, perhaps, it was not) that preserved the first privilege of taking the land to the prospectors who had invaded an Indian reservation in the mountains and had made mining locations. That may be a very unwise provision, and certainly, if the facts exist as stated by the Senator from Montana, it was unwise in that case at least. But what was the question presented to the committee? This provision has not been put on by the committee. In the first place, it is pure legislation as everybody knows. The question was whether it was vicious legislation when we came to look at it, but the Senate put it on, not by our consent and approval.

When the act of 1896 or the last act provided that these people had certain privileges, their position became one recognized by law, and the title that they had attempted to make became a vested and good title. A year afterwards, when some of these titles have changed hands, we assert that that was an error, or that there has been fraud under it, and we have no evidence in the world before us. There was not a statement made here by anybody that there had been any fraud. No suggestion of fraud was made to the Senate when it was put on, and if there had been it would not have made very much difference. The question is, Have you vested rights of property in individuals now, and can you take it away by legislation, and that, too, by legislation upon an appropriation bill? If I am correct about it, that provision is not only legislation, but vicious legislation. The Senator did not complain about the legislation last year; he complains of it now.

Mr. CARTER. I will state, if the Senator from Colorado will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Until the bill became a law, owing to the fact that the provisions were interjected in conference, I had no knowledge whatever of their existence, I desire at this point relative to the matter of vested rights to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. TELLER. Wait a minute. Does the Senator mean to say that that provision was put in in conference last year?

Mr. CARTER. I am so informed by my colleague, who is a member of the Indian Affairs Committee.

Mr. TELLER. I have no recollection of it; but I venture to say the Senator must be mistaken as to that.

Mr. CARTER. I may be mistaken.

Mr. TELLER. If put in in conference, it was put in because some Representative from that State asked to have it put in. It was to carry out a provision of a treaty that had been made. The Senators and Members from that State were anxious to have it become a law, and the Committee on Appropriations, I think, will not be arraigned for sometimes yielding to the seductive influence of Senators and Members who represent a section, and say that a provision is equitable and just, and ought to be inserted in the bill. I am sure no member of the committee has, on his own motion, made such a suggestion about this matter. The committee did not even know that there had been any invasion of that territory. I do not say the Senator did it. Perhaps no other Senator from his State did it, but it is very singular if that is not the fact.

Mr. CARTER. I have stated that I did not desire to be understood as directly or indirectly insinuating that this was anything save a mere inadvertence and oversight. The worthy chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee suggests that a like provision came from the Interior Department in conjunction with another treaty. It is quite probable, indeed, that having received such a provision from the Indian Office relative to one treaty the same provision might have been applied to lands supposed to contain mineral deposits in other sections as well.

Mr. TELLER. Before the Senator from Montana arraigns the committee about it he ought to know what the facts are. He does not know them; he admits that he does not know them. It is not a very pleasant thing for the committee to be arraigned by a Senator here for doing that which they did not do, or if they did it it was done upon his request or that of some one else of equal character. If the treaty came from the Department with a request that it should be ratified, it is very strange to me that hose who were interested in its ratification did not have enough interest in it at least to read it.

Mr. President, this bill is full of objectionable features as to legislation. You can not, I repeat, get a bill here that will do justice to the Indians and the public without putting in these provisions. There has always been with reference to the Indian appropriation bill a degree of latitude that never has been recognized in any other appropriation bill that comes before the Senate.

There is not anything, in my judgment, in this bill that is vicious; there is not anything in this bill that is not beneficial, and there is not anything improper in the bill, unless you say that the bill should contain no legislation at all. If the Committee on Appropriations are to be instructed as to that, it is well to instruct them now so that the committee may know hereafter exactly what they can put on a bill and what they can not, that they may make a distinction between those provisions which are legislation and those which are simply appropriations; and the line is so close in many cases that it is very difficult to draw it. In any appropriation that we propose to make we must have some latitude, and in many instances it is necessary to approach very closely to the line of legislation, and in many instances to go beyond it.

So far as I am concerned I have no particular interest in this question. I should like to take, if I can, the sentiment of the Senate on these different propositions. Then I am prepared, as a member of the conference committee charged with the attempt to agree with the House, to stand by whatever the Senate shall determine, without reference to what may be the result and what may become of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. Before the Senator from Colorado takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question for information only. Do I understand the Senator's statement to be that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs through the Secretary of the Interior recommended this piece of legislation, making the location of mineral entries valid where discoveries have been made prior to the opening of the reservation?

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I have no recollection about it whatever, but it was stated that the Senator who has the bill in charge, the chairman of the subcommittee, had stated that another treaty came here with such a recommendation, and therefore I inferred that it might have been the same case here.

Mr. WILSON. I will state the reason why I made the interrogatory. I had an item in the bill opening a reservation to mineral location, providing that that property, the title to which is not in the Indians at all and never has been, shall be opened to leases wherever any mineral lands are found. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs protests against the opening of that reservation to mineral location and giving all the people a chance. Since the original legislation has taken place a vast number of people have rushed across into that reservation and doubtless made mineral locations, but all that would be illegal and void unless legislation of this character is admitted hereafter.

Mr. TELLER. I will simply say that amendment numbered 90, by which the Senate struck out the provision the Senator refers to, contains some legislation, and I understand it was sent to the House from the Indian Office and put in there. On our part we put in the following:

> Amendment numbered 88: That the mineral lands only in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, shall be subject to entry under the laws of the United States in relation to the entry of mineral lands: Provided, That lands allotted to the Indians or used by the Government for any purpose or by any school shall not be subject to entry under this provision.

That is a reservation that the Indians have no title whatever, but which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs seeks to recognize in some sense at least by providing that the leases shall be made with their approval and their consent and that they shall have the profit that will arise out of the leasing. That we thought to be objectionable in many ways, and the Senate struck it out. The committee recommended it, the Senate struck it out, and that is one of the items that has been in conference. The House conferees receded from their provision and the Senate conferees receded from the amendment opening the Colville Reservation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the merits of any of the propositions in this bill. I do not know, if I could understand the report of the conference committee, whether I should be able to discuss intelligently the merits of any of the propositions in the bill. But I have a right, as a member of the Senate, to know, if I can, what the propositions are. It is not a question of legislation on an appropriation bill, or whether the Senate wisely put that legislation on or not. The question is as to what a conference committee ought to do, and how they ought to present to the Senate the result of their deliberations.

One year ago we had new provisions written into a conference report by a conference committee. We had a long discussion over their right to do that. The Senate finally affirmed the provisions of new legislation which the conference committee inserted, and hence we have set the precedent about which the Senator from Wisconsin has taunted us to-night.

That precedent having been set, here we have in amendment No. 81, which is a provision for directing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Yankton Tribe of Indians a four-line provision, an addition written in by the conference report, directing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with a tribe of Indians in the State of New York, no part of which provision was in the bill as it passed the House, no part of which provision was in the bill as it was amended by the Senate, as I understand it. I am told also (I do not know whether correctly or not) by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] that it is a clause which was proposed to be inserted in reference to the New York Indians which was voted down by the Senate. Now, Mr. President, has a conference committee a fair right to do that thing?

Going further, to amendment No. 91, we find a provision as the bill went from the Senate that there shall be a completion of a digest of the decisions of the Secretary of the Interior and of the courts on Indian questions. There has been added to that provision a clause providing for the auditing of certain Kaw scrip. Where was this Kaw scrip issued, and who were the Kaw Indians? What about the scrip? Was anything presented to the Senate in reference to the auditing of the Kaw scrip when this bill passed the Senate. I ask the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Iowa says not to his knowledge. And yet there comes in a conference report, which we had been taught to believe down to the vicious precedent of last year was to be a mere adjustment of differences between the two Houses on the various subjects-matter embraced in the bill, two new and entirely distinct matters.

Mr. President, where shall we be if this precedent is allowed to stand and we are to go on in this way and be compelled to sit here when a conference report comes in the last hours of a session, when the Senate is supposed to have the utmost confidence in its conference committees—if we are to be obliged to sit here and to find out what new provisions of legislation, never heard of before, have been inserted by the conference committee in a conference report, which is supposed to be only an adjustment of differences as to subjects already contained in the bill?

There is another thing I can not understand in the report, and I shall be no better off if the report is recommitted and comes back here again in this shape. The Senate struck out a long provision beginning on page 86. Page 86 of the House bill was stricken out, and pages 87, 88, 89, and 90. Five long pages were stricken out by the Senate. As I heard the report read at the desk, when trying to follow it, the conference report, instead of saying that the Senate conferees recommend that the Senate recede from striking out those five pages and agreeing to the five pages with amendments here and there, recommends a new provision in the place of the whole five pages, which, as it was read at the desk, seems to be, as you listen to it, the same amendment at first; the first page the same, the second page the same, the third page the same, and then begin little differences here and there, a word or two left out, a word or two inserted, so that it is utterly impossible for anyone to tell what lurks in the changes that the Senate conferees have made.

I do not say that anything lurks there that ought not to be there; what is there may be very beneficial indeed; but I say the Senate is entitled to have a report made to it which if those five pages are to be adopted as the law of the land, with certain alteration in the five pages which the conference committee report, the report shall state that those five pages are to be adopted with certain amendments, and should specify those amendments, so that Senators can understand what they are. Instead of that, we have these long five pages of matter read over at the desk, and it is utterly impossible to tell wherein in their wisdom the conference committee have changed the original House provision.

The precedent set last year in the Senate has been a most injurious one. It was stated at the time that the precedent was set in order to accomplish certain very beneficial results so far as the Indians were concerned.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire does not mean to be understood that because the Senate has done a thing once which is a violation of its rules and improper that that is any precedent for some action upon the part of the Senate on a subsequent occasion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think so. I did not believe that vicious precedent should ever be followed again, but I understood the Senator from Wisconsin, who seems disposed to reproach the Senate for what it did last year, to take it for granted that because of this evil precedent of last year the Senate had now broken down entirely its rule and that the present conference committee were justified in putting new legislation into this bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will agree with me that this proposition, coming here as it does, should be adjudged by its merits and by the law of this body and by the parliamentary law which applies to these cases.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. And what the Senator calls the precedent of last year has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do agree with the Senator from Rhode Island, but so far as the action of last year went, the conference committee this year had that to look to as a justification for their action this year.

It will be remembered that after the action upon the Indian appropriation bill last year it became necessary whenever a conference report came in here to interrogate the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to secure from him an explicit statement that the conferees had not written in the bill new legislation no part of which was in the bill before. I felt then that there was trouble ahead. That trouble has now come to us, and in these amendments numbered 81 and 91 we have the result. Here is a gross violation, as it seems to me, of the rules as they stood prior to last year in amendment numbered 91, which was a provision for publishing a digest of Indian laws, and you have a provision to audit the Caw scrip connected with the Indian tribes in the State of Kansas.

Now, Mr. President, we might just as well give up here and now the attempt to pass the appropriation bills between now and Thursday noon, as to spend to-night and to-morrow and to-morrow night here in the effort to intelligently deal with these appropriation bills, unless it can be understood between the Senate and the members of the Committee on Appropriations that conference committees are to deal with differences connected with the specific subjects-matter of the bill as they go into conference, and to deal with nothing else.

Now, Mr. President, I think that this report ought to be recommitted, and a new conference ordered very soon—I apologize to the Senate for taking up so much time on this subject—or else the report ought to be laid upon the table, and the Indian appropriation bill sent over until the 15th of March, the deficiency bill taken up, and an effort made to see whether we can not at least pass all the other bills but this; and then let this bill, which I characterized as a bill of abominations when it was under consideration in the Senate before the amendments were adopted, and which I fear is a still worse bill of abominations to-day, go over until it can be examined more carefully and more leisurely at the next session of Congress.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word or two upon the amendment numbered 99 in the conference report, by which the Senate struck out the provision that the children of a white woman and an Indian man should be deprived of their property rights. I think it ought to be known to the conferees that there is objection to it on the part of some members of the Senate. Why a white woman should be deprived of her property rights because she marries an Indian it is very difficult to conceive. Nothing but the old theory that a woman is no longer a person, that she is not recognized in the law when she becomes the wife of a man, can justify this proposition. Certainly that is not the rule.

The Indians doubtless have a right to prescribe under the law their own relations and their own property rights in respect to marriage, but to say that there is any difference between the case of a white man who marries an Indian woman or of a white woman who marries an Indian man in respect of the rights of their children, in natural justice, in any reason to be derived from the law, is impossible. It is a manifest injustice.

Why should the white woman who marries an Indian man, some of them highly respectable, some of them intelligent, living in the Indian tribe, giving an example of intelligence, of education, of industry, of probity, be deprived of her property rights, which is not done even under the common law, for there the rights of real estate of the woman are preserved to her when the marriage survives? Why in this case there should be an arbitrary law and Congress should not redress it if it legislates upon the subject at all, is a difficult question for me.

I think if there is anything done on this subject, this provision of the bill should be preserved, and the rights of the woman marrying according to her will, her discretion, or what motives influence her, are matters which should be considered carefully before a law is permitted to exist, by which the rights of the woman to her property are taken away from her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the members of the conference committee desire that this item shall be taken up some time for the consideration of the Senate. That of course can only be done by disagreeing to the conference report as a whole. If that is done, it seems to me the conference report might be printed and go over until to-morrow morning, and thus, if the committee desire separate action of the Senate upon any of the items, it can be had in the parliamentary way.

Mr. PEFFER. I hope that will be done.

Mr. PLATT. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Chair please state the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Montana is that the report of the conference committee be disagreed to by the Senate, and that a further conference be asked with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the report as read to-night may be printed in the RECORD. I suppose, however, it will be printed in the RECORD, having been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed in the RECORD without further order.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me it would be better to print it in bill form if that can be done before to-morrow. It will be better understood that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has asked that the conference report be printed in document form.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; in bill form.

Mr. PEFFER. I think it would be better to have it in bill form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the conference report be printed in bill form. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had the floor when the recess was taken.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to offer an amendment, which I will ask him to allow to be considered at this time? It will take only a moment, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to present an amendment, to be now considered by the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 76, line 22, before the word "legislative," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William J. Parkes and John C. Ward, assignees of A. B. & B. C. Maxwell, or their legal representatives, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,442.86, for balance due the said A. B. & B. C. Maxwell for service as mail contractors on routes Nos. 7908, 7911, 7948, and 7953, in the State of Arkansas, prior to March 31, 1861.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has that amendment been passed upon by any committee or otherwise?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not say that it has been. The records of the Post-Office Department show that there is a balance standing to the credit of these gentlemen for this service.

Mr. ALDRICH. We have not the report of any committee upon it. I suppose, however, in view of the precedents established this morning, that it is not necessary even to have that formality. I do not know that the Senate requires any such thing.

Mr. BERRY. The bill has been referred to both the House Committee and the Senate Committee on Claims. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] had it in charge. I do not think it has been reported to the Senate, but it has been reported to the House of Representatives. The Treasury books show that this money is due. The proof was taken before the House committee that it has never been paid. It stands there, an admitted claim, as shown by the books of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It stands to the credit of these gentlemen on the books of the Treasury Department now, as I understand the facts.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator would offer the amendment except upon the idea that anything would go on this bill. It is clearly out of order, not having been reported by any standing committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I only wanted it to take its chances with other things on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; I make the point of order that no committee has reported it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken some time,

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I learn that the Senate ordered a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill to be printed. I desire to move to reconsider that, and to recall the report. We can not afford to send the conference report off now to be printed, if we expect to pass the bill. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be revoked.

Mr. ALLISON. The report will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. To be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed in the RECORD, of course. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the motion is reconsidered.

Mr. MORGAN resumed the floor. After having spoken some time,

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the effect of the suggestion which was made a while ago in regard to printing the conference report on the Indian bill was understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that the conference report would be printed in the RECORD, but under the motion to reconsider, it would not be printed in bill form.

Mr. HALE. The understanding was when the bill went from the Senate that it was to be printed, as a great part of the debate was upon the point that nobody understood what there was in the bill, and that it certainly ought to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the motion to print it in bill form should be reconsidered, as it would be impossible to send the conference report, with the accompanying papers, to the other House unless the order was revoked.

Mr. HALE. I do not think any action of that kind ought to be taken in the absence of Senators who insisted that the bill and report should be printed. I certainly think it ought to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator was present who suggested the printing of it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There certainly ought not to be any revocation of the unanimous consent of the Senate given on the request of the Senator from Colorado without his being present, and he is not in the Senate. I suggest that he ought to be sent for.

Mr. HALE. The agreement of the Senate to reconsider, which was made unadvisedly, ought not to have been made in the absence of Senators who had taken charge of the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no unanimous consent that the report should be printed in bill form. There was a motion to that effect; which was agreed to. Then the Senator from Colorado asked unanimous consent that the motion should be reconsidered for the reasons which he gave; and the Senator who suggested the printing of the report in bill form was present at the time when the motion was made.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was here.

Mr. PEFFER. I asked to have the printing in bill form, and was present when the Senator from Colorado asked to reconsider the vote, and I did not object to that request; but it occurred to me that, while the reasons given by the Senator from Colorado are good, the difficulty can be obviated in this way: If the printers at the Government Printing Office understand the situation, they will first put up the matter as it comes from the reporters for the RECORD here, and then they can use the proof of that for preparing this matter in bill form. That will relieve the situation, I think, from embarrassment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that it seems to me to be very absurd to print a report that has been rejected. That conference report will never come back to the Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. That is one reason why I am very anxious to have it preserved. I want to look at it in the future.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think we ought to jeopardize the passage of the bill by delaying the conference.

Mr. PEFFER. If the suggestion I make be accepted, that need not be done.

Mr. TELLER. It can be printed afterwards, if it is to be printed simply as a curiosity. We shall have it printed after we get through.

Mr. PEFFER. So far as I am concerned, that will answer.

Mr. HALE. How will the Senate be able to understand how such remarkable things were put into a conference report unless the report is printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the amendment will be in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. If the conference reports are to be printed, all right; we will print the next report when the Senate wants it. What is the use of printing a past report? We propose to go into conference and try to change that conference report so as to agree with the sentiment of the Senate. We shall make our report, and we shall have it printed. There is no use of printing the other, so far as I can see, except to print it as a curiosity, which we can do after we get through.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think it was my suggestion that this conference report should be printed in bill form.

Mr. FRYE. It was the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion was made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLATT. I made inquiry whether the conference report, having been read at the desk, would not appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning, and received the assurance that it would be, and I thought that would be entirely sufficient. I did not make the motion or suggestion to print it in bill form. It will be in the RECORD to-morrow morning just as read at the desk.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. If we can go on with this report, using the copy of the old report, we can expedite things very rapidly. If we have to act without that before us and make a new report, it will cause considerable delay.

Mr. ALLISON. I concur in the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, who suggested a reconsideration of the order for the printing of the report, for the reason that the clerks of the committees, and especially the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, who is now dealing with this conference report in connection with the conferees, needs the old report to go on with the conference, if anything is to be done by the conferees to-night. It is perfectly easy to take another copy of this report at a later hour, send it to the Printer, and have the report printed; but if anyone is to print it in bill form with these amendments as they would be in the bill, it would require editing in a way that would take considerable time.

Mr. PLATT. It will require two or three hours of work of the clerks of the Senate in charge of those matters in the Secretary's office when they ought to be giving attention to other matters.

Mr. ALLISON. So that it can not very well be printed in bill form, embracing the original text as it will read with the agreements of the conference inserted; but it will be a very easy thing at a later hour to print the conference report itself in the form of a document. So I think that had better be done, perhaps, and later in the evening allow it to be printed in the form of a conference report, as read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that ought to be satisfactory. Certainly I have no desire to delay the conference report.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly it was no purpose of mine to interfere with whatever was understood to be the order of the Senate, but only to save two or three hours of the work of the clerks, who are very much occupied now with these bills.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the order will be modified, and that the conference committee may be able to go on, for the reason that we from the Western country are perhaps more interested in the passage of the Indian appropriation bill than any other section. It seems that every time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will——

Mr. WILSON. One moment, if I may be permitted, Mr. President.

Every time the Indian appropriation bill is up, it seems that it requires more discussion than nearly all the other appropriation bills combined, and makes more discussion. It is impossible to enact an Indian appropriation bill without legislation. There never has been one passed by Congress, nor there never will be one passed by Congress, that is not full of legislation. You can not avoid it; it is not possible to avoid it.

Mr. HALE. Then you ought to print the reports.

Mr. WILSON. Well, Mr. President, the Senator says we ought to print them. I have no doubt that a great many things creep into conference reports. This is not the first time that it has occurred. It perhaps illustrates what the Western people desire very much, but can not have in this Congress, and that is to distribute the appropriation bills, so that we shall get a little more legislation; but the Senator who is speaking to me from his seat is not in favor of that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made the suggestion to have this report printed in bill form. Perhaps I ought to give my reasons for making that suggestion. I thought at that time that it was the purpose of the committee and of the Senate to go on and consider the report, item by item, to-morrow morning, and therefore it was necessary to have it printed. If the committee expect to present a new conference report to-morrow I can see that it might not be desirable or necessary to print the old one, but if they do present a new one, it is necessary to have that one printed; that is, if it is to be anything of the nature of the one already presented, if the committee expect the Senate to understand it or any part of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in the condition of weariness that the Senate all share in, I should not venture to address myself to the motion made by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] to strike out a part of this bill relating to a claim of the Southern Pacific Company, except under the requirements of a most imperious necessity, as I understand it. I happen to be a member of a select committee of the Senate to consider the Pacific railroads, and on that committee I have bestowed much attention to the condition of the Central Pacific, the Southern Pacific, and all of the other roads belonging to that great system in the West. I therefore feel impelled by convictions, as I said, which I can not escape, to resist the driving of this entering wedge into a question of great magnitude and importance which will be largely influenced or decided, perhaps, by the action of the Senate on this part of the appropriation bill.

The time is exceedingly inopportune for considering this subject. The Senate has an opportunity on the bill that was reported here from the Committee on Pacific Railroads to pass upon every question which concerns those roads, including the one which is presented in this bill. This claim is for $1,300,000, alleged to have been put in judgment before the Court of Claims some eight years ago. From the time that the judgment was rendered in the Court of Claims up to the present, no session of Congress has passed at which there was not an effort to make an appropriation of the kind that is now before the Senate on some appropriation bill. No session has passed when this claim has not been pressed in one House or in the other, and without reference to which House has acted in refusal of it, or which House has been satisfied with it, it is enough to say that on every occasion Congress has rejected this claim. That has been gone through with, as I am informed by a member of the committee, the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] some eight or ten times; and it would seem that that ought to be sufficient to sustain the objections that are made now to the consideration of this subject on an appropriation bill.

No man can understand this question as it ought fully to be understood, and no man can, therefore, cast a clean, conscientious vote unless he can devote much time to the study of a number of papers, printed and laid before the Senate, that contain the facts that should control its decision.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask that order may be preserved. There is a great deal of noise, especially in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The officers of the Senate will see that order is preserved in the galleries.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not suppose, Mr. President, at this hour of the night, and with the Senate so weary as it is, that I can engage the attention of the Senate to the facts that I shall present; but I wish to inform Senators that I am going to put the facts on the record, and then I shall ask the country to confront them when they have voted this money on this bill, so that their responsibility will be known, whether they listen or whether they do not, and whether they pass the proposition or whether they pass it by.

This subject can not be considered to-night with any degree of fairness because of the want of time, because the Senate is pressed now with a great many other conflicting provisions of appropriation bills, in which every Senator has his own general as well as his personal interest, and we ought not to consider it. If this proposition had been brought here by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, a point of order would have arisen upon it, but inasmuch as it comes as a part of the text of the bill from the House of Representatives, no point of order lies to it, and the only way we have of reaching it is on the motion which the Senator from California has submitted, to strike it out.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not a fact that this identical claim in a certain bill heretofore before both Houses of Congress was offered by the railroad company as a matter of offset in the very bill which the representatives of the corporation desired to pass?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

[At this point the honorable Senator yielded to Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. MORGAN. Not only has this proposition, this identical account, been presented to Congress by some of its committees as an offset against the demands of the Government of the United States against the Central Pacific Railway Company, but the attorney of Mr. Huntington, who represents everything and everybody connected with this whole business, has also admitted, according to statements contained in the RECORD and quoted in the House of Representatives on yesterday, I believe, that this was a proper offset, not in so many words, but as a necessary effect was a proper offset against the debt which the Central Pacific Railroad Company owes to the Government of the United States.

Before, however, touching upon the merits of this proposition, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the present situation. Senators on this floor have informed us, and I suppose we may take it as authentic information, that on the 15th day of this month we are to be convened in extra session of the full Congress, with all of the powers under the Constitution which we possess to-night for the enactment of laws relating to every subject which concerns the welfare of the American people, and, as suggested to me by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], some that do not.

I do not know why it is that there is very great urgency in the passage of this appropriation and putting it upon this bill to-night, in this last stage of an expiring session and an expiring Administration; and if we put this measure into this bill, and pass the bill and send it to the President, he is under no constitutional or moral obligation to consider it at all; and if he adheres to a very wise practice, which I understand he has adopted heretofore, he will not act upon this bill. He will say properly that he has not time to act upon it, that the Congress of the United States through some delay has not furnished him with this bill in time to enable him to give it intelligent consideration. That reason, if no other existed, ought to cause the Senate to forbear to send a measure of this kind, surrounded by a mass of facts, to the President of the United States, which we know, and which he will find out when he comes to look into this subject, it is impossible for him to fathom in the time which is given to him. He can not read the testimony of the leading witness which has been taken before the committee of the Senate, every word of which bears directly upon this subject. What witness is that? Collis P. Huntington, who knows the whole story, and out of whom it was wrung by a cross-examination, in connection with papers, which, after all, he could not deny, but it is a mixed and conflicting statement of the facts relating to this intricate and hidden transaction, which the President of the United States, if he were to devote every moment of time to it until the expiration of his commission, could not possibly understand.

I notice, Mr. President, that the railroads, following a practice which has obtained in recent years, are found crowding their measures upon the Congress of the United States just at the close of a Congress. During the last days of the last session of an expiring Congress they are always here ready to get emergent legislation in an emergent way, and to press their demands upon us for a great deal more than they are worth—I was about to say for all they are worth, but a great deal more.

I remember at the close of the last Congress we had the pooling bill up here. The lobbies of this Capitol were crowded with railroad agents, all coming from different parts of the United States—some of them very important men—pressing the consideration of that pooling bill upon us with an eagerness and determination which I have hardly ever seen equaled. Now, to-night, in these last weary hours of this session of Congress, which has been to everybody a laborious one, we find this measure, after it has been defeated nine or ten times by the Congress of the United States, brought back through the instrumentality of the vote of the House of Representatives and thrust upon us for consideration. Its boon companion, its attendant friend, is the anti-scalping bill, with which I suppose we are to be scalped here before we get through with this session of Congress. Sir, there is not a railroad agent in the United States who has any influence with anybody here who has not been writing and begging personally and telegraphing in regard to it.

[At this point the honorable Senator yielded to Mr. HALE.]

Mr. MORGAN. If the storm is over, Mr. President, I shall proceed with my remarks. A man has to sail by dead reckoning through the Senate in such a storm as this. He can not see the stars, the moon, or any other thing by which he can guide himself or guess at his course or the speed he is making. This seems to be the worst possible time for deliberation. It is in such moments that the pressure of spoliation is most urgent. In the din of this confusion the voice of reason and the plea for justice to the people are unheard.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I can hear perfectly well the conversation that is going on behind me between Senators, but I can not hear the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please cease conversation.

Mr. MORGAN. I may as well repeat, Mr. President, that I am speaking now to the reporters and to the country; I am not speaking to this body at all, because they do not want to listen; but the facts that I put upon record here now I think will at least be read by some persons outside of these walls; and when they are read, I repeat again that Senators will feel that they are under a responsibility of which they are very little conscious, for they have not had a proper opportunity to look at this matter, and I can not at all censure any gentleman on this floor for not attempting at this late hour and under the circumstances to understand all of the facts in the history of these railroads which make up the ground of objections to this appropriation.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest in this connection a proposed amendment which may dispose of the matter, if accepted by the committee. I move to add on page 90, after line 24, what I send to the desk:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be retained in the Treasury until the final adjustment of the Government lien on the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MORGAN. That is precisely the attitude that Congress has taken toward this subject for nine or ten consecutive sessions. Nobody has ever disputed these judgments. Nobody has ever questioned the fact that the Southern Pacific Company—not the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, but the Southern Pacific Company, the Kentucky company—has recovered these judgments in the Court of Claims, and the whole matter has been adjusted so far as concerns the amount due from the Government for the transportation of mails and other things. It has been actually brought to the state of a judgment, but the judgments of the Court of Claims against the Government of the United States are not final judgments. They are not collectible except through appropriation bills. Nevertheless, the very point which the Senator from Nebraska now makes and the amendment which he offers is the point which has been ruled against this railroad company in nine or ten sessions of Congress—that is to say, that this money shall remain in the Treasury until a settlement can be had between the Central Pacific Railway and the United States Government.

On this bill we have a provision of the same sort. I will read it. It is found on page 7:

To pay the amounts due the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as set forth in House Document No. 284 of this session, $12,238.53.

Mr. WHITE. That is a Senate amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a Senate amendment, as the Senator from California very properly suggests.

The report upon that from the Treasury Department, Mr. Wike, Assistant Secretary, is as follows:

It is desirable to have these small amounts provided for in order that the accounts on the books of the Department may be closed, and as all the amounts are to be credited to the sinking fund and interest accounts of the Central Pacific Company, no money is to be expended from the Treasury therefor.

Now, in this identical bill, on report made by the Senate committee, the provision of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska has found a place in this legislation, and it is exactly right. What we want to do is not to rob anyone nor to deprive any man of his just rights, but that so long as that case is pending between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the United States, this money ought not to be drawn from the Treasury. It should either be carried into the sinking fund of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as this smaller appropriation has been by this bill, or else the payment of it ought to be suspended according to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska until that settlement can be made.

Is there any ground upon which we can place this? I have already adverted to the fact that there is testimony to show this. When you go into the details of the testimony, it is immense in its bulk, and it comes from examinations made by a commission of the United States Government which was appointed by the President under act of Congress of March 3, 1887, and reported December 1, 1887, since which time there has been no report from any other commission. The facts upon which I predicate the claim that this is a proper offset of a debt due to the Government from the Central Pacific Railroad Company are stated in that report.

Now, before I go any further with it, I wish to show what is the present effect of that report. The facts have not changed since the report was made. The commission consisted of three very prominent men, Mr. Littler, Mr. Anderson, and Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania. They went out West, examined Collis P. Huntington and Leland Stanford and a large number of other witnesses upon nearly all the facts which showed the relationship between the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Other facts that fully sustain their report have since been laid before Congress. They came back and made their report to Congress.

At a recent date, during the last session of Congress, Mr. Huntington came before the Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads for the purpose of promoting a bill for the settlement of all the difficulties between that company and the United States Government. He was attended by witnesses, counsel, and a large retinue of friends, I suppose you might call them, or servants—I do not know which would be the proper appellation—standing around to do his service and promote his wishes in every possible respect. He was armed cap-a-pie with a statement of the whole case as he understood it in advocacy of his measure. But he was put under oath by the committee, by order of the Senate, and examined and cross-examined as a witness, and here is his testimony reported to this body, covering a number of pages—more than 100 pages of closely printed matter. In that examination the basis of the cross-examination was the report of the Government commission, and Mr. Huntington was given every opportunity that he could possibly ask to controvert the facts stated in that report and the conclusions to which these commissioners came. The examination was intended to elicit evidence that would give to the Senate of the United States a true idea of the exact situation of this railroad company and its relations to this Government.

Now, in that testimony the report of the commission was laid before Mr. Huntington; his own deposition and that of Leland Stanford, given under that examination, were laid before him, and he had a full and fair opportunity of contradicting as much of it as he might be able to show was mistaken or erroneous; and, Mr. President, the result was that his testimony confirmed the report from end to end, except that he undertook to cast very improper suspicions and criticisms upon the commissioners themselves, one of whom, I understand, is now his fast friend. I do not know what caused the change. He got around on the other side, but he can not take the facts out of the report which he put there. Mr. Huntington could not swear them out, and there they stand. The report of the commission is now sustained by Huntington under cross-examination, and when it comes to be unfolded the conclusions they reached were absolutely just and fair, and show that this is the most stupendous fraud that was ever perpetrated upon a government in the history of mankind. Here it is perfectly plain and palpable. It is a record of shameful malversation that has no parallel.

I can not afford to-night to undertake the very severe task of going back and giving even an outline of the situation as described in Mr. Huntington's testimony sustaining the report. There are some prominent facts, however, connected with it that it is proper I should state now, for the purpose of showing—and that is all I am trying to show—that we can not to-night properly try and determine this case; that it ought to go over, and that it ought to be made the subject of a separate bill. Whenever the question of this sum of $1,300,000—a pretty large sum after all—is brought before this body, it ought to be scrutinized upon a separate bill brought in and passed here, if it does pass, which has but one purpose, and that is the determination whether the claim is a just one, or, in other words, whether the Government has a proper offset to it.

On this proposition I assume that what is now called the Southern Pacific Company is identical with the Central Pacific Company—identical in its management, in its ownership, and in all the equities that affect it, in the trusts that attach to the situation of these directors in the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and which trusts, whenever they are brought within reach of a court of equity, must be enforced in favor of the Government of the United States. It may be said—lawyers might say—that this proposition is in the nature of an equitable set-off. I do not care what you call it. It is a set-off that is supported by justice and truth. It is a set-off which shows that the men who are claiming this money here to-night under the appropriation bill are the men who owe it to the United States.

Some intimations have been thrown out that perhaps Mr. Huntington was induced to press his demands upon Congress at this time because he had been useful to some political party. I do not make myself a party to any such accusation. I will never, while I am on the floor of the Senate, undertake to impeach any man except upon a state of facts which I believe to be honestly true and of which I have some knowledge. Therefore I cast no such imputation upon any person in connection with this transaction. But I do say, upon evidence that has been submitted under oath in the report of these commissioners, that the claim now presented against the Government of the United States has been satisfied forty times over by demands that Huntington and his associates owe to the Government of the United States as the owners of the Southern Pacific Company, who own the Southern Pacific Railway Company.

The Committee on the Pacific Railroads made a report to this body at the last session, in which they sum up the actual amount of the indebtedness, and for the sake of convenience I will refer to that report for just a moment. In Table B, on page 9 of their report, they put the estimated debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company on January 1, 1897, to the United States at $57,681,514.29, and that debt is the basis of the bill which was reported here for the purpose of extending it through a long period of years, more than seventy years, according to my calculation.

Now, this company on the 1st day of January, 1897, owed the United States Government more than $57,000,000, presently due, according to the report of the committee made to this body, and they are claiming from this Government $1,800,000 because the judgment happened to be rendered in the name of the Southern Pacific Company, when that name merely stands in fact and in law and in morals for the Central Pacific Railroad Company. To prove that proposition with absolute thoroughness would require me to examine a very large amount of testimony and a number of facts, all of which, however, are indisputably and indubitably established in the testimony that is now within reach of the Senate upon printed documents of an official character which have been brought in here from one place and another, from a committee of this body, from the railroad commissioners who have reported here, from the reports of the railroad commissioners, and others who have incidentally furnished us with facts that bear upon this proposition.

The general and correct statement is that four men built the Central Pacific Railroad Company. They were Huntington, Stanford, Hopkins, and Crocker. In reality they were partners, although their interests were borne in the form of stock in a construction company with which they built the Central Pacific Railroad, and, after that, in other corporations created only for their convenience. That construction company, called the Contract and Finance Company, had but four stockholders. It was a California corporation, created for the purpose of building the Central Pacific Railroad. It had four stockholders, whose names I have stated. The Central Pacific Railroad Company when it was built had four stockholders, and they were the same persons. So these four stockholders, the men whose names I have called here to-night, made a contract with themselves for the building of the Central Pacific Railroad. For the purpose of getting the money to build that railroad the bonds of the United States were issued to them, as the road progressed toward completion, by sections. An exactly equivalent amount of bonds was issued and sold by them. In order to give to those bonds, which at first were second-mortgage or second-class bonds, the priority in the market and to make them worth par, to say the least of it, perhaps a premium, the Congress of the United States, at the solicitation of these four men, gave to these bonds a priority of lien, or rather, to speak a little more accurately, a priority of satisfaction, for the statute does not give a priority of lien, but a priority of satisfaction out of the proceeds of the mortgaged property whenever it may be realized in money. At all events, they have that precedence.

Then they issued $100,000,000 of the stock, voting it themselves. They took all of the stock and all of the bonds, those issued by the Government and those issued by the company, and out of that stock and those bonds they paid themselves for building the road, first making a contract with themselves and then taking the entire assets of the corporation and converting them, when they could or when they wanted to, into money, and out of that fund they built the road. In addition to that, they had a land grant of many millions of acres, which have yielded to them many millions of dollars, and they have yet on hand a large body of very fertile land in California and all along the line of their road, more particularly in California.

Here, then, is the corporation, organized by four men who owned it, called the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Here is another corporation, a construction company, called the Contract and Finance Company, organized by the same four men. They make a contract with themselves for the building of that road, and they take the assets of the corporation and they build the road. It is scarcely conceivable that there could be a more complete ownership of a piece of property than that. But they were acting under a charter of the United States Congress, and they were directors and incorporators and stockholders in this corporation to build the railroad, and in each of these characters and all of them they were trustees for the people of the United States for the faithful administration of that great public trust. They were debtors to the United States also, and were bound, as trustees, to protect that indebtedness, and to apply to its satisfaction the trust estate in their hands.

Now, the question recurs, and will always recur, as to whether they have been faithful in the execution of that trust. That is a very simple question. It does not require any very great lawyer to understand that directors and managers and owners of stock in a railroad company are responsible as trustees to whoever has the right to hold them to accountability, to all their creditors at least. They are accountable as trustees for the management and administration and application, in good faith, of all the assets that come into their hands, to the payment of the debts of the company, especially the trust liabilities. I do not think it worth while to delay the Senate of the United States in the discussion of a proposition that is mere hornbook learning, and which any student in a law office understands perfectly well. There stand those trusts, created first by the law and next by the express agreement of the company in the administration of the law—the law which pertains to and regulated and controlled this great corporation—these four men being the stockholders and directors of the company. In every character which they held and in every form of justice and obligation these four men were all the time and are now responsible as trustees.

What have they done as trustees? They have gone on and they have built or purchased other railroads, quite a number of them, as many, Mr. Huntington says in this testimony here, as forty, largely, if not exclusively, from the assets of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. They got additional charters from the State of California, and these same four men would organize from time to time a new construction company for the purpose of building these new railways. When they had got the Central Pacific Railroad built and there came to be a suspicion that the Government of the United States would be calling them to account about this business, Huntington burned the books of the first construction company. He deliberately had them burned and destroyed, so that, as he supposed, there would never be any opportunity to know what those books contained, and everything would depend upon the frailty of human memory and perhaps the greater frailty of human conscience from that on. After having cleared off the books in that way and closed the accounts by burning them up, and, as he supposed, concealing from the world all knowledge or possibility of knowledge of these transactions, the same four men set to work to build or purchase these additional roads. Out of what property or what money or what capital did they build or buy the additional roads? The evidence in this case is beyond all controversy in proof that these roads were built, nine parts out of ten, with money realized out of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. BUTLER. Out of the construction or the operation of it?

Mr. MORGAN. The operation and construction, too; but of course there are no accounts about the construction.

Mr. BUTLER. What evidence is there that the books were burned?

Mr. MORGAN. The reports are full of it. Mr. Huntington could not deny it. I can not stop here to go through the record, but the Senator has my assurance that the record proves it beyond all controversy.

Mr. WHITE. It is admitted all round that they were destroyed by somebody.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; and Mr. Huntington could not deny it under examination.

Mr. BUTLER. Could the responsibility for the burning of the books be traced to Mr. Huntington except indirectly?

Mr. MORGAN. It is traced, and not inferentially, and if you will take that deposition and read it you will find he could not get out of it. It was impossible. He fixed up a good many pretexts as reasons why he burned them, or had it done, but he caused them to be burned. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. CAFFERY. May I interrupt the Senator from Alabama? I have been very much interested in his statement showing how the construction company built the Central Pacific Company in the nature of a trust imposed upon them by having all these assets. If it is not too much, I ask the Senator from Alabama in this connection to trace the relation between the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Company, so as to make such a legal identity as would allow a set-off, one debt to the other.

Mr. MORGAN. That would take me a long time. I am speaking from the record here and from the facts, all of which are presented to the Senate.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will ask whether the stockholders of the Southern Pacific are the same as those of the Central Pacific?

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, in the extract which I read this evening from Judge Payson's statement before the House of Representatives, he concedes that they are the same; and if I may be permitted to repeat it, I ask the Senator from Alabama to read the extract, which I think he has before him, and which, I think, answers the inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. MAGUIRE says:

Now, Mr. Chairman, Judge Payson—

We all know him—

one of the attorneys of the Southern Pacific Company—

Not the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, but the Southern Pacific Company, which I will explain presently—for the collection of this very claim, was called upon while he was before the Committee on Appropriations of the Fifty-third Congress to explain a confusion in the accounts between these companies, showing that they paid no attention to obligations as between themselves. His answer, from which I now read, will be found on page 112 of the report of that committee of hearings on April 19, 1894, submitted to the Fifty-third Congress. On that occasion Judge Payson—and he ought to know as much as any of us upon this question—said:

"The Southern Pacific Company has leased the Central Pacific for ninety-nine years upon the payment of a certain amount of money guaranteed, and whether there is any provision of the lease between the Central Pacific Company and the Southern Pacific Company as to these outside expenses I do not know; but I should say, practically, it does not make any difference what the contract is, because, substantially, the shareholders of one are the shareholders of the other, and it is like paying out of one pocket into another pocket of the same man's clothes."

I suppose that attorney knew what he was talking about. Certainly Judge Payson was never accused of having an imperfect knowledge of what he said.

Mr. WHITE. Regarding his own client.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir. Before I proceed to that I wish to read from the report in answer to a question put by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], as to whether or not these subsequent railroads were built out of the earnings.

I find here the statement of the dividends of the Central Pacific Railroad Company between 1874 and 1894. The gross earnings were $886,992,020, nearly a billion dollars. The operating expenses were $512,229,852; net income, $374,762,168, nearly three times enough to pay off the mortgage debt upon that railroad property to the United States and to the first-mortgage bondholders. That enormous sum was paid to the stockholders in dividends between 1874 and 1894.

In that period we do not know, from any evidence in the case, who were the stockholders. If they were other than the original four, it was because they had sold the stockand got the money for it.

Now, Mr. President, when we are talking about trusts and the duties of trustees, here was a duty that devolved upon those men to set apart that fund, but they put it in their pockets. They owed it to honesty and public duty to apply it to the payment of their debt to the Government of the United States and these mortgage bonds, which, to convenience and enrich them, we made first-mortgage bonds by statute. How can anybody who has a decent respect for justice say that these men had the right, technically or otherwise, to put this vast sum of $374,762,168 into their pockets and leave these debts go entirely unprovided for?

Mr. BUTLER. The net profit for twenty years was $374,000,000 on the Central Pacific?

Mr. MORGAN. On the Central Pacific. Those were the dividends. They were the actual dividends paid out, not to say anything of the great amount of money that had been put into betterments of this property which they owned themselves. There is no wonder that colossal fortunes were built up there. They could not help it. With the vast amount of traffic they had, the vast resources of money that they commanded, they could not help building up these enormous fortunes of which we hear so much.

When this debt began to approach maturity, Mr. Thurman and Mr. Edmunds of this body took up that subject, and in the Committee on the Judiciary perfected and reported to this body the Thurman Act, which is monumental as to their ability, skill, and integrity. When these people saw that coming, they first challenged it in the Supreme Court of the United States, and said that the Congress of the United States had no right to pass such an act, that it was an invasion of private rights—vested rights.

Then after the Supreme Court decided that the act was constitutional they commenced scheming to get their property out of the way, transferring everything that they could possibly transfer from the Central Pacific Railroad into new schemes and enterprises which they built with the money that came from the Central Pacific Railroad.

Now, Mr. President, here is a remarkable fact. That road is presented to us as being a bankrupt institution. It owes us now the amount due upon every one of these bonds. They have never paid a bond of the United States that I have heard of. The Secretary of the Treasury might have bought some bonds in with a part of the sinking fund, I do not know; but they have never paid a bond. They have never paid a first-mortgage bond. They have left the whole weight of the bonded indebtedness to rest on the Government, and we have been compelled, out of the Treasury of the United States, to pay the interest as it accrued upon these bonds until the sum of interest that we paid amounts to more than $34,000,000.

Now, while that was going on, while the Government of the United States was advancing to them under that unfortunate act of Congress the interest, and had no right, as the Supreme Court decided, to resort to this railroad company for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury out of the assets of the company, ought we not to hold them to the duty of replacing these enormous amounts of money that they declared as dividends upon their stock and putting it into a sinking fund, or paying the bonds as they mature. Putting these dividends into the sinking fund would have been the proper way to do it. They could thus have provided for their debt to the United States, and still have grown very rich.

I desire the attention of the Senate for one moment to this fact. Notwithstanding this alleged bankruptcy, the board of directors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or of the Southern Pacific Company, have been declaring dividends down to this day on the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. They have been paying dividends upon the stock of the British stockholders. It has not been a large dividend, but it has been large enough to keep them at rest. I have not heard that any dividends were paid upon stock held in the United States. Where is the majority of the stock held now? Fifty-one per cent of it is held in London, leaving 49 per cent in the United States. Upon that 51 per cent of stock they have been paying dividends down to the day of the last report that they have made.

Now, where did they get the money to pay those dividends? Who has paid it? I have a copy, from a paper that was sent to me, of one of the certificates issued. Issued by whom? Not issued by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but issued by the Southern Pacific Company, the Kentucky company, which I will presently describe. I will read now a copy of that certificate:

The Southern Pacific Company announces that after January 1 it will pay a dividend of one-half per cent on the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company on dividend warrant No. 81.

Here is a company organized in Kentucky paying dividends upon Central Pacific stock. How does that happen? How would it happen that the very company to which the bill refers here and to whom we are about to vote $1,300,000 is paying dividends on Central Pacific stock? Of course it is because they own the concern; that is all of it. There is evidence enough, Mr. President. That sort of evidence would hang a man if he were accused of piracy. But the Southern Pacific Company is not robbing the Central Pacific Railroad Company. It really owns that road and is performing a kind service to it by inducing the British stockholders to forbear a strict inquiry into its officers.

On a former occasion, in February, 1894, Mr. Huntington had also been before the Committee on Pacific Railroads. I will read his examination on that occasion for the purpose of giving the Senate an idea of what this Pacific Company is. Before reading that I will state what they did after they had built and bought these forty railroads. Huntington says there were forty. He gives the names of them here somewhere, but I have not laid my eyes upon it to-night. How far do those roads reach? They reach from New Orleans to Portland, in Oregon, with a number of branches running out in different directions to different valuable points, forty roads in all, different organizations. The owners of these roads concluded that they would move out of the reach of the jurisdiction of the courts where those railroads were; that they would get away from inquiring stockholders and bondholders and people, and that they would go to Kentucky and get a charter that would include all of them. They went to the State of Kentucky and got a charter for what was called the Southern Pacific Company. The word "railroad" is not mentioned in it.

The Southern Pacific Company was given the right under the Kentucky statute to build railroads anywhere except in Kentucky. When the legislature granted them the charter in Kentucky, they said, "You can not build any railroads here, but you can own all that you can buy; you can own steamship lines and all that." Thereupon they took these forty railroads which they had bought, the stock of which was owned almost exclusively by them, and they exchanged the stock in those roads at a rate that they agreed upon with the respective companies into the stock of the Pacific Company, that Kentucky company.

Now, how was the Kentucky company organized? What was its capital stock? It consisted entirely of shares of the various railroads reaching from New Orleans out to Portland, Oreg. They assembled the shares of those different railroads and put them in their treasury, or rather they put them in the hands of a trustee, and upon that basis they issued stock to the respective parties who had built the roads and owned them. They issued what they call warrant stock, to pass by delivery from hand to hand. Who were those parties? Still the same four and their heirs and administrators. Some of them had died, and this was a convenient way of transacting their business. What kind of stock did they issue? A species of stock never known in reference to any other railroad about which I have read or heard. It was called warrant stock, as I have said, and is so arranged that there can scarcely be any responsibility on the stockholders. Under such circumstances, and in favor of such stockholders, it certainly is the duty of the Senate to withhold the payment demanded in the House bill until the accounts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company can be settled with the Government. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska covers the point I have been trying to present in the confusion that prevails in the Senate, and in spite of so many interruptions, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH (at 11 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, this is very valuable information that the Senator from Alabama is giving. It seems to me there ought to be more Senators present to listen to it. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey having suggested the want of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Carter,	Hoar,	Roach,
Allen,	Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Shoup,
Allison,	Chilton,	Kenney,	Smith,
Baker,	Clark,	Lindsay,	Squire,
Bate,	Cockrell,	McMillan	Stewart,
Berry,	Cullom,	Mantle,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Warren,
Caffery,	Gear,	Perkins,	White.
Call,	Hale,	Platt,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Quay,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but only to say a few words on the order of business.

I hope Senators will bear in mind that at 12 o'clock to-morrow morning there will only be twenty-four more hours, day and night, before the session absolutely closes. The sundry civil bill has not passed; the naval bill has not passed; the fortifications bill has not passed; the deficiency bill has not passed, and the Indian appropriation bill has not passed. I want Senators to bear in mind that it will only be by an earnest effort on the part of everybody to expedite these bills and get action on them, that we can finally pass them. When the bills fail, a great many matters upon them, of interest to the public generally, fail and nobody can tell what will be done afterwards. It opens the prospect of an indefinite length of an extra session of Congress, the prolongation of our labors here through the long seasons of the spring and summer, and all of that will be greatly disembarrassed if we pass these bills.

I can not pass them; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] can not pass them, nor can the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], nor can any of the Senators who are in charge of these appropriation bills. We are entirely in the hands of the Senate. But I think it is right and proper to state now just what the situation is. Pretty soon we will adjourn, for we shall find ourselves without a quorum, until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and then there will be only twenty-five hours before, by constitutional limitation, the session of the Senate ends, the Congress ends, and all of these things are left upon our hands.

With that statement of the case, I leave everything to the judgment and good sense of Senators.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Maine with reference to this motion to strike out made by the Senator from California, if he knows any reason, if the majority is to rule, why there should not be a vote?

Mr. HALE. On the other hand, when the matter came up the Senator from California raised the point, and I expressed myself then as willing to take the vote. If the Senate wants to strike the provision out, the country can get along without it.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator from Maine will agree that I did not spend any particular time in debating the matter.

Mr. HALE. No; I am not reproaching anybody. I felt the necessity of the provision, and so I could have gone on and defended it in a certain way to my satisfaction, but to me the thing significant to be gained was the vote of the Senate upon the matter. If the provision went out, that was the end of it. I say that the country can live, notwithstanding.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why can we not vote now on the motion of the Senator from California?

Mr. WHITE. I should like to say something about that, but not while three Senators occupy the floor, one of whom is not entitled to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that Senator the Senator from California?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has not the Senator from New Hampshire the same right to occupy the floor as the Senator from California?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from California does not assume to occupy the floor; he is merely standing up.

Mr. HALE. I think we may now come to some understanding by conferring in this way, and I am willing to yield to any Senator who has a suggestion to make.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the attention of the Senator for a moment.

Mr. HALE. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the amendment I proposed will be satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from California. It is to the effect that this money shall be kept in the Treasury until the final adjustment of the Government liens upon those roads.

Mr. HALE. That presents very clearly and distinctly the views of certain Senators, and it may be of a majority of the Senators in the body, and I am entirely willing to submit to the vote of the Senate upon it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. I assume that there is no question about the justice of this claim and that the Government ought, as a matter of self-protection, to retain this money in the Treasury until the final adjustment of the controversy respecting the Government liens.

Mr. WHITE. Which may result in the liability of the Southern Pacific Railroad——

Mr. STEWART. This does not belong to the Central Pacific.

Mr. WHITE. It belongs to the same people.

Mr. STEWART. It does not.

Mr. WHITE. I have never heard before any distinction, and the recognized attorney, who appears as an attorney, has stated that they are the same people.

Mr. STEWART. It came out in the evidence that most of the Central Pacific stock was owned in Europe and the other stock by different corporations.

Mr. HALE. But the Senator does not want to debate this question, and I think we had better have a vote on it, and then vote on the other matters that may be presented, and pass them or defeat them.

Mr. STEWART. The judgment was that it was not the Central Pacific road.

Mr. HALE. We shall be helpless unless we proceed to vote. There will be no quorum here in an hour from now.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Nevada wants a vote upon it, why should we not have a vote?

Mr. HALE. Let us have the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he does not understand that the Senator from Nebraska has offered an amendment to this proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes; some time ago I offered an amendment,

Mr. STEWART. That does not change the status.

Mr. ALLEN. But the money ought not to be taken out of the Treasury until there is an adjustment of every claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 24, on page 90, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be retained in the Treasury until the final adjustment of the Government liens on the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote upon that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Do not ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read again.

Mr. WHITE. This must have been on account of the subscription of the president of the road to the antisilver fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. STEWART. In regard to that, let me state that it has nothing to do with the adjustment of the Southern Pacific Railroad with the Central Pacific.

Mr. WHITE. That is the whole question.

Mr. STEWART. No. Let me state the facts for a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. If there is going to be a debate about this, I claim the floor.

Mr. STEWART. No; but there has got to be a division. That amendment defeats the provision in the bill. The money is in the Treasury now.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator from Nevada if he intends to demand a division or a call of the roll to-night?

Mr. HALE. If he does, that will be the end of the bill, of course.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator intend that there shall be only one side established in this case?

Mr. WHITE. That is not the question. I am only asking the Senator——

Mr. STEWART. By interjecting this amendment they choked down the extension, and that can not be done.

Mr. WHITE. My friend will certainly concede that I did not choke anybody down, but in the present condition of the Senate I am only asking the Senator whether he wishes a roll call?

Mr. STEWART. I certainly do.

Mr. WHITE. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; let us have the roll call, and if Senators will vote without announcing pairs we shall have a quorum.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think on the expression we have had on the viva voce vote that it makes any difference about explaining his views, as the Senate has indicated its wishes?

Mr. STEWART. That we have adopted it?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly, but I no not think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. STEWART. It can not be voted out without some debate.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not voted out at all.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can not be concerned about determining the matter when the result is already determined.

Mr. WHITE. I renew my motion. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

Mr. WHITE. For the present I withdraw the motion, but I desire to say to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] who addresses me, that I am willing to stay here any reasonable length of time, but if we are to talk about this matter for an hour or two and have a roll call, we will find ourselves without a quorum, and it is absolutely absurd to remain here. We might as well adjourn and prepare for work to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me make one remark. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has been discussing this question for some time. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] feels that he has not had a hearing on the question. Why not give the Senator from Nevada a few minutes' time to express his views, and then have a vote?

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Nevada agree to limit the debate and take the vote at any hour to-night?

Mr. HALE. The Senator will not occupy much time.

Mr. STEWART. I want twenty minutes.

Mr. HALE. That is all right.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest that the Senator from Nevada have a few minutes in which to give his views, and then that the vote be taken, as the other side has already been heard.

Mr. STEWART. If the other side has been heard——

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada be allowed twenty minutes within which to address the Senate upon this topic, and that those who favor the amendment be permitted ten minutes to answer him.

Mr. STEWART. I agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that twenty minutes be allowed to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to present his views on the subject before the Senate, and that those in favor of the amendment have ten minutes to reply.

Mr. HALE. And then a vote.

Mr. WHITE. And then vote.

Mr. STEWART. Does that include an agreement to have a vote at that time?

Mr. WHITE. That the vote be had in thirty minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that the vote be taken immediately thereafter. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. STEWART. In 1862 Congress passed an act providing for the construction of the Pacific railroads.

In that act it was provided that the charges for doing the business of the Government should be credited on the bonds—the whole of it. In 1864 Congress amended that act, allowing the company to receive one-half compensation. In the meantime the Kansas Pacific Railroad was constructed, a part with subsidy bonds and a part of it without, and the Denver Pacific was constructed, having no bonds. The Government withheld one-half of the compensation of the Kansas Pacific Company. The company sued for that portion of the service on the nonaided road; it went to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court held that the Government had no right to retain the compensation to the company for any part of the nonaided road. The Denver Pacific for a part of the line also brought suit, and the Supreme Court held that the Government must pay those that were not a part of the aided line.

In 1878 the Thurman Act was passed, which, so far as this matter is concerned, revived the act of 1862 and provided that the Government should retain the entire compensation. The Central Pacific in the meantime had constructed in California two or three hundred miles of nonaided road. They brought suit against the Government for the compensation on the nonaided road. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the act of 1878 simply revived the act of 1862, and that the company was entitled to receive full compensation upon all portions of the road that were not aided by bonds.

Then the Southern Pacific Railroad of Kentucky was formed, a corporation in Kentucky, which owned the Southern Pacific road through California, Arizona, and New Mexico. It leased the Central and some other branches. It made a contract with the Government to carry the mails. The Secretary of the Treasury contended, after the company had rendered $1,800,000 worth of service, that the Kentucky corporation had no power to contract and no right to receive compensation for the services performed. The company sued, and the Court of Claims held that the Government, having made the contract with the company and received the service, could not question its right to be incorporated and to perform its function. The Government took steps to appeal it to the Supreme Court, but finally abandoned the appeal. When the appeal was abandoned, the Government paid the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for its services and has continued to pay it. That ended the controversy.

At that time there were about $3,000,000 due. The Senate has passed at almost every session bills for the payment of those judgments. At the last session Congress paid part of it. They paid a little over fifteen hundred thousand dollars on it, which includes something more than the amount that had not gone to judgment, leaving on the eighteen hundred thousand dollar matter—I speak in round numbers—thirteen hundred thousand dollars, which is a judgment unpaid. The House had each time refused to pay and disagreed with the Senate until last year, and at the last session the House put in a partial payment. At this session of Congress they put in the balance to close up the transaction.

The Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific are distinct corporations. Mr. Huntington and two or three others own stock in common, but the great mass of the Central Pacific stock is owned abroad. I do not know where the Southern Pacific stock is owned. That came out in our investigation. They are entirely distinct corporations. The Government has not aided this road. It stands upon the plain contract. It has been regularly paid without objection since the decision of the court.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Has the Government any lien on the Southern Pacific?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; and the Southern Pacific does not owe it a cent.

Mr. PLATT. This amendment speaks as if it does.

Mr. STEWART. This amendment undertakes to take the property of one company and give it to another. All this talk about the Central Pacific is entirely irrelevant. It is another company, another corporation; and it has been so held by the decisions of the Supreme Court. It is entirely distinct—a nonaided road. It does not owe the Government a cent. Some of the stockholders may be the same, but most of them are different.

It was stated here that the Southern Pacific was built by the Central Pacific money. That is a mistake. There is $40,000 a mile mortgage on the Southern Pacific. It was constructed with these bonds. They bonded it to the extent of $48,000 a mile. That is what it was built with. Whatever money these men may have made matters not. The Southern Pacific road was built with bonds issued to the full amount of the construction. It is an independent, nonaided road, with which the Government contracted and refused to pay on the ground that it was not competent as a corporation to contract to carry the mails.

The court said that the Government, having received the service, had no right to raise any such question, either in law or equity; that it could not be inquired into in that collateral way. Since that was decided by the court, the Government has paid for its mail service right along. But to involve in this plain judgment, which remains here drawing interest, a question of the settlement of the Central Pacific, another corporation, not connected with this, except there may be some common stockholders (the majority are not), and take their money is wrong. This company has this bonded debt out, and if you involve them in that way you will injure their credit.

The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is a great deal worse than the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, because it assumes what is not true, that the Southern Pacific is liable for the payment of the Central Pacific's debt, which, I say, is not true. If that be true, the Southern Pacific would also be embarrassed, and to have it go out to the stockholders and bondholders of the Southern Pacific Railroad that their property is held to pay the debts of the Central Pacific would do great injustice. I would rather it would be beaten altogether.

But it seems to me after it has been passed by the Senate on argument so often, it being a clear proposition, a clear debt, a judgment in favor of a company that has not received any Government aid, it is not right to tie it up in this way. After all that has been said, and after years of consideration, finally the House has come to this conclusion, and has twice passed the appropriation. Here it is in the act of last year:

Payment to Southern Pacific Company: To pay the claims of the Southern Pacific Company, its branches and leased lines, certified in Senate Document No. 236, this session, $1,542,979.44.

Most of this indebtedness arose after the judgment for the $1,800,000, and while that suit was pending. The appropriation included what had not gone to judgment and a part of the judgment, leaving some $1,300,000 unpaid. This is the remainder which is in judgment, drawing interest under the law, and it has no more connection with the Southern Pacific Railroad, so far as this obligation is concerned, than an indebtedness of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad would; and to assume that it has is unjust. It is contrary to the decisions. If I had time, I could read the decisions showing that there is no connection.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEWART. I do.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator whether in the litigation in the Court of Claims the issue was raised as to whether these were substantially the same company or different corporations?

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. STEWART. The question in the Supreme Court was twice raised, and it was decided that nonaided roads were not liable for the debts of the aided roads.

Mr. WHITE. I deny that any such question was ever litigated anywhere.

Mr. STEWART. It was three times raised in the Supreme Court whether the Government could retain the freight money on roads that were nonaided, and the Supreme Court decided in Kansas Pacific against the United States, in Central Pacific against the United States, and in Denver Pacific against the United States that the portion of the roads which were nonaided were not liable for the debts of the aided roads, although at the time these decisions were made the companies owning the nonaided roads also owned the aided roads. The companies were the same, but the United States Supreme Court held that the companies were not liable to render the Government service on the nonaided portion of their roads without compensation.

The statement of Mr. Payson that slipped in there amounts to nothing. It is against the entire facts and the history of it. In the Court of Claims, the Government availed itself of all the reasons it had, and the Attorney-General followed it up until the case was exhausted. Under the law as the Supreme Court had declared it, if the Central Pacific had owned all the roads the Government would have been compelled to pay for services on the nonaided roads; but the Central Pacific Company did not own the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's lines or any part thereof. The two companies were separate and distinct.

It is true that the Southern Pacific leased the Central Pacific line and the Government retains the compensation for the services rendered by the Central Pacific Company. It retains the entire compensation on the aided road, and applies it on the debt of the aided road. But this is for service on nonaided roads by an independent corporation, under an independent contract made by the Government with the Southern Pacific to carry the mails. The company performed the service and the Government raised the flimsy pretense that the corporation had not the power to make the contract and receive the money. This defense was repudiated by the court. It had no merit whatever. Why should not this judgment be paid? Why it should be tied up to pay another company's debt is more than I can comprehend.

I could go into all the details of the case of the Central Pacific, etc., but it is not in this case at all. It is simply a question whether the Government will pay its judgment. The service ought to have been paid for after it was performed. The Government raised a shallow objection and kept the road out of its pay for years and years and years. It has passed the Senate time and time again. The House rejected it on the idea that it was the Central Pacific Railroad. The name deceived it. The House is a very large body, and it has little time to consider such matters on appropriation bills. But when the question was understood the House recognized its justice and paid part of it last year and this year it proposes to pay the remainder.

Now, the Senate is called upon to reverse its action, and say, after the House has consented to it and after it has paid part of it, that it will not pay the balance of it, which has gone to judgment. It is a very plain case, and that is all I care to say about it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the rendition of a judgment upon claims of this kind is no more binding upon Congress than this. The judgment is in effect a statement from a competent tribunal that the claim is a just one. Whether there is anything else which in the opinion of Congress ought to be offset against it is quite another matter. If Congress believes that the railroad company in this case owes money, certainly the Government has a right to ask that the matter be submitted to final adjudication.

I admit that my friend from Nevada is dealing with this matter impartially. He says Judge Payson, who is a salaried attorney of the railroad company, does not know what he is talking about. My friend from Nevada is not a salaried attorney of the railroad company; he is not in the pay of the company, and he is not in its secrets, and he does not represent the company here; but Judge Payson does.

Mr. STEWART. I was on the committee and heard the testimony, and the fact came out before the committee, what I think no one will deny, that a majority of the Central Pacific stock was owned in Europe; and my friend from Alabama stated that that was one reason why he wanted to deal fairly with the company, to protect those stockholders, because most of them are foreigners.

Mr. WHITE. But Judge Payson is to-day the attorney, and surely the Senator from Nevada does not claim to occupy that rôle.

Mr. STEWART. I claim to occupy the rôle of being on the committee and having heard the testimony and knowing what it is, the incidental remark of Judge Payson does not weigh against the conceded facts in the investigation which were brought out and which we know to be true.

Mr. WHITE. The present enthusiasm of the Senator from Nevada is of course reminiscent of a former condition, which has no application to present conditions as far as he is concerned. But Judge Payson, the attorney of the company, states that the stockholders are the same. The Senator from Nevada, who now is not the attorney of the company and who now has no personal relations with the company, assumes to question the statement of a man who is duly authorized to act and who is acting for the company. I suppose that the admitted statements of the admitted attorney are of more validity than the statements of the Senator from Nevada, who in days agone was on a committee and who has no intimate relations with that corporation.

Mr. President, I do not say that ultimately it may not be determined that the Government owes this money. I say it is doubtful. Mr. Payson, their attorney, says the stockholders are the same. I believe it. I know the men who dominate the one company are the same men who dominate the other, and every man familiar with the conditions surrounding both corporations knows that to be true. And I say that if, upon a legal analysis of the situation, it is discovered that after all it is a great partnership, entered into for the purpose of defrauding the Government and taking out of the hands of the Central Pacific Company assets which ought to be devoted to the satisfaction of a claim owed by that company to the Government of the United States, and if there has been a fraudulent diversion of those assets into the channel leading to the Southern Pacific coffers, equity will reach it.

I claim that to be the case. Let that question be decided by the courts, and let the Government, now admittedly without much money in its coffers, pay that money to claimants regarding whose claims there is no dispute, and leave these matters doubtful, almost sub judice, to future solutions. I am willing to rest the case, and I ask for a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. STEWART. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Nevada insist upon the yeas and nays? I do not believe that there is a voting quorum present.

Mr. WHITE. The very object of the agreement was that we should not have the question taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood the unanimous-consent agreement to be that there should be no yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. HALE. There is a quorum on a roll call, but so many Senators have the practice, which I think is a bad one, of announcing on every question that is not a party question a pair that we can not count on the presence of Senators.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I suggest that when it was agreed that twenty minutes should be allowed upon one side and twenty minutes upon the other side, it was also agreed to that there should be no yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that was stipulated, but I hope there will be none. Let us have a viva voce vote.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that one-fifth of the Senators present must second the demand before the yeas and nays can be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. STEWART. Then I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS.]

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. FAULKNER'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but to make a quorum I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is not present.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. VILAS. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. That, of course, would make the decision of the Chair upon the viva voce vote stand as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. There ought to be no objection to that, it seems to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the call for the yeas and nays be withdrawn and the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate. The amendment, therefore, of the Senator of Nebraska is adopted.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let us see if we can not finish the bill.

Mr. CLARK. I beg leave to offer an amendment. On page 83, after line 6, I move to insert:

To pay Leslie C. Baker the difference between the salary he has been receiving and that of a messenger of the Senate from December 9, 1895, to March 4, 1897, $472.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. On behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], who is detained from the Chamber by sickness, I offer an amendment which has been submitted to the chairman of the committee. It is to come in after line 17, page 90.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Campbell, of the State of Oregon, the sum of $1,165, being the amount found due by the Court of Claims for property taken by the Army during the war of the rebellion, as reported to Congress in House Miscellaneous Document No. 132 of the second session of the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. HALE. Now, can we not have the bill reported to the Senate?

Mr. ROACH. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has been recognized.

Mr. ROACH. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 13, after line 14:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the estate of A. H. Herr, deceased, late of the District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,288.55, allowed the estate of A. H. Herr by the Secretary of War for the use of his premises, known as Herrs Island, near Harpers Ferry, by the Army, during the late war.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 18, page 10.

The amendment was read, as follows:

To pay to the trustees of the Newberry College of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of South Carolina, in Newberry, in said State, the sum of $15,000 for injuries to the buildings of said college, resulting in its destruction, and caused by the troops of the United States while in possession of it and occupying it as a barrack, after the close of the war, in 1865, in South Carolina, and said sum shall be in full payment of all claims by said college on account of the use, occupation, and loss of the buildings.

Mr. HALE. What committee does that come from, Mr. President?

Mr. TILLMAN. This bill has passed the Senate twice, and it has had a unanimous report in the House.

Mr. HALE. I simply want to know whether it is the report of a committee, or was passed at the present session of the Senate. If that is not the case, the amendment is not in order under the practice of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. It passed the Senate, I think, last spring. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order against it, when so many others have got their amendments through, and take advantage of my ignorance, from the fact that I did not get a report on it. No doubt I could have got a report on it, because it has already passed through the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It passed the Senate on January 26, 1896.

Mr. HALE. I have not let in any amendment that has not been reported by a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that the bill passed the Senate January 26, 1896.

Mr. TILLMAN. It passed the Senate in the last Congress, it has passed this body twice, and it was reported by the committee in the other House, and would have passed there but for the fact that it could not be reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I offer an amendment, to be inserted on page 76, line 22. It has been reported from the Committee on Claims not only once, but a great many times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, at the end of line 22, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Daniel Woodson, deceased, late receiver of public moneys in the Delaware land district of Kansas, the sum of $1,162 46, for office expenses, under the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, for appropriation, in accordance with said act, and favorably reported upon by the Senate Committee on Claims by Report No. 959, on May 15, 1896, on Senate bill No. 1438.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Ely Moore, deceased, late register of the land office in the Pawnee land district of Kansas, the sum of $4,115, for clerk hire and office rent, under the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, for appropriation, in accordance with said act, and favorably reported upon by the Senate Committee on Claims, by Report No. 959, on Senate bill No. 1438.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I offer an amendment which is simply to correct an error made in the enrollment of a bill at the last session, which has been submitted to the Committee on Commerce, examined, and reported by the chairman of that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. There can be no doubt but that amendment ought to be adopted. I think that will complete pretty much the sort of legislation that is to go into this bill. If there is any other kind that has not been suggested, it ought certainly to be offered to this bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not arrive at that conclusion until we see the character of amendments that are coming. Perhaps it may turn out that the Senator is too hasty in his conclusion.

Mr. VILAS. This amendment is entirely proper.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to it, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

To correct an error in enrolling the act of June 30, 1896, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the sum of $5,000, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in continuing the improvement of the harbor at Green Bay, Wis.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the President of the United States be authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the leader of the United States Marine Band as a first lieutenant of marines not in line of promotion with rank, pay, and emoluments of officers of that class.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have an amendment which ought to go along with certain amendments in the bill. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

For the infliction of the injuries and the destruction of the property hereinbefore in this act paid for, done and achieved by the Army of the United States during the suppression of the rebellion, apology and regret are hereby duly made and expressed in behalf of the people and Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which an amendment on page 40 was adopted.

Mr. HALE. Do not enter the motion to reconsider, but move to reconsider, because we want to pass the bill to-night.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Very good. I make the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, beginning in line 1, on page 40, and going down to line 2, on page 41, relative to the mileage of officers in the military establishment, was adopted.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Senator can not take me off the floor to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I make this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to these words at the top of page 41:

And in addition thereto he shall receive transportation in kind.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that the motion to reconsider is not debatable.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the Chair state the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to strike out, the Chair understands.

Mr. NELSON. The Chair is mistaken; it is a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The mover has a right to make a statement of his reasons.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, there was adopted this provision:

Provided, That hereafter the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army shall be 4 cents per mile, the distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes.

That was adopted a few weeks ago and became a law. In the deficiency bill now under consideration there is a proposition to change that, and change it by the addition of these words, to which I call the attention of the Senate:

And in addition thereto he shall receive transportation in kind.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is right. I think those words ought to be stricken out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Those are the words I wish to strike out. I move to strike out of the amendment those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the amendment was adopted will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 1, after the word "routes," it is proposed to strike out "and in addition thereto he shall receive transportation in kind."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 25, on page 9, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no deputy official or assistant or any person handling money, employed in any branch of the public service for whose default or misconduct any superior officer under bond to the United States may be answerable, shall be subject to civil-service laws, rules, or regulations, and all orders, acts, and parts of acts inconsistent with this proviso are hereby repealed and rescinded.

Mr. CHILTON. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 26 minutes a. m., Wednesday, March 3, 1897), the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, March 3, 1897, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[Continuation of legislative proceedings of March 1, 1897.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 10 o'clock a. m., Tuesday.

PLANS AND ARRANGEMENTS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONY.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the following resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules are hereby directed to inquire, ascertain, and report by what authority of law, or otherwise, and by whose direction, and for what reason or reasons, the platform for the inauguration of the President-elect is now being constructed upon the space between the central staircase and the Senate wing of the Capitol, east front, connecting alone with the entrance of the Senate wing, as an adjunct of the Senate, instead of being located in front of the central staircase, accessible equally from both House and Senate wings, as has been the unvarying practice ever since the Capitol was first constructed; and also whether the House of Representatives has any right of participation in the preparation of plans and arrangements for the inaugural ceremony.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will it be in order to offer an amendment at this time? I understand a platform is being constructed immediately in front, and I would like to know by what authority it is being constructed.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has not reached the amendment stage, as the Chair believes the gentleman from Tennessee will recognize. It has not reached the point of being referred to the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not hear what the Chair said, as the gentleman from Missouri was speaking to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose if the gentleman had put the resolution in the hands of the Clerk, it would have gone to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. PAYNE. But there is no objection to its going to the Committee on Rules by this method?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to say.

Mr. BARRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman why he does not put the resolution on its passage by unanimous consent?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think it is proper to have the resolution first considered by a committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If objection be made to the resolution, would it not go to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It would, provided it was deposited in the proper way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So that the resolution will reach the same destination, whether we object or not.

Mr. BARRETT. As I understand, this resolution directs the Committee on Rules to make certain inquiries——

The SPEAKER. The resolution has gone to the Committee on Rules by the consent of the House.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House take a recess until half past 10 o'clock. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] informs me that an appropriation bill will probably be ready at that time for consideration.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until half past 10 o'clock.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 10167, known as the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which has just been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken up, the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in, and a conference with the Senate asked.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Pending that request, I want some little explanation from the gentleman making the request. How does this House know that we want any conference at all on these amendments? I reserve the right to object, pending the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, it is not usual to pass a great appropriation bill like this without a committee of conference. I do not believe it would be possible in this case to do so. The Senate has added amendments, considerable in number and amount. I have not myself looked at the bill since it was returned, and I do not know the exact amount of the amendments, but they aggregate some $2,000,000. I have no idea that the House would concur in those amendments and pass the bill without a conference.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What are the amendments?

Mr. GROUT. Well, sir, they are on various subjects.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, what?

Mr. GROUT. One is, as I understand—I have not had the bill before me this morning. Will the Clerk please hand me the bill? Here on page 1, I find an amendment appropriating $6,720 for a free public library; on page 2, I find an amendment to enable the register of wills to compare, correct, and reproduce certain records, will books, etc., $2,000. Then there is a provision for the payment of judgments for lands condemned for the extension of Sixteenth street. The appropriation for that purpose is a large one.

Mr. HULICK. Is the gentleman reciting these amendments for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] or for the information of the House?

Mr. GROUT. For the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois, evidently.

Mr. HULICK. I suggest that the gentleman might take the bill to his committee room and examine it item by item for himself.

Mr. GROUT. I will go through these amendments seriatim, if the gentleman chooses. These amendments make a total——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I want to know whether there is any serious difference between the House and the Senate. The gentleman has referred to sundry amendments. Now, those amendments may be in accordance with the wishes of a majority of this House.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether these various amendments do not appear in the Senate proceedings as published in the RECORD.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; all of them.

Mr. PAYNE. So that the gentleman from Illinois and all other members have access to the amendments in that form, without having the time of the House taken up by the reading of them in detail in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am not asking a detailed statement of all these amendments; but the gentleman from Vermont is asking unanimous consent, which means the consent of every member of this body, including myself. Now, I am not going to delay the action of the House or the committee of conference on this bill; but when such an extraordinary request as that is made, I should like to have it accompanied with some sort of a statement showing that the course we are asked to adopt by unanimous consent is proper.

Mr. GROUT. I do not understand that this is an extraordinary request; it is the usual request. Of course it is competent for the House to refer all these amendments to the Committee on Appropriations, have them considered there, then brought into the House, and considered in Committee of the Whole. But the gentleman must know that if this bill is to become a law there is no time for that.

The gentleman seems to be in doubt whether we would not want to agree to all these amendments. Sir, the House passed this bill without these amendments. The presumption is that the House passed the bill in the form which pleased it and as it thought the bill ought to be. These amendments have been put on by the Senate. Very likely we shall be compelled to agree to some of them; but I am sure the House will never agree to them all.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to know how many amendments there are.

Mr. GROUT. I do not get my eye on the number.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman apparently does not know much about them.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that I have but just got my hand on this bill, with no time to examine it. I can not, of course, tell all about these amendments at this moment, but I know enough about it to believe that the House will disagree to many, if not most, of these amendments.

Mr. DALZELL. Do the amendments reduce the amount?

Mr. GROUT. Oh, they increase the aggregate of the bill about $2,000,000, as I understand.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does not the gentleman move to suspend the rules?

Mr. GROUT. I will. Mr. Speaker, I move——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I withdraw any objection to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. MORSE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know, in the event of there being unanimous consent, if it will be in order to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The House has a right to make instructions, but it is unusual at the first conference.

Mr. GROUT. After the conferees come in, it is competent for the House to instruct the conferees on any subject, and it would seem that it would best expedite the passage of this bill to let it at once go to conference. It should be remembered we have only two days, and if the matter is to be delayed by further debate, I shall move to suspend the rules and nonconcur and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. MORSE. The matter which I have on my mind is the appropriations added to this bill in the Senate for sectarian charities in the District of Columbia, which the House refused last year and reaffirmed this year.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I supposed I had the floor.

Mr. MORSE. I think I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] made a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MORSE. I am extending the inquiry now, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.] I hope the House will indulge me. I do not desire to impede the public business; but I simply desire to say that this House has taken a very firm and decided position in regard to the appropriation of public money for sectarian charities.

Mr. STEELE. I think we ought to have the regular order, and not a speech.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT]?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the proposition stated. There was confusion, and it was impossible to hear the gentleman's proposition distinctly.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORSE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House conferees be instructed to insist on the attitude of the House in regard to appropriation of public money for these sectarian charities in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman ought to know that by nonconcurring in the Senate amendments the House expresses its disapprobation of all these amendments, including the one that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] has in mind, and that the action of the House is really an instruction to them.

Mr. MORSE. Well, I want to emphasize that matter. I am not disposed to delay the public business, and I withdraw the motion; but I want the conferees to understand the feeling of this House in regard to this matter of continued appropriation of public money for sectarian charities in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], the House nonconcurs in the Senate amendments and asks for a committee of conference.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the naval appropriation bill may be printed with the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, may be printed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman state——

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate amendments will be printed. The next proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is for unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. McMILLIN. Touching that I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will give my reason for the request. As he is well aware, we are in the closing hours of the session——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. They all say that. Will the gentleman come to the point?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman from Illinois will be kind enough to restrain his youthful impetuosity for about two minutes, I will give him some information. If he will preserve that dignity which always characterizes him when he occupies the chair, he will get along very finely. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that the Senate at midnight last night completed twenty-eight amendments to the naval appropriation bill. There has been no opportunity, up to this moment, to carefully examine them. Undoubtedly the action of the House Committee on Naval Affairs would be to ask a formal nonconcurrence, and it seems to me that we shall accomplish the desired object very much more rapidly by nonconcurring, and allowing the conferees of both Houses to get together and eliminate whatever it may be possible to of controversy, and then come back to the House with the questions that may remain at issue.

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe that the amendments do not cover a great deal of space, so I should like to have them read. It is about the only opportunity we shall have to hear them read, if the bill goes to conference as an entirety.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state to the gentleman that the amendments will not be intelligible unless accompanied by the text of the bill, because many of them simply amend by striking out so many words and in lieu thereof inserting some other words.

Mr. McMILLIN. All I wish is to get at an understanding of the material changes of the bill; and I will ask the gentleman to state what are the material changes in the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The material changes are the authorization of certain vessels, some torpedo boats, and a sailing vessel for the Naval Academy, and a modification of the paragraph treating the subject of armor plate.

Mr. McMILLIN. What modification do they make in that? That is one of the subjects on which I desire to inquire.

Mr. BOUTELLE. They reduce the price for armor plate to $300, and insert a specific price per ton; whereas the House, acting upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, had computed the amount at the rate of $400 a ton, because some deemed that preferable to placing a specific price for a commodity in a law.

Mr. McMILLIN. The reason I call attention to it is that it has struck me all along that we have been paying enormously for this armor plate, and I wanted, if possible, in this bill, as two, three, or four immense ships will soon have to be plated, to get some means of cheapening the construction. I desire to call attention to that. Now, as to the torpedo boats; how many are provided for?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Three torpedo vessels.

Mr. McMILLIN. Three torpedo boats and one sailing vessel for the Naval Academy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. One sailing vessel as a practice vessel for the Naval Academy.

Mr. McMILLIN. On that subject, while I would not like to ask the gentleman to anticipate the action of his committee, nor give any expression that he would not want to in anticipation of his committee's action, does the gentleman think at this time, when sailing vessels are so little used for naval purposes, that these young men should receive their training in a sailing vessel when their practical work will be in steam vessels?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state to the gentleman, in reply, that this vessel has been requested by the Superintendent of the Academy for use as a training vessel for these boys. This will not take the place of training in steam vessels, as they have a gunboat already assigned for that purpose; but it is believed by the Superintendent and by many of the best officers of the Navy to be a very desirable method of preliminary training for the boys, and I share in the feeling very thoroughly myself. I will state, however, to the gentleman from Tennessee that the House committee, while at first contemplating requesting the House to authorize at this session one additional battle ship and also this small vessel, of which type two have been requested by the Superintendent, we determined finally that we would relinquish our strong desire to ask for the authorization of another battle ship, on the ground that I stated the other day, that the bill was necessarily large, and the circumstances in which we are placed were such as to seem to render it expedient to delay for one session the authorization of another large battle ship. We thought it seemed rather diminutive to come in and ask for one little craft, and we thought that we would postpone that also.

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly; it is a modest request.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It will only cost $250,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. But I desire to call attention to the fact that we are proposing as a training ship a vessel that will never be used in any other naval battle in the world, and it does seem to me that every step taken in training a naval officer ought to be in connection with some kind of a vessel that will be used in naval warfare; and it is utterly useless to expend any money in the construction of a kind of ship that will never be seen in conflict at all. I simply want to say that as a preliminary; and I want to say in that connection that I know the Naval Committee are better posted and better prepared to deal with this question than I am; but we all have our opinion upon these things, and I desire to state mine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the gentleman from Tennessee and I will coincide entirely after a little conference in regard to the matter. The construction of this vessel for this purpose is not intended as a backward step or a substitute for instruction in existing steam vessels; but it is believed by Superintendent Cooper, of the Naval Academy, and it is a view also held by some of the very foremost of the naval officers, that there is no school of preliminary training of the nerve, eye, and self-command so efficient and desirable in the early training of these boys as on board a sailing vessel, to be followed up by technical training on board of a steam vessel as their education proceeds.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If my friend will allow me, I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Senate struck out this provision, which was put in by the House committee, giving the Secretary power to ask for a contract with the contractors who are now building the last three battle ships authorized by Congress to furnish the armor plate for those vessels; the point being this—that instead of the Government spending $1,500,000 to establish an armor plant, or putting the least onus of building an armor plant on the Government, this would be placed upon the contractors of the vessel, who might see fit to build the armor plant so as to fulfill their contracts with the Government. The Senate struck out that provision.

Mr. McMILLIN. I can see that the House provision on that subject would be, in my estimation, much better.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there is one of these amendments upon which, if it suits the convenience of my genial friend in charge of the bill, I would like to have a separate vote of the House. That is the provision relating to armor plate. Gentlemen will remember that in previous Congresses our attention has been called to armor plate and the manner in which it has been furnished, and that the present Secretary of the Navy has given out contracts under which the Government has been compelled, as I understand, to pay at the rate of $520 per ton for the armor plate for the Kearsarge and the Alabama. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is about the figure.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, at the close of this Democratic Administration, the Secretary of the Navy recommends that in future the price be limited to $400 per ton, and, as I understand, that is the figure that was adopted by the Naval Committee of the House when the bill was presented, but the Senate, with the additional information which that intelligent and able body possesses, has reduced the figure to $300 per ton.

Mr. MEREDITH. What sort of an Administration did the gentleman speak of?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I said at the close of this Democratic Administration.

Mr. MEREDITH. We on this side are not informed that it is a Democratic Administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, there are a great many things that you do not know, which yet exist. [Laughter.] The Senate has reduced this item $100 per ton, and I would like to make a motion, and I do make a motion, that the House concur in that Senate amendment. I do it for this reason, that the president of the Illinois Steel Company, one of the great iron and steel industries of this country and of the world, has given it out publicly that if that company is permitted to bid it will furnish for $340 per ton armor plate in every respect as good as that which is now being furnished the Government for $520 per ton.

Mr. MILNES. What is the financial standing of that company at this time? Is it good?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It has a capital stock of $40,000,000, and such men as Marshall Field, George M. Pullman, Mr. Rockefeller, and others of that class are the stockholders.

Mr. MILNES. Has there not been something in the daily press recently about that company being bankrupt?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Oh, no. If there has, I have not seen it, and it is not correct.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is one of the wealthiest and strongest institutions in America.

Mr. DALZELL. Does my friend from Illinois know how long it takes to build a plant to make armor plate?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes; I know all about it.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman know how much money it takes to build a plant to make armor plate?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes; I know all about that.

Mr. PITNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Oh, one at a time! I can not be interrupted every moment. The point I am making is this, that if this great steel industry of Chicago can furnish this armor plate for $340 per ton at a profit, then it would seem that the company which is furnishing armor plate now at $520 a ton can well afford to take contracts in the future for the sum specified in the Senate amendment, $300 per ton.

Now, I appeal to the members of this House, upon the showing that has been made here, that instead of nonconcurring in this Senate amendment the House ought to concur in it, and ought to say to the Navy Department and to this great Carnegie Company which has been furnishing this armor plate in the past that if they desire to continue to furnish armor plate to the Government of the United States they must furnish it at a figure that is at least reasonable.

Mr. Speaker, I am not perhaps so familiar with the facts as the learned gentleman the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, but I am credibly informed that this same company, which has been furnishing armor plate to the Government of the United States for the Kearsarge and the Alabama at the rate of $520 per ton, furnished the same kind of armor plate to the Russian Government for $249 per ton.

Mr. TOWNE. And delivered it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And delivered it in that country. Why can not an American institution furnish to the Government of the United States armor plate for the great war vessels of our own Navy as cheaply as it can furnish armor plate to foreign countries? Why is it that we should be required to pay this extravagant sum under the administration of the present Secretary of the Navy for the plating of the Kearsarge and the Alabama, and yet this same company should furnish armor plate at the rate of $249 per ton to a foreign government? I now ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if he is willing that at this stage the House shall vote to concur in the Senate amendment fixing the price of this armor plate at $300 per ton?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to say to the gentleman that my reason for asking a nonconcurrence is because the amendments are involved. The Senate has struck out what we concede to be important safeguards.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. On this item?

Mr. BOUTELLE. On this very item for the purchase of armor plate. We had a very carefully prepared paragraph covering this subject in a way that seemed to us to be well guarded, irrespective of the question of price. The Senate modified it in various ways. They eliminated some of what we regard as important portions of the provision which the House passed; and I think we can reach a conclusion a great deal better if the House will allow us to go into conference and see if we can not agree with the Senate upon what may prove to be nonessential things, and come back here with a concrete proposition. Now, the gentleman from Illinois ought to feel a share of the gratitude of this House to me for having refrained with a great deal of effort from pouring out a stream of eloquence on the subject of this armor plate.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do; I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman does. I am perfectly willing he should substitute some eloquence of his own——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Oh, no; I do not wish to do that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will only reciprocate in the interest of the public business, I shall be grateful in return to him.

This is a complicated question; it has not been stated to the House in detail. No such partial statement as the one just made by the gentleman from Illinois, though he may have intended it to be just, is a sufficient basis on which this House can intelligently act. This is an intricate problem. This whole matter of furnishing armor plate to the Government is one which can not be disposed of in a phrase. There are numerous misleading conditions here to-day that ought to be eliminated if this question is going to be discussed. I should be glad, if time allowed, to take part in such discussion.

We hear about some great concern somewhere that is ready to do something at a certain price. There is no such proposition pending at the Navy Department; there is no such proposition pending in the House of Representatives; there is no such proposition pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs. There is not a responsible proposition, so far as I am aware, anywhere to-day to furnish this armor for these ships at any price whatever. We have bought armor in the past from the Carnegie Company, and we have bought armor from the Bethlehem Company.

Mr. DALZELL. Will not the House have an opportunity to discuss this matter fully when the conference report comes in?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I accept the gentleman's suggestion; I have tried three or four times to make that suggestion. If my friend from Illinois and my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will kindly bear with me a moment, let me say, my proposition is that the House nonconcur in these amendments now, so that we may bring the matter back here later with some of the nonessential features eliminated, if possible, and then have such a discussion of this armor question as the House may deem proper.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is one difficulty which stands in the way of the gentleman's proposition, and the difficulty is twofold. In the first place, the conference report will come in as an entirety; it must take that shape; it must be accepted or rejected as a whole. In the second place, that report will come in during the last hours of the session, when there will be no opportunity to discuss deliberately any question, and when we shall be obliged to take whatever we may be able to get, whether it is exactly what we wish or not. I do not mean to insinuate that the committee will not be intelligent and painstaking in the discharge of its duty. But I do not believe—and I give my opinion now for whatever it may be worth, and gentlemen of the House will determine whether I am correct—I do not believe that when our committee shall have worked with the Senate conferees for two days in the closing hours of the session, the conference committee will come in with a proposition naming anything like $300 a ton as the rate to be paid for this armor plate. My apprehension is that if we do not accept that price now, the Senate may give us guarantees and promises as to future matters of control, but that the contract price will go upward. These are the reasons I have been hopeful that at the first opportunity we would accept a reasonable rate.

Now, I have no doubt we have had to pay heretofore—and I am not blaming any of the officers in charge of the matter—new inventions always come high; new processes so important as those involved here are of course covered by patents, and the patent necessarily makes the price high—but I do believe we have been paying enormously for our armor plate, and that if possible we ought to get a reduced price.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that his statement that the Bethlehem Company furnished armor to the Russian Government at $249 per ton delivered at St. Petersburg is true; but it is also true that to-day that same company is furnishing to the Russian Government the same armor at $527 per ton. The latter is the price obtained under competitive bidding; the English armor-plate manufacturers bid the lowest that they thought they could afford—$540 per ton. The original contract at $249 per ton was, as the Bethlehem Company alleges, taken at a loss for the purpose of breaking into the European market.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. Is it not a fact that the only party that offers to make armor plate, outside of those who have already made it in this country, is a party that has no armor-plate plant? Is it not a fact that to build such a plant will take three to five years and an investment of four to five million dollars? Is it not further the fact that the only proposition made by that party is conditioned upon the United States entering into the contract for twenty years to come? Are not those the facts?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will say to my friend that I understand the Illinois company has no plant; but it is not a fact that it will take three years to complete a plant, for the Secretary of the Navy, in his report to the House, prints a proposition from a company in England to furnish an armor-plate plant in this country inside of a year and a half at a cost of $1,500,000.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not believe the English company can do it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The suggestion of my friend does not meet the proposition. The proposition is as to whether the companies that are now furnishing this armor plate to the Government of the United States are doing it at exorbitant prices or not. I am here to maintain that the Government can get this armor plate for $240 a ton, and that if we accede to the Senate proposition for $300 per ton, instead of the House proposition of $400 per ton, still the Carnegie Company, which furnishes this armor, will make a handsome profit. I am also informed that the Secretary of the Navy admits in his report, or in communications that he has made to the Naval Committee of the House, that at the rate of $400 per ton, which he has proposed in his report, the company will make the enormous profit of 50 per cent. Think of it for a moment! One of the great Departments of the Government recommending that a private concern, in dealing with the Government of the United States, shall make a clear profit of 50 per cent upon its transactions. Six per cent is regarded as a large profit made in individual enterprises between man and man.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; but that is a continuing enterprise.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Why should the Government of the United States tax our people for the purpose of still further increasing the wealth of one private concern at the rate here indicated? I say the time has come for this House itself to take some action in the premises, and I trust that if I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman in charge of this bill he, as one of the conferees, will insist that the House accept the Senate amendment and make armor plate hereafter at $300 per ton instead of $550 per ton.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Where did the gentleman get that five minutes?

The SPEAKER. All this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I shall have to make a motion to close this matter up.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman that, with the understanding that the conferees of the House will agree to the $300 per ton for armor plate, I have no objection at all to his request. I can see the force in what he says about the language that should properly guard and protect the Government of the United States, and I know the skill and ability of the gentleman in such matters. I would not embarrass him at all, but upon the broad proposition that armor plate hereafter shall be furnished to the Government for $300 per ton, I insist that the House shall have a voice, unless the committee agree to it, without action on the part of the House.

Mr. LOW. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The proposition before the House is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] for unanimous consent?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. With that understanding, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen about me have called my attention to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], while the Speaker was engaged in putting the question, made some observation, just as he was about sitting down, that with some understanding he would do so and so——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Maine to assent to any understanding.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not, and I want it so understood.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew his objection on that understanding.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I withdrew my objection with the statement to the gentleman that I would do it on that understanding.

Mr. BINGHAM. In the hope; not the understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked unanimous consent after the gentleman had taken his seat, and no objection was made.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Would it be in order to instruct the committee upon that amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order, now that the House has nonconcurred.

CONFEREES ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House on the District of Columbia appropriation bill Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY.

CONFEREES ON THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House on the naval appropriation bill Mr. BOUTELLE, Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CUMMINGS.

Mr. DALZELL. Is not my motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois) there were—ayes 100, noes 27.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 2, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ROBERT M'GEE.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The bill was read, as follows;

A bill (S. 229) for the relief of Robert McGee.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claim of Robert McGee, to be paid out of interest money due to the Sioux Nation of Indians from the Government of the United States the sum of $10,000 in compensation for damages sustained by him by reason of having been scalped and otherwise injured by the Brule Sioux Indians while serving as a teamster with a train conveying Government supplies to Fort Union, N. Mex., July 18, 1864; and if said Secretary, after giving a hearing or an opportunity to be heard to said Sioux Nation of Indians, shall find said claim to be equitable and just, he shall pay or cause to be paid said sum of $10,000 or such part thereof as he shall decide to be justly and equitably due to the aforesaid Robert McGee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for the reading of the report.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. TELLER, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. HILL, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HILL, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. CLARK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 12,000 additional copies of Arbor Day: Its History and Observance; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in red cloth 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolutions:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 10,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint for 1896; 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint, 3,000 for the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the Senate.

There shall also be printed and bound 3,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of Precious Metals, for the year 1895, for the use of the Director of the Mint.

There shall also be printed and bound 5,000 copies of the Coinage Laws of the United States; 2,000 for the Director of the Mint, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the Senate.

Also:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print for distribution by the Department of State 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations for 1895 and 1896, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc., being part of said Commercial Relations.

RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 12,000 additional copies of Arbor Day: Its History and Observance, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture—

To the Committee on Printing.

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in red cloth 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State—

To the Committee on Printing.

ROBERT M'GEE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was again reported.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the report be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The right of objection is reserved.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 229, have carefully considered the same, and report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Senate report is made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 572, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Indian Depredations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 229) for the relief of Robert McGee, report the same favorably to the Senate, with recommendation for its passage, and adopt as their report the statements and report made by the committee during the Fifty-second Congress.

Considering the large number of affidavits presented, there seems to be no question as to the helpless condition of the claimant, Mr. McGee, or as to the statements made that he received his injuries at the hands of roaming bands of the Sioux tribe of Indians. In the judgment of your committee the Secretary of the Interior, after hearing the arguments pro and con, can safely be trusted under the provisions of the bill to pay this man from such funds of the moneys of the Sioux Nation as may be available.

[Senate Report No. 1230, Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

Your committee, to whom was referred Senate bill 3582, respectfully report the same favorably with amendments.

It appears that in July, 1864, a supply train started from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., for Fort Union, N. Mex., in charge of one J. L. Riggs. When they had arrived at the Great Bend of the Arkansas River, Walnut Creek Station, Kans., the party was attacked by a band of the Brulé Sioux Indians under the leadership of the chief, Little Turtle. The massacre which followed was one of the most bloody, nearly all being killed or wounded. Of those wounded was one Robert McGee, now of Excelsior Springs, Mo., a boy, being then about 15 years of age, who was pierced by ten arrows, scalped, and tomahawked in a most brutal manner. He was taken to Fort Larned, where by the skill of physicians and careful nursing, he was partially restored to health, though suffering greatly from contusions of the skull, which have made his life a struggle against suffering to the present time.

The statements here made as to his identity and present condition are supported by the affidavits of many reliable citizens who knew him then and who know him now. Among these are Hulbert H. Clark, M. D., of Santa Cruz, Cal., attending surgeon of hospital at Fort Larned, Kans., in 1864, and who cared for Mr. McGee. He says:

"In the matter of Robert McGee, I, Hulbert H. Clark, M. D., a resident of Santa Cruz, Cal., hereby certify that while in the United States service as acting assistant surgeon, being stationed at Fort Larned, Kans., as post surgeon, did, on or about the 16th day of July, 1864, receive into the United States post hospital Robert McGee, a boy about 16 years old, who had been wounded in numerous places, including the almost complete (entire) removal of the scalp, his wounds and injuries being inflicted by the Brulé Sioux Indians led by Chief Little Turtle, in their attack upon a Government supply train, then en route westward, being on the day of the attack which, I believe, was July 14, 1864, at or near the Great Bend of the Arkansas River, from which point the wounded reached Fort Larned two days later. That said Robert McGee remained in my charge about three months, during which time he was visited by General Curtis, who instructed me to give him special care; also gave McGee an order on the quartermaster for such clothing as was necessary for his comfort.

"When he left the hospital he was very weak, and fully two-thirds of the surface of the skull was not healed, being covered by a very delicate coat of granulation and which bled upon the slightest friction; also a wound of the left elbow and in left groin were still open. How he survived is unaccountable. When he reached the hospital he was unconscious from shock, loss of blood, and want of food. It was several days before he could whisper so as to be understood. He was handled by raising him in the sheet, his many wounds—some fourteen in number—about chest, arms, and abdomen prevented us grasping in the ordinary manner. I have not seen him since he left Fort Larned.

"I made a report of all the cases that came to my charge at that time, making McGee's special because of his youth and its severity. I have no interest in any claim he may make upon any Department of the United States Government.

"H. H. CLARK, M. D.,
"Ex-Acting Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of November, 1892.

"ED. MARTIN, Clerk,
"By D. J. MILLER, Deputy."

Other affidavits of a like character are furnished by Nathan Swan, of Klova, Colo.; James L. Riggs and Martin Brown, of Pike County, Mo.; D. B. Gresham, of Meriden, Kans.; Miss Martha Sapp, of Wyandotte, Kans.; Jasper A. Hanna, of Brunswick, Mo., who was a private soldier at Fort Larned, and acted as nurse to Mr. McGee during his sickness; J. R. Tunks, of Caldwell, Mo., who also acted as nurse for a short period. A letter from Mr. Belt, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of November 7, 1892, states that, under treaties of April 8, 1868, and agreements of February 28, 1877, and March 2, 1889, the Brulé Sioux Indians, of Rosebud Agency, S. Dak., were made sharers of the beneficiary appropriations made to the Sioux Nation.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended, so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the claim of Mr. McGee for $10,000 compensation for his injuries, and to pay the same, if just and equitable, from the interest money due the Sioux Nation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, is this a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. ERDMAN. I understand this is to punish, without trial, the Sioux of to-day for what the Sioux did thirty-five years ago.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman misunderstands the bill. It refers the whole question to the Secretary of the Interior for investigation, and if he does not think anything justly due, the bill authorizes him to disallow the whole amount.

Mr. ERDMAN. The purpose is to withhold the appropriation of the Sioux at this time for what the Sioux of thirty-five years ago did. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the objection. It is a piteous case.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county.

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged matter. On the bill (S. 3538) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893, that has just come over from the Senate, I would like to have conferees appointed.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor. This is a Senate bill with a House amendment; the Senate disagrees to the House amendment and asks for a conference.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not necessary to read the bill. The gentleman from Iowa, I understand, is going to move for a conference.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is what I want.

Mr. BAILEY. It is unnecessary to read the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with that.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that the House insist on its amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment. Strictly speaking, the bill has not to be read, except for the information of the House.

The amendment of the House was read.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees: Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. WASHINGTON.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the desk. It is short.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 10,000 copies of the report of hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, Fifty-fourth Congress, 8,000 copies to be for the use of the House and 2,000 copies to be for the use of the Senate.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, let me say this contains the statement of Hon. J. H. Eckels, Comptroller of the Currency, made before the Committee on Banking and Currency in a five days' examination.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I object, if you are going to print the Comptroller's statement.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman it contains a large amount of tables of very valuable statistics that have never been published anywhere, and the requests for these hearings we have already received are so numerous that they will exhaust the supply we have within five days.

Mr. BAILEY. We have been inflicted with what the Comptroller has had to say long enough.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I only desired to do my duty in the matter. That is my only purpose.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

INCOME-TAX CASE.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to address the House for thirty minutes, pursuant to a promise made the other day, that I would answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] in his strictures upon Justice Shiras with relation to the income-tax case.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope that request will be granted, with the understanding that we are permitted to have thirty minutes on this side, if we desire to use it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to address the House thirty minutes in regard to the matter suggested to the House. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us understand that my colleague is to have an opportunity to reply for thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I simply submit that request, to go with the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There will be no question about that.

Mr. DALZELL. I think that ought to be allowed, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, coupled with the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand my colleague was on the floor a few moments ago, and has gone out for a few moments, and if he can not be here I shall object unless he has an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let him have fifteen minutes to reply, if he wants it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want the same length of time that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has.

Mr. HENDERSON. He has already spoken on it. Give him fifteen minutes to reply.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] may desire to have some time.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will my friend permit me? Is it possible that a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States should require any defense in the House of Representatives?

Mr. HENDERSON. No; but an attack made upon him may require attention, not the judge.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that this request is entirely agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has put them together to the House.

Mr. BAILEY. I think there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the request, it is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be given thirty minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee thirty minutes. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that I should desire to say a few things myself. I do not know that I shall, but I should like to have some provision made in regard to that.

The SPEAKER. There will be thirty minutes for reply.

Mr. BAILEY. That was my original suggestion.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understands.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, in the absence of my colleague, I have no doubt he will agree to divide the time between himself and the gentleman from Missouri. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

INCOME-TAX CASE.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, on the 13th day of February, when the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and some gentlemen on this side of the House fell into a discussion of the tariff question. Comparison was made between the McKinley bill, so called, and the Wilson bill, so called, and in the course of the discussion the gentleman from Tennessee made use of this language:

We—

Referring, of course, to the Democratic party—

passed a bill which would have supplied ample revenues to meet the expenditures of the Government, but unfortunately it encountered one other man, who, as supreme judge, has authority to say what the law is; and it turns out to be a greater power than the lawmaking power itself. I do not propose, sir, to try to fix the responsibility of that unaccountable decision where it does not belong. I do not propose either by insinuation or innuendo to charge a whole court with that which really belongs to and is a part of the responsibility of one man. It is known to all who are posted that the man who tore down the Constitution and overrode the decisions of a hundred years, who set aside the power which was placed in the hands of Congress to assess the wealth of the nation and require it to bear a portion of its expenses, was and is named Shiras, and that name, Mr. Chairman, ought to be mentioned in connection with that reprehensible and ever-to-be-criticised decision wherever it is referred to at any time. Let posterity not forget him. It is not likely to forgive him.

And there was applause on the Democratic side.

Within a few minutes thereafter, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was addressing the House, and this took place:

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Was it not Shiras, and he alone, who changed his first opinion, deciding one thing one week and another another week?

On that same day, if I recollect rightly, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] addressed the House on various subjects, and in the course of his remarks used this language:

Now, then, let us see how strangely that provision was overturned. Eight judges were present when the matter first came before the Supreme Court of the United States. They divided equally upon the main question of constitutionality. The ninth justice was absent. Those who took the one side and those who took the other were well known. They identified themselves. There was another hearing when the ninth judge was present, so that the full bench then heard the case. The ninth judge joined in with the four who held the law to be constitutional; and lo and behold! one of the four, without ever vouchsafing an explanation, without ever giving any reason, changed his mind in such a way as to lift from wealth a tax of from forty to sixty millions of dollars annually and cast it as an additional burden upon poverty and toil.

That ought not to be commented on! It ought not to be mentioned here, according to the tender notions of some gentlemen! Why ought it not to be? Men have a right to change their opinions; great as well as little men often do so. But when fifty or sixty million dollars of annual revenue are in the scale—when a trained lawyer and judge, after full argument, deliberately reaches a conclusion, and then when, so far as we know, without additional light, without additional good reason to carry him the other way, he suddenly, when it becomes necessary, finds himself upon the side of aggregated wealth and power and monopoly and against the mass of the producers of the land, with the result that there is a deficit in the Treasury and that heavier burdens must be heaped upon the people—why should there not be some comment? What is there wrong in the comment? Why should it be withheld? I said in this House about one year ago, and I repeat, that when the history of that judge shall be made up, and when all else in his life shall have been forgotten, his name will be kept from oblivion, not for praise, but as that of one by whose marvelous conversion a great principle of taxation was, for the time, overthrown, in a land of free people under free institutions.

On a subsequent day, the date I do not now recall, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] again took part in a controversy on this subject. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] had undertaken a defense of the decision of the Supreme Court in the income-tax cases, and in reply to him the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] used this language:

> What I said of Justice Shiras was that the man who tore down the Constitution, who overruled the decisions of one hundred years, who took away from the people the right to impose upon the wealth of the country taxes to meet the expenses of the country, was named Shiras. I repeat it to-day, and I am glad if I have got through his heretofore thick skin at last. Did he not decide that the income tax was unconstitutional, and did he not have to overthrow the decisions of one hundred years to do it?

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee, by the use of the elegant, classic, and dignified language that he "had got through the thick skin" of this justice of the Supreme Court, meant to convey the impression that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] was undertaking a defense of Mr. Justice Shiras at the instance of that gentleman, he was very far mistaken. The gentleman from New York informs me that he has no acquaintance with Justice Shiras; that he never spoke to him, and was never spoken to by him. And that leads me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the duty I assume to-day I assume of my own motion, because I regard it as a duty, and not because I have been requested by Mr. Justice Shiras, either directly or indirectly, to abandon the precedent that he has established in this matter of maintaining a dignified silence in the presence of unjustifiable assaults. But that distinguished gentleman was born in the city which I have the honor to represent. Throughout all his life he has resided in the county of which that city is the chief city.

He is a member of the same bar of which I have the honor to be a member. For twenty years he and I together have practiced at that bar. During all my business life I have known him intimately, and I have known him, as has every man, woman, and child who knows him at all, as a high-minded, able, accomplished, scholarly gentleman. I know him as a fine lawyer, a man of eminently judicial temperament, and a man whose life is an answer to any insinuation of wrong from any source, high or low. Hence I have felt it to be my duty to place before the House, in answer to the assertions which have been made, not an argument, but a plain, simple statement of facts. And let me say here that I shall not indulge in either defense or justification of the decision of the Supreme Court in the income-tax cases. I shall not discuss that question, nor shall I stop to discuss the question whether or not it is proper for a member on this floor, or for any citizen, to criticise a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think fair criticism of their tribunals is permissible and is a right that always has been exercised and always will be exercised by the American people. But there is a manifest difference between a logical discussion of a decision, a fair, manly, open criticism of a decision of a court, and the abuse, by the calling of hard names, of an individual member of that court.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the charge made against Mr. Justice Shiras is that in participating in the decision in the income-tax cases in the Supreme Court of the United States he changed his opinion, and that that change of opinion was decisive of the question. Well, a change of opinion involves nothing that is wrong in a judge. Courts and judges often change their opinions. The difficulty in this case seems to be that the alleged change of opinion (which did not take place) was against that entertained by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Missouri. There was a judge who changed his opinion in this case—who decided one way one week and another way another week—and I have no doubt at all that he decided in both cases, at both times, pursuant to his honest, conscientious convictions. But he receives no censure, and deserves none, but rather commendation, because his change was from the other side to the side of the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Missouri.

Now, let me call attention to the plain facts in this case, because there is not the slightest evidence upon which to base the assertion that there was any change of opinion upon the part of Justice Shiras. The gentleman from Tennessee is not a member of the Supreme Court; the gentleman from Missouri is not a member of the Supreme Court; neither of those gentlemen is intrusted with the secrets of that court; and the allegations that they make here therefore manifestly are not made from knowledge, but from hearsay. What the hearsay was upon which these allegations are based neither of the gentlemen has vouchsafed to tell us. I apprehend that the hearsay on which they were based was the lying report of some popocratic newspaper reporter, published for the first time in a popocratic newspaper.

Now, what are the facts? And I refer to the record. The case in which this decision was made was the case of Pollock vs. The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. It is reported in volumes 157 and 158 of the United States Supreme Court Reports. The questions involved were: First, whether a tax on the income of real estate was a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, and therefore unconstitutional, unless imposed by the rule of apportionment; second, whether a tax on the income of personal estate was a direct tax, and therefore unconstitutional, unless imposed by the same rule; third, whether the law under review by the court infringed the rule of uniformity prescribed by the Constitution; and lastly, whether the tax imposed upon State and municipal bonds was a constitutional tax—four questions, the House will observe.

The case, as all the country knows, was elaborately and exhaustively argued by the most eminent lawyers of the country—the conceded leaders of the American bar. Eight judges participated in the hearing. They were Chief Justice Fuller, Justices Field, Harlan, Gray, Brewer, Brown, Shiras, and White. In their first decision, eight judges concurred—in other words, the court was unanimous—in holding that a tax on municipal bonds was unconstitutional. Six judges held that the tax on the income of real estate provided for by the law was unconstitutional, because imposed without regard to the rule of apportionment. These six judges were Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Field, Gray, Brewer, Brown, and Shiras. The Chief Justice spoke for all of these six judges with the exception of Mr. Justice Field, who filed a concurring opinion, because he went a step further than the other six judges were willing to go. Two judges dissented—Mr. Justice Harlan and Mr. Justice White—upon the ground, first, that a court of equity had no power to restrain the United States Government in the collection of a tax; and, secondly, because they held themselves bound by the doctrine of stare decisis.

Now, the House will observe, here is the first decision by the Supreme Court in this case. It is not possible to say up to this time that anybody has changed his mind. And in this first decision the justice who is now assailed for having changed his mind constituted one of the majority—one of the six judges. I may say here in passing that even if it were true (of which there is no evidence) that at that time he had changed his mind from what on a prior occasion it had been, it would have made not the slightest difference, inasmuch as the court would then have stood five to three. Thus much, it seems to me, is plain.

By this first decision certain questions were left undecided. They were these: Whether or not the provision declared void as to the income of real estate avoided the whole act; secondly, whether the tax on the income of personal property as such was unconstitutional unless imposed by the rule of apportionment; and third, whether any part of the tax if not considered as a direct tax was invalid for want of uniformity on any of the grounds suggested.

Upon these questions the court stood, according to the Chief Justice, four to four. The Chief Justice declined in his opinion to disclose how the court divided. Mr. Justice Harlan at the close of his opinion refused to say anything on that question, so that the public is utterly in the dark as to where each of these two groups of four stood, and whether on these three several questions the same four differed with the same four on each. I know of nobody, outside of the members of the Supreme Court and some of the Democratic and Populist newspapers and the gentlemen from Tennessee and from Missouri, who professes to know how the court stood at that time.

These questions being undecided rendered the administration of the law difficult. The situation threatened multiplied suits—no end of litigation. So the plaintiffs came into court and asked the court for a reargument, assigning as a reason therefor this difficulty of administration and this probability of multiplied litigation. The Attorney-General of the United States came into court and representing the United States joined in the petition for a reargument upon condition that the reargument should be a reargument of the entire case—not simply of the questions that remained undecided. The Chief Justice, in announcing the decision of the court, said that he considered the two applications—the application of the plaintiffs as modified by the application of the Attorney-General—as equivalent to a petition on both sides for a reargument; and the case, he said, was therefore opened for reargument—not merely upon the undecided questions, but upon all the questions involved in the original hearing.

The case was reargued. Much new matter was submitted on both sides of the case. I have the books here, but I do not stop to verify what any gentleman may verify for himself by looking at the record of the case. Much new matter was suggested on both sides, and the result of the second decision by the court was a reaffirmance of the first decision and a step in advance. Having originally decided that a tax on income derived from real estate was a direct tax within the rule of required apportionment, they held in the second place that a tax on the income derived from personalty was also a direct tax within the rule of required apportionment.

How did the court stand on this second decision? Those who reaffirmed the first decision of the court, and joined in the opinion submitted by the Chief Justice—those who stood by and reaffirmed the principle already laid down by the court, and who went a step further—were Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, Mr. Justice Field, Mr. Justice Gray, Mr. Justice Brewer, and Mr. Justice Shiras, all of the original six except Mr. Justice Brown.

Of the six judges that stood together as a majority of the court in the first instance five stood as a majority of the court in the second instance, and in both instances is to be found the name of the gentleman who is assailed here as having changed his mind. Two of the justices, Justice White and Justice Harlan, abode by their former decision and dissented. The third, Mr. Justice Jackson, who did not participate in the first, joined with them to make a third in their dissent, and lo and behold, one of the judges who had sat side by side with Mr. Justice Shiras as a member of the majority in the first instance, changed his mind—without doubt conscientiously, as I have already said—and went over to the other side.

So that the justices stand thus—the majority deciding in accordance with the first decision: The Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Field, Mr. Justice Gray, Mr. Justice Brewer, and Mr. Justice Shiras; dissenting, Justices White and Harlan, and joining them, Mr. Justice Jackson; joining the minority and abandoning the majority, Mr. Justice Brown.

Now, sir, upon what ground, in the face of that record—upon what ground rests the accusations which have been made here? Absolutely none. I repeat, absolutely none. Because, to sum up, the situation stands thus: By the first decision the act was declared unconstitutional by a unanimous court so far as the tax on municipal bonds was concerned, and as to what is known as income derived from real estate the act was declared unconstitutional by the court, standing six to two; and of these six justices Mr. Justice Shiras was one. Upon the petition for reargument—and the case was reargued—it was decided by a majority of five to three, and of that majority all of them belonged to the original six except Mr. Justice Brown, who changed his opinion. The Chief Justice spoke for all six in the first instance and he spoke for all five in the second instance.

Now let me recur to the observations made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] and see how much truth is contained in them. He says:

> Eight judges were present when the matter first came before the Supreme Court of the United States. They divided equally upon the main question of constitutionality.

Absolutely untrue and without the slightest foundation in fact. On the contrary, instead of dividing equally, the all eight of them decided the act unconstitutional so far as it applied to a tax upon municipal bonds, and six of the eight decided the law unconstitutional so far as it applied to a tax on the income of real estate. So the gentleman is mistaken; they did not divide equally upon the question of constitutionality. The gentleman then says:

> The ninth judge was absent.

That is true, and that is about the only thing that is true in this entire paragraph.

He says:

> They who took the one side and those who took the other were well known.

Not so. The Chief Justice declined to furnish any light on the subject. There is no man here, I venture to say, who knows how those judges stood, four to four.

Then the gentleman says:

> The ninth judge joined in with the four who held the law to be constitutional, and lo and behold! one of the four, without ever vouchsafing an explanation, without ever giving any reason, changed his mind, etc.

On the contrary, the ninth justice did not join in with the four. He joined in with the two, and one of the majority joined with him, so that there is no truth in this allegation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, not to detain the House longer, it seems to me that an injustice has been done that ought to be remedied. It is not alone in this House that this charge has been made. It was made on every Democratic stump throughout the last campaign. It has been made in every Democratic and Populistic newspaper throughout the length and breadth of this land; and during all that time, true to his sense of dignity and the traditions of the court, the unjustifiably assaulted party has sat in silence, trusting that the future would vindicate him. I invite my friends on the other side now to a manly retraction of the charges that they have mistakenly made. And if they do not see fit to accept my invitation, I take the liberty of warning them that a reaffirmation of these charges on their part will not be a reply satisfactory to the people of this country.

The American people love justice. They love fair play. They hold as sacred above all things else personal character and personal reputation. They will not hold to be justifiable, nor will they excuse, an assault made upon mere statement without sustaining proof. They will not accept lightly an attack upon the most august judicial tribunal in all the world, nor will they condemn without proof a member of that tribunal, who attained his place therein by merit, and of whom I can say of knowledge that he is revered by all who know him as one who has worn for more than three-score years "the white flower of a blameless life." [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not conceive that the speech which has just been made by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] requires that I shall go into any very extensive argument on the question that is involved. There are a few plain, patent facts which all of reasoning, all of sophistry, all of eloquence can not get rid of. First, that after the first hearing of the income-tax cases pending before the Supreme Court of the United States that tribunal held it constitutional. Some part of it, they said, was not constitutional; but the law they sustained. That fact can not be denied.

The result was reached by a court—one justice being sick and absent—equally divided.

Secondly, that when the other justice had appeared and there was a full bench, and that other justice decided in favor of the constitutionality of the law, one man of the four hitherto holding it constitutional held that it was not constitutional. That fact can not be denied.

Now, who was that judge who changed? Four have written opinions showing where they stood. It is not necessary for me to utter harsh words concerning that distinguished judge. Words stronger than I could utter, words stronger than I desire to utter, were hurled into his face, as he sat on the bench, by his own colleagues, whose integrity and patriotism can not be denied. Will the House bear with me while I take some nuggets out of the very elaborate decisions of the four judges who dissented on that occasion and still held that the law was constitutional?

If we were to draw an inference fixing the responsibility on any man, from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] we would infer—which is impossible, in view of his written opinion—that Mr. Justice Brown was the man who wavered in the first instance. I can not legitimately draw that conclusion. Here is what he said on the final hearing of the cause:

> My fear is that in some moment of national peril this decision will rise up to frustrate the will and paralyze the arm of Congress. I hope it may not prove the first step toward the submergence of the liberties of the people in a sordid despotism of wealth. It approaches the proportions of a national calamity.

What more could I have said concerning Justice Shiras, if he is the man, than this distingnished colleague of his said in his face, while he sat there, and opened not his mouth in opposition to this opinion?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman if he does not want me to, but that was said no more of Mr. Justice Shiras than of the others.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the other justices gave reasons in dissenting finally for the faith that was in them.

Mr. DALZELL. What other justices? There was only one opinion filed on the part of the majority in the second decision, and that was the opinion of the Chief Justice.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the opinions of the other justices, outside of this distinguished individual, had been known on the first hearing.

Mr. DALZELL. Give us something more than your statement.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman is not satisfied with the opinion of one man, we will take four, and then I hope the gentleman will be satisfied. I have already quoted from Justice Brown.

Justice White said of the majority opinion:

> It takes invested wealth and reads it into the Constitution as a favored and protected class of property.

What greater charge could be made against a judge than that he was doing that in violation of the best interests of the community—taking invested wealth and reading it into the Constitution as a favored and protected class of property?

Mr. Justice Jackson said:

> Considered in all its bearings, this decision is, in my judgment, the most disastrous blow ever struck at the constitutional power of Congress.

What could be more direct than that? But now, after all these judicial protests, complaint is made by the gentleman and his friends—first, the gentleman from New York; secondly, the gentleman from Pennsylvania because in the tribune of the people—here in this legislative Hall, a representative of the people has dared to open his mouth against the overriding of the Constitution and destroying the taxing power of Congress; against judicially destroying the capacity of the Government to reach the wealth of the country for purposes of government. If we are to be traduced for it, why not include in the traducing the justices who talked to him as he sat on the bench? But that is not all. Let us take another dissenting opinion:

It strikes at the very foundation of national authority—

Says Justice Harlan.

Sir, no man who heard this last opinion rendered can ever forget the manner in which that distinguished jurist turned to his colleagues that he felt were doing violence to the Constitution, and uttered his words as if at them directly. Does the gentleman say that Justice Shiras did not favor the decision in the first instance?

Mr. DALZELL. He was one of the majority that rendered it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You are his mouthpiece.

Mr. DALZELL. I deny it; and I forestalled the gentleman by making a statement that he ought to accept as coming from me.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say nothing unkind of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. This thing was brought up in my absence and I did not hear his opening remarks. I was necessarily absent by direction of the House. I had gone to the Senate to attend a conference on a bill coming from the gentleman's committee and mine. Hence I do not blame him with my failure to be present when he began. But he stands here as Justice Shiras's defender—if not as his mouthpiece, then as his defender. Will you say that he did not favor this opinion in the first instance and did not somersault in the second? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. He has said——

Mr. MCMILLIN. No, sir; the gentleman will not say it; the judge himself, Judge Shiras, would not say it, and no man, in face of this extraordinary decision and this still more extraordinary somersault, will ever declare it.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, the gentleman desires to be fair.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do; and I am going to be.

Mr. DALZELL. Is there any person outside of the members of the Supreme Court who know of their own knowledge how the eight divided on the first proposition?

Mr. MCMILLIN. There may not be any persons outside of the Supreme Court who of their own knowledge know how the eight divided, but there is an individual who does know how the eight divided.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, let us have him.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Who knows it so well that I doubt not the truth of the fact——

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I know it in such a way that I do not doubt a particle. It can not be gainsaid.

Mr. DALZELL. Name your authority.

Mr. HYDE. Everybody knows. [Cries of "Name him!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. There is a gentleman who can put it at rest forever.

Mr. DALZELL. Name him.

Mr. MCMILLIN. His name is Shiras, if you want him named. [Applause on the Democratic side and jeers on the Republican side.] If the gentleman reaches to the bottom of this case and gets at the real facts, I will get him to come to me candidly or to this House candidly and say whether he has not found these to be the facts. When one of the judges, who finally held the law to be constitutional, was wavering in the first decision, this distinguished Judge Shiras went to him and implored him to stand by the constitutionality of the law and argued the case with him and asked him to sustain the law; that on the second hearing Judge Shiras never gave this man nor the court to understand that he was himself being revolutionized or had been revolutionized; that the court was as much astonished as the country at his extraordinary somersault, and when he did do it he gave no evidence or reason, but quietly and without an opinion gave his voice for the overriding of the very law which he had voted to sustain a few days before.

The gentleman in all his life will never find a single fact that will contradict a single one of those statements, never. As far as I am concerned, members of this House will bear me witness that I have not indulged in the disposition to speak harshly of coordinate branches of the Government; but, Mr. Speaker, we are custodians of a sacred Constitution and glorious institutions. To us has come down the exalted privilege, in our day and generation, of holding aloft the most splendid creation of the human brain, uninspired, in the whole world—the Constitution of the United States, and whether courts or crowds or individuals attempt to tear down that sacred instrument, I for one propose to stand here, unmoved by the eloquence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, unmoved by the—in my opinion—erroneous decision of the justice from Pennsylvania, and hold aloft the Constitution as the supreme law of the land, ever to be preserved. [Applause.]

Now, some criticism has been indulged in here because there has been comment on the Federal bench emanating from members of Congress and from the newspapers, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], in his zeal, says that that criticism has emanated from "a popocratic press." Mr. Speaker, I want to have read in my time the utterances of the author of the Declaration of Independence on the question of the encroachment of the Federal judiciary. I want the House to see where the trouble was then, and that this is not a new trouble. I also beg members to bear in mind that the adoption of the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States was in itself a criticism of the Supreme Court for overriding the Constitution. I will ask the Chair how much time I have occupied?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied fifteen minutes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I will regretfully forego having read the quotations from Thomas Jefferson that I was about to introduce in order that I may not do injustice to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who, also, has shared in the attack of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Having occupied half the time allowed, I yield the remainder to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago, in the course of a running debate which took a wide range, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] who has just addressed the House, and, later on, I, made some remarks about the income-tax decision, and indulged in some strictures upon the course of Justice Shiras in connection with that decision. Soon it was rumored, and a little later it was announced, that at the first fitting opportunity the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] would reply and defend Justice Shiras. The long-expected and anxiously-waited-for reply has finally come, and, with all deference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it does seem to me that a few more such defenses would surely leave Justice Shiras in a deplorable condition. [Laughter.]

There was criticism of the decision of the Supreme Court upon the income-tax cases; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania wisely chooses not to go into that matter, not to discuss the right or the wrong, the strength or the weakness, of that decision. There was also comment upon the fact, or the alleged fact—I think the real fact—that Justice Shiras occupied one position at the first hearing and the opposite position at the second hearing, and that his change of opinion in the interval had the momentous effect of making unconstitutional, according to the decision of the court, a law the like of which had been deemed constitutional for a hundred years of our Government.

Now, mark the marvelous features of the defense or reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He does not tell us why Justice Shiras changed front. He does not even know, so he does tell us, whether Justice Shiras did change his opinion or not. The gentleman comes to this House with all his magnificent abilities, fully equipped for this defense, and yet admits that he knows nothing about the facts involved. Justice Shiras did or did not change his opinion about the income-tax law. The gentleman has known Justice Shiras intimately, so he tells us, for years and is upon the most friendly footing with him. He has contemplated this reply for some weeks, yet, by his own confession, he is unable to tell the House what the attitude of Justice Shiras was at one time and what at the other time.

Mr. Speaker, what is there of sacredness or secrecy about it? Why should the opinion of Justice Shiras the one time or the other time be hedged about so carefully that even the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to say nothing of less-favored individuals, may not know what it was or is? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why ought there to be any secrecy about it? Why should not the gentleman, speaking here as the self-appointed champion of Justice Shiras, be able to tell us whether the Judge did or did not change his position with respect to that great, that momentous question pending in the Supreme Court? I pause for reply. Why ought he not to be able to do it? Why does he rise to talk here in the way of defense, explanation, or apology, if unable to do that? What information does he bring here?

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is simply playing a very common lawyer's dodge in trying to put the burden of proof on the other side when it belongs to himself.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman can not by his adroitness escape the force of what I am stating. He appointed himself, he says, without consultation with Justice Shiras or invitation from him, his defender or apologist, whichever term he chooses to employ; and he comes here now unable, as he confesses, to tell the House anything about whether Judge Shiras did or did not change his opinion; and he talks as though it were so sacred a thing that there is some virtue lying somewhere in the ignorance which he parades. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I want to say to the gentleman that I treat this question here to-day precisely as Justice Shiras would treat it himself—upon the record; and the gentleman has not, nor has the gentleman from Tennessee, disclosed to this House upon what they base the statement which they make, which is contradicted by the record.

Mr. DE ARMOND. There are two records, Mr. Speaker. There is the small, narrow record over which Justice Shiras may have control, and there is the vast, mighty record over which the people of this country have control. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the gentleman chooses to confine himself to the narrow record of Justice Shiras in two decisions upon the most momentous question, the most far-reaching and important question that has arisen and been decided in years by the Supreme Court—if he desires to confine himself to the clam-like policy of not declaring where Justice Shiras stood or how he stood or why he stood—let him not impose upon me or upon any other Representative the like restrictions.

The gentleman says there is no authority for the assertion—the assumption, as he would call it—that Justice Shiras changed front, except communications and editorials in "popocratic" newspapers. He could at once put at rest the question, if there be any, whether Judge Shiras did or did not change front. I defy him to deny that he did. In all the months when this man's conduct has been criticised, when this decision has been condemned from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf, it is strange, if he has been suffering unjustly, that no one has arisen to give the facts to the people.

The gentleman assumes to have discovered by his process of reasoning where Justice Brown stood. I will not go into that. If to talk about where Justice Shiras stood and to draw inferences as to why he changed and the results deserves condemnation, what will the gentleman say of his own curious conduct here in imputing to Justice Brown vacillation of judgment at least, if nothing more, and holding him up as the one man who ought to be singled out for condemnation, if there is to be any condemnation?

The gentleman is right in saying that this question has been discussed in the newspapers and that it was talked about during the campaign by speakers opposed to the policy which has been carried out for his party in the decision now upon us as law. He is right in asserting that; and I will say to him that the decision will be talked about again. The charge will be made along the whole line. And let me warn him and warn others who propose to defend that indefensible decision that they can not hedge themselves behind imaginary walls of propriety. The people have a right to know where Justice Shiras stood. The people have a right to know why he changed his opinion, when the effect of that change of opinion was to cast the burden of heavy taxation upon poverty and privation and toil and to lift it from wealth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Talk about the sacredness of the decisions of the Supreme Court! What of the sancity of the decisions that had come down unimpaired until the date of that decision from the earliest days of this Republic? The question of Federal taxation, involving the principle of the income tax, first arose in 1796; at that time it came before that august tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States. It was decided then by a unanimous bench that a tax upon vehicles was not to be regarded, under the Constitution, as a direct tax, to be laid according to population, but as an indirect tax, to be laid according to the rule of uniformity.

Madison took a contrary view at the time the discussion was up; Hamilton argued that the carriage tax was constitutional. Madison afterwards, as President, approved laws enacted enforcing the principle involved in the carriage tax. And for a hundred years, in times of peace and in times of war—for a hundred years, with all the changes and fluctuations that have taken place, with men coming and going in this great world and upon that bench—that decision, that exposition of the supreme law, the correctness of that interpretation of the Constitution, remained unquestioned until the day when five out of nine justices of the Supreme Court temporarily overthrew it. I believe I say "temporarily" advisedly, because the American people will never, never submit to that kind of constitutional law, maintained in that kind of a way. They are for regularity, for the constitutionality of the Constitution. They are for the decisions of the fathers, affirmed by the sons, and overthrown only when wealth and monopoly in this country became so great a power that the voice of constitutional law, that the glorious story of a hundred years of the life of the Republic, stood as naught in the way.

In the opinion of the court fear was expressed that taxes might be laid under the old principle, by those whose constituents would not have to pay them. Did the Chief Justice who used that expression, did the Justices who entertained or seemed to entertain that fear, realize that under present methods and by that iniquitous decision there may be such burdens cast upon the masses of the people, by the representatives of special interests and special classes, as this country has never yet known?

It was suggested, too, in one of the opinions, that of a man old in years without being venerable—for there is a difference between being old and being venerable—it was suggested that if this policy of maintaining an income tax should prevail, perhaps the time might soon arrive when the "walking delegate" would determine how much tax the thrifty people of the land should pay. That may be dignified in a Supreme Court opinion; and the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is nothing if not dignified in the discussion of such opinions. There was no suggestion by this aged judge that the time might come—there was no comment on the fact that the time is here—when it is thought by some to be more advisable and more in conformity with the Constitution, as remodeled, to tax men than to tax money; just to lay burdens upon manhood, rather than upon wealth.

I have nothing to say about the walking delegate. The reference to him is a petty sneer at the laboring man. There may be delegates who walk without having bodyguards, and whose walking is not attended with the overturning of fundamental principles, the ousting of the constitutional authorities of a State of their rightful jurisdiction, or the smoothing out and passing over as a virtue of what, in common parlance, is called murder.

Mr. Speaker, this income-tax question and this decision are in politics. As the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] said when the naval bill was up, the defense of Justice Shiras by the gentleman from Pennsylvania naturally would provoke a political discussion. The lines are drawn. The battle is on. We defy you to the onset. We are ready to meet you upon these lines. We are not for overturning the Constitution. We are not for disregarding the decisions of the highest court. But we are for standing by the decisions of Marshall, and Taney, and Chase, and Waite. We are for standing by the decisions of a great court in the years of its prime. We are for standing by the interpretation of the Constitution in the days of the fathers and as accepted by the sons. But we repudiate, and we will use all honorable, all constitutional, all lawful means to undo a revolutionary decision, which has reversed the judgment of a century.

We are ready to meet you upon that ground; and I say again, in that contest, in a broader and mightier forum that even the Supreme Court of the United States—in the great forum of the American people—it will not be enough to plead "We do not know," and "I have not found out" how this man or that man stood. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] "You do not know, and I do not know, and nobody knows," says the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The masses of the American people have settled to a conclusion about decision and judge which is correct. I defy the gentleman to deny its correctness. I defy him to refer to the man for whom he apologizes, or whom he defends, for the authority to deny it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago I objected to the printing of some matter for the Committee on Banking and Currency. Since making that objection I have investigated the hearings, and I find that, in spite of much that is irrelevant and trashy, there is much that might be valuable to the country, and I desire to withdraw the objection that I made and to let the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] have his leave to print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit to the House the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], which the Clerk will read.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I renew my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 10,000 copies of the Report of Hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, Fifty-fourth Congress, 8,000 copies to be for the use of the House and 2,000 copies to be for the use of the Senate.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let me say that the 2,000 copies that were printed under the law have practically been exhausted. Requests are coming to the clerk from all over the country for copies, and as the plates have all been made, the cost of the printing will be comparatively small. Even the 10,000 copies will be soon exhausted if printed. These reports contain very many elaborate tables and thorough investigations of the currency question which never have been printed before.

Mr. COX. I am not going to raise an objection to the printing of these reports, but I intend to state to the House that they have never been worth a cent to that committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, then, you ought to object to printing them. I thought there was something of value in them.

Mr. COX. Well, probably it would be to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. [Laughter.] But we have heard, everybody in that committee, all sorts of theories, all sorts of systems, and all sorts of ideas. That committee have passed this entire Congress in those hearings. I am not going to object to the printing, but when you get them printed, there is not a man in this House who will ever read them.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I insist that anything that would be valuable to me could be used to great advantage by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Why, there is no doubt about that, and I yield that question, because the gentleman has the right to lead me. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution came to the Committee on Printing yesterday, and upon the examination that the committee were able to give it, we decided adversely to making a favorable report upon it. As a rule, I will say that resolutions of this character——

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Iowa will inform the House what it is that is proposed to be printed. I have been unable for the last fifteen minutes to gather any information as to what the pending proposition is.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the resolution before the House is here at the instance of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, asking for the printing of 10,000 copies of the hearings during this Congress before his committee.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let me correct the gentleman from Iowa and state that it is not at the instance of "the gentleman from Massachusetts," but by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PERKINS. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that as a rule I think resolutions of this character are first agreed upon in the committee from which they emanate, and by that committee are referred, through the House, to the Committee on Printing. I have not been advised and can not ascertain that the Committee on Banking and Currency, as a committee, have ever taken any action upon the resolution. Now, my understanding is that the Committee on Banking and Currency, for the most time during this Congress, has been considering, with more or less discord, a bill known as the "Walker bill." [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow a correction——

Mr. PERKINS (continuing). My inference is, without further investigation than I have been able to give to the matter, that these are the hearings—the record of the wranglings—of the Committee on Banking and Currency upon that particular question. It does not seem to me, and did not seem advisable to my colleagues on the committee, that it was worth while to incur the expense of printing it, for the information of the country, on this great problem of banking and currency. It did not seem advisable to the committee that it should print, at the public expense, a record of these discords; and therefore at this late time in the session, with very much pressing upon us and upon the House, while very many meritorious resolutions are sleeping now in the Committee on Printing, we determined not to occupy the time of the House nor to inflict this trouble further upon the country, and therefore decided not to report the gentleman's resolution.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, he has brought it before the House himself. I agreed with him that I would not make personal objection. If the House thinks it is important that this record should go further to the country, why, print it.

That is all I desired to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa who has just taken his seat, while he has been somewhat ironical in his remarks, has been exceedingly unfortunate in that he has been talking about a subject of which he is evidently wholly without knowledge. I have the honor to be a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and have attended, I believe, nearly every hearing had by that committee during this session, and which hearings it is sought now to have published for the information of the House.

It is a surprise to me, Mr. Speaker, to be informed by the gentleman from Iowa that there is anything in the record, as made up in that committee, which shows "wrangling" or discord on the part of the committee. There were, of course, different views entertained there; there was a diversity of opinion among the members as to the proper system of banking and currency to be devised and recommended to Congress and the country to take the place of the existing system, but these were just such differences of sentiment and opinion as one would naturally expect to find among gentlemen of originality in thought and independence in action. The general course of the committee was harmonious, and I think that every gentleman—every member of the committee—was animated by a laudable desire to find out the actual defects in the existing system and devise, if possible, such remedies as would bring about a better and more satisfactory currency system than that which is now prevailing.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why, certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the committee come to any conclusion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The committee may not have come to any definite conclusion upon a general system of banking and currency reform, but it listened to a great many valuable suggestions, which, in the present condition of public sentiment throughout the country, I do not doubt thoughtful and reflecting men would be willing to have laid before them. It also reported two important public bills which have passed this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the imputation that these hearings were devoted entirely to what is known as the Walker bill, like the other statements made by my friend from Iowa, savors very largely of romance. The truth is that the Walker bill occupied as little time in hearing as any other bill before the committee. I think we had four distinct bills before the committee. In the examination of the witnesses by the committee each bill was taken up separately and subjected to an analysis. The opinion of the experts present was asked as to the merits of that particular bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the subject of banking and currency reform is an important one, one which will not down at the bidding of any man, even if he be the chairman of the Committee on Printing of this House. There is a widespread and rapidly increasing public interest in the subject, and we have an increasing demand for correct information upon it. It will be observed that the Comptroller of the Currency, whom I deem to be a gentleman of considerable attainment in banking and currency matters, was before this committee and was heard at length, various questions being propounded to him both by the gentlemen of the committee who agree with him and the gentlemen who disagree with him in his views. In my humble judgment the opinion of the Comptroller as given upon his examination is worth dissemination. Among many others who were heard was Captain Royall, from Richmond, Va. He took in some particulars the opposite view of the currency question from that expressed by Comptroller Eckels, and while I can not agree with him in the opinions he expressed, I nevertheless recognize the fact that it was a very intelligent expression of opinion in favor of the repeal of the 10 per cent tax on State-bank circulation and the revival of State banks of issue. Men of all grades of opinion on the subject of banking and currency were heard. They were subjected to rigid cross-examinations, and the information elicited will certainly be of benefit to the people by adding to the general fund of the public information if published.

This Congress has published too much trash, including, possibly, speeches delivered at various times by myself, to be justified at this time in refusing to the country a document so pregnant for good as the document now sought to be published. I can say that I have myself received, since the Committee on Banking and Currency has had these hearings, not less than twenty-five or thirty requests from various sections of the country, purporting to come from gentlemen of intelligence who take a deep interest in the subject, for copies of these hearings when published. I understand that the amount involved in the publication is small, and I believe now that the House, if happily it be in its serious mood, can not afford to refuse the Committee on Banking and Currency permission to publish the document.

Mr. PERKINS. Can the gentleman from Indiana inform the House as to the amount of cost or expense involved?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not know what the cost will be, but when information is so valuable, if the cost is not very much, I think the House will be fully justified in making the publication. Can the gentleman enlighten the House as to the cost? He is a practical printer.

Mr. PERKINS. I think I can tell very closely.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform the House?

Mr. PERKINS. I think the expense will be from $3,500 to $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why, Mr. Speaker, although not a practical printer myself, it seems to me that that opinion is simply ridiculous. I mean no discourtesy to the gentleman in saying it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, permit me to add that I have not given my personal opinion only, but I have the opinion of the Public Printer, and the figures quoted to me by him were $3,600; and the gentleman's criticism——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman said $35,000.

Mr. PERKINS. No; I said $3,500 to $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. No; the gentleman said $35,000. [Cries of "No, he did not!"]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Very well.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Indiana may be a better authority on this subject than the Public Printer, but for one I prefer taking the Public Printer's judgment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman said in his opinion it would cost $35,000. That was an inadvertence, no doubt. I am only a better judge than the Public Printer in the event that he said the cost would be $35,000.

Mr. PERKINS. No; not an inadvertence. I said $3,500. I want to ask the gentleman one other question, whether or no, in the Committee on Banking and Currency, the resolution here presented was favorably acted upon?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from one or two meetings, including the last one, when this matter would have been most likely to come up, so that I am not able to answer the question, but, from various things that occurred around the table during the investigation, I know it was always expected that these hearings would be published.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I know, Mr. Speaker, that there has been considerable difference of opinion in the Committee on Banking and Currency as to the value of this investigation. I am not here to mention the names of members who have spoken to me about it, but my understanding is that the committee has never taken any action on the subject.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, did I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that the proceedings of the Committee on Banking and Currency were entirely harmonious?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman should have understood me to say there was no more friction in the Committee on Banking and Currency than would naturally be expected among gentlemen who view the banking and currency question from independent standpoints and who are possessed of some tenacity of opinion. There has been only that kind of friction which always generates truth.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then I would like to ask the gentleman if his colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], agrees with him in that opinion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am utterly unable to answer as to the mental condition of my friend from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion. It seems from what is disclosed here that the Committee on Banking and Currency have never acted on this matter, and I therefore move that it be referred to the committee so that they can give us a report upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That would be an entirely useless course.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, let me give you the state of facts that exists in that committee.

A MEMBER. Don't! [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. There is one bill in that committee that was presented by the chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts, and all of the hearings that go on in the committee unless they accord with his views of the matter——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not permitted to state what occurred in the committee except in so far as it relates to the action taken. That having been brought in question, may, the Chair supposes, be discussed.

Mr. COX. Well, there has been no action of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. Then let us refer it to the committee for action.

Mr. COX. Now, the effort is to publish a lot of hearings with all sorts of ideas and all sorts of theories; and let me call your attention to the fact that the same thing was done in a Congress preceding this, and those hearings are all printed in book form. Now, I do not want to antagonize the chairman of the committee, but the trouble with that committee——

Mr. STEELE. Do not speak of your troubles. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. We all have them. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Well, I will not go into that; but I see the situation exactly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman sees the situation exactly, it is quite a departure from his usual mental operations. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. If I saw the situation as you see it, I would not pursue the course you have taken. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, putting aside frivolity, what is going to be accomplished by publishing these hearings? What is to be gained? They are all published already. They are all in the reports of a preceding Congress. Of course you find a new man here and there; you find a State-bank man; you find a gold-bug man; you find a man in favor of amending the national banking law. We have had them all there. But why incur the expense of publishing these hearings when they are already published? Mr. Speaker, the thing I regret most about this is that you can not see the situation of things in that committee as it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. HYDE. Let me ask the gentleman if his committee has reported any bill to amend the banking and coinage laws?

Mr. COX. We have brought one bill in here by a hard rub, and——

Mr. HYDE. I ought to know, but I do not.

Mr. COX. We have brought in only two bills from that committee. One is to permit the banks to take out circulation to the par value of the bonds——

Mr. HYDE. I know of that.

Mr. COX. And the other is to allow banks to be organized on a capital stock of $25,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Both of which propositions were opposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. Now, that is not the truth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall not have to appeal to the Chair for protection. The gentleman's language is unparliamentary. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Oh, well, if it is I will take it back. [Laughter.]

Mr. HYDE. Have the committee reported any bill to revise the financial system of the country?

Mr. COX. No; and you will never get it out of that committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. HYDE. Why have they not reported such a bill?

Mr. COX. How can you get such a bill reported when there are not two men on the committee who will agree on any proposition? [Laughter.]

Mr. HYDE. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman desires a serious answer to his question, I will tell him that there are two men, and more than two men, on the committee who can agree upon a proposition.

Mr. HYDE. I do want a serious answer. I want to know how it is that, with all these hearings, you have not been able in that committee to formulate a bill to revise the financial system of the country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the whole investigation so far has been largely educational; but does the gentleman believe that in the present state of opinion upon the subject any bill for a general revision of the banking and currency laws would receive consideration in this House?

Mr. HYDE. I do not think that relieves the committee of their duty at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the committee can not be expected to attempt that which would be unavailing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] has the floor at present.

Mr. COX. I want to reply to a remark made by my friend here. That committee, as at present constituted, can never agree on any kind of a reform bill. We might just as well recognize that fact.

Mr. PERKINS. It would only be necessary to go through the hearings to ascertain that fact. [Laughter.]

Mr. HYDE. I believe, all the same, that the country would like to have these hearings.

Mr. COX. In my view, they will not be worth a cent.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Printing has seen fit to criticise quite sharply the Banking and Currency Committee, and myself particularly, and to reveal to the House what he says has transpired in the committee—its action in the committee room. I want to be allowed by the House to say this, that I have occupied the time of the committee on the bill drawn by me not over two hours directly in the last two years. I want to say, furthermore, that the bill which I have drawn I drew because I felt I owed it to this House and to the country to do the best I could in the matter. Moreover, I challenge the chairman of the Committee on Printing, or any other man in this country, to find any word of mine in any letter, interview, or public speech in which I have ever said anything other than this, that I have done the best I could in the bill I have drawn. And I would never have shown any disposition to press that bill, little as I have, if any man had taken it upon himself to submit to the committee any bill which would be a solution of the financial difficulties with which the Banking and Currency Committee has been struggling. I wish to say, further, that there has been as much or more time spent by the author of every other bill in that committee—more time of the committee taken by the author of many other bills—than I have occupied upon mine.

Let me add that no committee of any legislative body in the world has ever been called upon to struggle with any more intricate or serious situation, or been called upon to settle any problem pregnant with any more difficulties in connection with a financial situation, than this committee in this Congress and in previous Congresses has had to struggle with.

Let me say further that no committee has ever worked any harder, or been any more industrious, conscientious, individually or collectively, in studying these problems. Again, no committee charged with the solution of any problems approaching this in difficulty has ever made any more progress in the same time than this committee has made during these two years. And they have now reached a point where within a few weeks they might have presented some practical solution of the difficulty.

We have no apologies to make to the chairman of the Committee on Printing, to this House, or to the country for not bringing to pass any greater results than have been brought to pass under the difficulties disclosed to us. They have no apologies to make as to the intelligence with which in the investigation of this question they have pursued the study of these problems and difficulties.

These hearings, instead of being a repetition of the hearings of the Fifty-third Congress, as has been said, have not proceeded at all on the lines of the hearings of that Congress. The line of investigation, in many respects, has been new and original. The hearings contain such valuable matter that I am constantly being written to to furnish parts of these hearings on lines which have been developed before the country. Such applications have been made by investigators, students of political economy, college professors, financiers, farmers, and wage earners all over the country. The 2,000 copies of these hearings already printed will not last thirty days.

Now, I have simply done my duty to the House in this matter. It is utterly indifferent to me whether these hearings be published or not—absolutely indifferent to me personally or as a member of this Congress. But I have felt it my duty to try to satisfy the people who have been writing and will write the committee for these hearings. Having said and done what I have, I have nothing further to offer.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, it was agreed to; there being on a division (asked for by Mr. PERKINS)—ayes 52, noes 19.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DALZELL. I renew the motion to take a recess until 3 o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, by unanimous consent, presented the views of a minority of the Committee on Banking and Currency on the bill (H. R. 875) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank; which were ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BLUE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] for a recess.

BEQUEST OF PETER VON ESSEN.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the call for the regular order may be withdrawn for a moment in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a public bill.

Mr. BLUE. I withdraw the call temporarily.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to accept the bequest of $12,057.24 bequeathed by the will of the late Peter Von Essen to the late corporation of Georgetown for the use of the free white schools of said town, and which sum has been decreed to be turned over to said Commissioners, as the successors of the said corporation, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in equity cause No. 5238; and that said Commissioners be, and they are hereby, required to distribute the said funds among the heirs of the said Peter Von Essen, deceased, share and share alike, upon satisfactory proof of such heirship.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I trust I may be permitted to make a brief statement. Peter Von Essen died in Georgetown in 1836, having previously made a will in which, after giving some annuities to a son and a grandson, he bequeathed the residue of his estate to Georgetown for "the free white schools of that city." The bequest was peculiar, because, as a fact, there was no such corporation, no such legal entity as the "free white schools of Georgetown." But such were the terms of the bequest. After several years of litigation in the courts in respect to this will, the money was turned over to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. After the litigation was over and after the annuities had been paid to the son and grandson, there was left, as appears in the bill, about $12,000.

Mr. Speaker, there are no free white schools in the city of Georgetown to take this money. If the money is to be turned over to Georgetown, or the District of Columbia, it would necessarily go into the Treasury of the United States, to be paid out as all other money, and of course contrary to the express terms of the bequest. The object of the testator was to benefit certain schools which he called the free white schools of Georgetown. There was no public school law, as I understand it, at that time existing in Georgetown; and the schools were supported mainly by private contributions. This was commendable in Mr. Von Essen. But the conditions are all changed now in respect to schools in Georgetown.

In view of the fact that Congress will be compelled to take some action in reference to this matter to dispose of the money finally, I think we ought to give it to the descendants of this testator, Peter Von Essen, who I understand are very poor, rather than to apply it in a manner not contemplated by the testator. There is a petition on file with the District Committee, signed by several hundred people of Georgetown, which petition is set forth in the report, stating that they are acquainted with the descendants of Peter Von Essen, that they are very poor people and worthy, and have no other estate. And it seems to me that Congress should not hesitate for a moment to turn the fund over to the poor children or descendants of this old man rather than to put it into the Treasury to be expended in a general way for the debts and expenses of the Government. Certainly the object and intent of the testator would not be carried out by making that disposition of it. And while it may be said that it would not be carried out by giving it to his children or descendants, yet at the same time it would be fairer and more equitable and would seem to be a more just distribution of it than to apply it in the other way.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How much money is involved?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amount is $12,057.24.

The District Committee, I will say, have considered the bill and reported it unanimously. This is a Senate bill, which was reported unanimously in the Senate and passed by that body.

Mr. BRODERICK. How would this be divided? Does the bill provide?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It provides that it shall be paid by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the children of Peter Von Essen share and share alike—dividing it equally between them.

Mr. CLARDY. Is it proposed to be turned over for the purpose of educating these poor children or for general purposes?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It will be turned over for general purposes.

Mr. CLARDY (continuing). Would it not be more in accordance with the will of the testator to turn it over for their education?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, that would hardly be practicable.

Mr. MILES. I would suggest to the gentleman that these "poor children" are at least 30 years of age by this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know what their ages are. I spoke of them as children. I mean they are the descendants of old Peter Von Essen. One of them, I understand, is driving a street car in this city. I have no personal acquaintance with any of them.

Mr. CLARDY. Some of them must be children.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no; I presume not. They are grown. I never saw them, however, and do not speak from personal knowledge.

Mr. MILNES. As I understand it, this money is held by the District Commissioners?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; in some kind of trust capacity.

Mr. MILNES. And can not be disposed of without the action of Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have so attempted to state. Unless Congress takes action upon the matter, I do not see any way of disposing of it. If, however, we are to make any disposition of it, I think it should go to the children or descendants rather than into the general fund of the United States, as I have stated.

Mr. DALZELL. How did this money get into the hands of the District Commissioners?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was turned over to them by the trustee or executor of the estate. It was paid over in what was supposed to be the execution of the will of the testator.

Mr. DALZELL. For the use of a certain charity named in the will?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; as I have explained.

Mr. DALZELL. And I understand that that charity does not now exist?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that it does not exist, and perhaps never did exist in the manner described in the will of Von Essen.

Mr. DALZELL. I was going to ask the gentleman whether it ever did exist.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think it ever did.

Mr. BRODERICK. And the will has been treated as void for uncertainty?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was so uncertain that the Commissioners have not known what to do with the money, and they have held it in trust, as I understand it, ever since.

Mr. BRODERICK. Has it ever been in question in the courts?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; there was a construction of it in some way by the District courts, and the District courts directed the payment of the money to the Commissioners.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why not introduce legislation that will enable the Commissioners to carry out the will of the testator? Why not appropriate this money to the schools of that section of the District?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, I will state in reply to that appropriate question that the answer to it is that we can not carry out the will of the testator, because he directed this money to be given to the free white schools of Georgetown.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, there are schools of that character, are there not—free white schools—in Georgetown?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are schools in Georgetown to which only white children are admitted.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what I mean.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think so.

Mr. HEPBURN. And they are public schools, and they are free to the children of the District. Why not appropriate this money as the testator desired to have it appropriated?

Mr. MILNES. The courts have decided, have they not, that there was no such corporation to turn it over to?

Mr. RICHARDSON. So I understand. And the courts have held that they could not give it to the free white schools of Georgetown, because there was no such entity to receive it; therefore it was turned over to the Commissioners.

Mr. MILES. It is perfectly plain that that will is void for uncertainty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It looks so to me, because of the inability to carry out the will strictly.

Mr. BARHAM. Why not give it to the heirs at law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is what we want to do.

Mr. BARHAM. Why did not the courts give that instruction? Why did not the court instruct them to pay it out?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The court did not give any instruction, as I understand it, as to the final disposition of the money. These are the facts as the committee have them. We do not believe it would be a proper thing for Congress to attempt to assist the testator in making a will which would give the money to the free white schools of Georgetown. The schools of Georgetown are taken care of as all other schools in the District are cared for. There is no separate appropriation for the free white schools, or for the schools of Georgetown now, but they are taken care of in the District of Columbia appropriation bill as a part of the great school system of the District of Columbia. They do not need this appropriation, and if Congress is to supplement the will at all, I think it is equitable to supplement it by giving the money to the descendants of this man.

Mr. LOUD. Why can not these heirs sue and recover, if the will is void? The gentleman says the will is void.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think there was some adjudication in the courts which prevented the Commissioners from paying the money over.

Mr. LOUD. It seems to me we are disposing of this money to-day without sufficient evidence, and if we do so, these heirs may sue and eventually recover. Then we shall have to reimburse.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no. The heirs join in the petition for relief under this bill. I wish to have published, as a part of my remarks, the petition in this case asking for this very legislation.

Mr. LOUD. They may be the heirs and they may not. That has not been adjudicated, has it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no controversy about the heirs.

Mr. LOUD. There is no occasion for a controversy here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, there never has been. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker. I have no interest in it one way or the other, but it does occur to me that the children ought to have the money, rather than that it should go to the plethoric treasury of the District of Columbia. These people are proven to be very poor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks the report, which is the same as the report of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be printed as part of the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia have considered the bill (H. R. 8098) authorizing and requiring the District Commissioners to pay the funds of the estate of Peter Von Essen, deceased, to his heirs and distributees, and report a substitute therefor which they recommend do pass.

The committee find that the bill for the relief of the persons named has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. The object of this bill is the same as House bill 8098. The committee recommend, therefore, that the bill, as reported by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia be reported as a substitute for House bill 8098, and that same do pass. The committee recommend that House bill 8098 lie on the table.

The facts in the case are clearly set forth in Senate Report No. 1383 of the present session, made on the bill reported as the substitute above mentioned. This report is adopted by your committee as their report, and is as follows:

"The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2966) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown, make a favorable report on the same as amended.

"The history of the schools in Georgetown shows that for sixty years after the settlement of that town there was no provision for public instruction of boys and girls. In June, 1811, the people of Georgetown, by private contributions, founded a school on the Lancastrian system, and from that time on these private benevolences were both recognized by the corporation and were supplemented from its treasury. The progress, however, was not rapid, and but for the help of individuals of public spirit (such as George Peabody and W. W. Corcoran) there would have been breaks in the continuity of the free schools. It was not until June 16, 1871, that the Georgetown schools were put upon a solid basis by the appointment of a board of trustees, and in 1874 they became a part of the school system of the District of Columbia.

"It was during the days of poverty and struggle on the part of the public schools of Georgetown that Peter Von Essen died, leaving some small annuities to his daughter and granddaughter and giving his fortune to the free white public schools of that town. At the time of his death he was supposed to be a wealthy man, but the amount of the bequest turned out to be less than $13,000. He had two children, a son, John Peter, jr., and a daughter, Harriet, who married Francis Essex.

"It appears that the son was dissipated and that Mr. Von Essen willed his property to his grandson, Francis Von Essen Essex, and cut his son off with an annuity. The son thereupon made way with the will and made it appear that the wife of the grandson was the guilty party. The trustees of the schools (who were the witnesses to the will) were to receive the property, which was charged with two small annuities that ceased with the death of the grandson.

"This grandson left four children, the youngest being 3 years old. They were cared for by their grandmother, then over 70 years old. The heirs brought suit, but the court held that the bequest was legal, and in 1888 the sum of $12,057.24 was paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia as the successor of the city of Georgetown. The Commissioners, however, are at present without authority to use this money as provided for in the bequest, and such authority must be granted by Congress.

"Meantime the conditions have so changed that it is impossible to carry out the intentions of the testator. The schools of Georgetown (now without corporate existence) are well provided for by annual appropriation; and hence there is no need of this small bequest. On the other hand, the three living descendants of Peter Von Essen are in such circumstances that the division of the money among them would be simply an act of justice. The Government having provided to carry out the purposes for which the bequest was made, may properly provide for a distribution of the money among the heirs of the testator; and especially is this just, inasmuch as legislation is necessary in any event.

"The heirs of Peter Von Essen are: Stephen E. Essex, born June 27, 1866; Harriet C. Essex, born July 22, 1868; Francis B. Essex, born January 5, 1873. Stephen E. Essex is now employed as a teamster, as appears below:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 1, 1897.

"I hereby certify that Stephen Essex is at present employed by me as a teamster, and has been in my employ for the last six years. I pay him $7.50 per week. He is a sober, industrious, deserving man. I have known him all his life, and I believe I can safely say he has never been known to drink any intoxicating liquor. He has a wife and four small children, and he certainly tries his very best to maintain them. I know him to be the grandson of the late Peter Von Essen.

"Respectfully,

W. H. GASKINS,
"1006 Thirty-second street NW.

"Francis B. Essex is a mechanic in the employ of Messrs. Wimsatt & Uhler, builders and dealers in marine hardware, Seventh and K streets SW., as appears from the following letter:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 2, 1897.

"GENTLEMEN: The bearer of this, Frank Essex, a grandson of the late Peter Von Essen, has been in our employ for nearly seven years; is an industrious, sober, and reliable young man, a good mechanic, and we can and do cheerfully recommend him for favorable consideration by your honorable body in his application before Congress.

"Respectfully,

WIMSATT & UHLER.

"The COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

"The people of Georgetown have signified their desires in the matter in the following petition:

"GEORGETOWN, D. C., December 31, 1896.

"The Board of Commissioners for the District of Columbia:

"DEAR SIRS: We, the undersigned residents of that part of the District of Columbia called Georgetown, do ask your honorable body to consider the equity side of the John Peter Von Essen case.

"We protest against the District of Columbia becoming the beneficiary of the residuum of the John Peter Von Essen estate, because the schools of Georgetown, as well as other parts of the District of Columbia, are amply provided for in the more than a million and a half annually appropriated by Congress (half of which comes from the General Government) while the heirs are poor and need the money.

"The $12,000 asked for in your bill now pending in Congress would be but a drop in the big bucket of the United States Treasury, but for the heirs it would be a godsend and establish them for life; moreover, we believe it would be bad to establish a precedent of making the public schools objects of charity.

"We ask your honorable body to bear in mind the changed conditions:

"1. When the will was made, the schools of Georgetown were supported for the most part by private contributions; now they are generously provided for by public appropriations.

"2. The corporation of Georgetown does not exist; the schools are not private; the small sum left of the large estate of thirty years ago makes it impossible to carry out the intent of the letter of the will.

"3. In 1866 the son of John Peter Von Essen was dissipated and untrustworthy, while your claimants, descended through his daughter, are sober, honest, and hard-working poor people.

"We trust that your honorable board will see your way clear to withdraw your bill, waiving the legal points in order to decide on the side of justice and equity.

"Respectfully, yours,

"Washington, April 17, 1896.

"GENTLEMEN: Agreeably to your request, I have examined House bill 8098 (Fifty-fourth Congress, first session), for the relief of the heirs of Peter Von Essen, deceased, which you referred to me for examination and report.

"In 1876 William King, surviving executor of the last will and testament of Peter Von Essen, who died in Georgetown in 1868, filed a bill on the equity side of the supreme court of the District of Columbia (No. 5238) against the (then) surviving heirs and distributees for a construction of the bequests in said will for the benefit of the free white schools of Georgetown. The bill in the equity cause above referred to alleges that the heirs of Peter Von Essen were a grandson, Francis Von Essen Essex, and a son, John P. Essen, who is alleged to have died intestate and without issue.

"I have no doubt the persons named in the bill H. R. 8098 are the heirs and distributees of Peter Von Essen, deceased.

"The bill 8098 is herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,
S. T. THOMAS,

"The COMMISSIONERS, etc."

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLUE. I renew my request for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] demands the regular order. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has notified the Chair that he has an election case, which will be in order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks;

A bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday;

Joint resolution (S. R. 205) to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America;

Joint resolution (H. Res. No. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States;

A bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation;

A bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown; and

A bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called, and to enable the President to otherwise promote an international agreement.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WATSON AGAINST BLACK.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of Committee on Elections No. 1, I call up the contested-election case of Watson against Black, and move the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That Thomas E. Watson was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is therefore not entitled to the seat therein.

Resolved, That James C. C. Black was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is therefore entitled to the seat therein.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report of the committee, and by direction of the committee, I call up the resolutions and ask that they be adopted.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were adopted.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted was laid on the table.

RECESS.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up the unfinished business.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House take a recess until half past 3.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 33.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess until 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations of the District of Columbia, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the fortification bill and ask for a conference.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, has that been considered at all?

Mr. GROUT. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. GROUT. I will say to the gentleman that the only way, if we expect to get these several appropriation bills through in these two remaining days, is to put them into committee of conference.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is the same old story——

Mr. GROUT (continuing). And to put them into conference at once.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (continuing). Without even a variation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. GROUT. The amendments are not very numerous, and perhaps you will want to agree to them.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what item it is that is increased to $600,000?

Mr. GROUT. I can not tell the gentleman this moment without an examination of the bill. Perhaps the Clerk can turn to that part of the bill and let us know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For coast defense guns of 8, 10, and 12 inch caliber, manufactured by contract under the provisions of the fortification act approved August 18, 1890, and of February 24, 1891, $156,184, with the following amendment: Strike out "$156,184" and insert "$600,000."

Mr. GROUT. Now, the gentleman will see that he does not want to agree to that amendment offhand.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not say that I want to agree to it offhand, but I simply wanted to know something about it before the request of the gentleman should be granted.

Mr. GROUT. It is safe to nonconcur at all times when Senate amendments are presented, and to let them go to a conference. Then if the conference committee bring in an agreement to some or all of the amendments, the House having agreed to nothing, we are at liberty to disagree to the report and instruct the conferees.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Not at all. There are some times when it is a great deal better for the House to take charge of the amendments than to permit a long conference and have the House delayed in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. GROUT. We shall make every effort to make an early report.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly, the Senate amendments were nonconcurred in, and the House agreed to ask for a conference; and the Speaker appointed as the conferees Mr. GROUT, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN BONDS AND STOCKS OWNED BY THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10625) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to secure payment of certain bonds and stocks owned by the United States and held under authority of the act of Congress of August 15, 1894, relating to the custody of the Indian trust fund.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any State is in default in the payment of principal or interest on any bonds or stocks issued or guaranteed by such State, the ownership of which is vested in the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to institute any action or proceeding which he may consider advisable against such State or its representatives to secure the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds or stocks: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of instituting actions or proceedings against any State in default, may sell said bonds or stocks with all interest due thereon at the highest price which he can obtain therefor, or he may compromise the indebtedness of any State on such bonds or stocks, such proposed sale or compromise to be first approved by the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask how this bill comes before the House?

The SPEAKER. On a motion to suspend the rules. Does the gentleman demand a second?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I demand a second.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided, and tellers reported.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I withdraw the demand for a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the demand for a second, but it has been ordered by the House. The Chair understands the gentleman does not desire to withdraw the claim for discussion. Perhaps the best way is to announce that the House has decided, by ayes 67, noes 34, to order a second.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, Rule XXVIII, clause 2, provides that—

All motions to suspend the rules shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority by tellers, if demanded.

Now, a majority of the House has not yet seconded this demand.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I made the demand for a second, and after we had counted for some time, finding evidently that the other side had two to one, in order not to further obstruct business of the House, I had an understanding with the gentleman that we should have the usual debate, and on that I was willing to withdraw the demand and have the second considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Was it understood that there was to be a different time for debate from that which is allowed by the rule?

Mr. WASHINGTON. No; the usual debate, twenty minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] will be recognized to control the time for and against.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report upon this bill be read by the Clerk.

The report (by Mr. SHERMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10625) entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to secure payment of certain bonds and stocks owned by the United States and held under authority of the act of Congress of August 15, 1894, relating to the custody of the Indian trust fund," report the same back to the House and recommend that it do pass.

In pursuance of a resolution of inquiry which passed the House on the 6th of June, 1896, the Secretary of the Treasury made a full report to the House on the 4th of February, 1897, which is House Document No. 253, second session, Fifty-fourth Congress, and by which it appears that there is due the United States from various States, by reason of the assumption by the United States of payment to the Indian trust funds of the amount heretofore invested in the bonds of the said several States, $2,075,466.66; that the United States has been paying to the several Indian tribes 5 per cent interest on these amounts for very many years.

The committee is informed that several of the States which have issued these bonds have heretofore compromised with other creditors and adjusted their debts, but there was no authority by which the United States could make any possible adjustment except receiving the face of the bonds and accrued interest.

The purpose of this bill is simply to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to either collect the above amount, with the interest due thereon, or to sell the securities, or to compromise with the different States upon terms which shall be approved by the Attorney-General and Secretary of the Interior. The bill has been referred to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him approved in the following letter:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, D. C., February 17, 1897.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, inclosing copy of a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to secure payment of certain State bonds and stocks owned by the United States and held under authority of the act of Congress of August 15, 1894, relating to the custody of the Indian trust fund, and requesting a report thereon.

"In reply, your attention is invited to Department letter dated February 4, 1897, reporting as to the condition of the State stocks and securities in question, in which the necessity for legislation by Congress, before the Secretary of the Treasury may be able to enforce collection or undertake a settlement thereof, is set forth.

"The proposed bill, if the same should become a law, will, it is believed, enable the Department to collect these moneys or dispose of these bonds advantageously to the Government, and I therefore urgently recommend its passage. The United States is and has for some time been advancing to the fund the interest on these bonds and stocks, and unless some active steps are taken may continue to do so indefinitely.

"Respectfully, yours,

"W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

"Hon. J. S. SHERMAN,
"Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
"House of Representatives."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, as appears by the report, the United States has from time to time invested money which it held in trust for various Indian tribes in bonds of the various States, and many of those have defaulted, and after default the United States assumed the debt, and from the time of that resumption to the present has been paying to these Indian tribes the interest thereon, so that up to the present time, besides the principal due to the United States on these bonds, it has advanced to these several Indian tribes hundreds of thousands of dollars in the way of interest. Several of the States have already, as gentlemen know, compromised with their creditors upon some basis or other but there was no provision by which the United States could compromise. It was forced to collect either the full amount of the bonds or nothing. One of the States, at least, Arkansas, has, under a law recently enacted, entered into negotiations with the United States, and the United States and the State of Arkansas have practically agreed upon terms adjusting their respective debts.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that under that power of compromise, and under the arrangement that has been made, the entire indebtedness of the State of Arkansas to the Government for the original Smithsonian fund has been absorbed and wiped out; and has not that been done under just such a power of compromise and concession as the gentleman proposes in this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the proposed compromise with the State of Arkansas is for a sum very much less than the original face of the bonds. Whether it entirely wipes out the debt for the Smithsonian fund or not I do not know.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman if it is not true that under that compromise the United States becomes the debtor?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no. Under that proposed compromise, as I understand it—and my friend from Iowa can perhaps correct me if I misstate it—the United States is to receive $160,000 in cash, and the respective claims of the State of Arkansas and of the United States (the State claiming that there is something due to it from the Government of the United States) are wiped out.

Mr. LACEY. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars in bonds, not in cash.

Mr. SHERMAN. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars in new bonds. But the compromise does not, as my friend from Iowa supposes, make the United States a debtor.

This bill authorizes the United States to bring actions against hese several States upon their bonds in default, or it authorizes an official to negotiate with the several States and agree upon a settlement, which shall be effective only when approved by the heads of two Departments; or it authorizes further the sale of securities to some purchaser who may desire to take the position which the United States now has. It is a bill such as we do not often have here toward the close of a session, a bill designed to bring money into the Treasury rather than to take money out of the Treasury, and I trust that it will pass. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Before the gentleman sits down, can he give the House a statement of the States concerned and the amounts claimed?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. It is found upon page 5 of House Document No. 263 of the present Congress. A full statement is given in that document of the exact status of the debts and of what has been done with reference to adjusting them. The States concerned are Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, the two Carolinas, Tennessee, and Virginia, and the total amount in default is two million and seventy-five thousand and some odd dollars. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Yes; I wanted to get that information, as we have not before us the document to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The title of this bill specifies that it relates to bonds and stocks held under an act of 1894, but the discussion has been in relation to bonds held under acts passed long before that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Bonds and stocks held under that and prior acts.

Mr. LACEY. Well, is this title sufficiently descriptive?

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps not. Perhaps we should amend it.

Mr. COLSON. Does not the gentleman think that this bill should be amended so as to provide that these bonds, in case of sale, shall be sold at public sale? The bill does not so provide in terms.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill does not so provide in terms, but it does provide for a sale under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COLSON. That is true; but, in view of the recent sales of bonds by the Government through the Secretary of the Treasury, I think this bill should be amended so as to provide for a public sale.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the gentleman is correct, although I do not think we should have any trouble along the lines of the controversy over the recent sale of bonds, as the question there was simply as to how much premium we should receive. I do not think there will be any trouble of that kind about these bonds. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLSON. Is this bill open to amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it is not, as I have moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. COLSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLSON. Is it not permissible in any way to amend this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. COLSON. Well, I think it is not wise to invest the Secretary of the Treasury with such discretionary power as this bill gives him. These bonds may be sold at private sale, as the bonds of the Government have been sold recently under the present Administration, when bonds worth 116 or 118 were sold for 104½.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it admissible to offer an amendment to this bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. No amendment can be offered to the bill in its present position.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure, too important, it seems to me, to be brought up at this time and put through the House under a suspension of the rules, with a chance for only twenty minutes' discussion on a side. It is impossible to arrive at anything like a comprehensive understanding of the scope of the bill with such a limited discussion. We can not tell how far it may go or to what it may lead. It may possibly involve lawsuits between the Federal Government and the various States. I think it very unwise to attempt to legislate in this manner at this late hour of the session.

It will be remembered, perhaps, by some that some ten days or two weeks ago a resolution which had passed the Senate was presented to this House for consideration, in the interests of a particular constituency by its Representatives, asking a settlement between that State and the United States Government, involving the very items mentioned in this bill now coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs. At that time we asked, however, one thing additional: That the claims which Tennessee has against the Government of the United States, and which she has maintained in such manner as she has been able to do for thirty years, might be taken into consideration as an offset against the bonds held as an Indian trust fund, and as an offset against such other claims as the Government of the United States may have against that constituency.

I do not think it is fair or just to legislate in such a manner as this, for one side only. Tennessee is not the only State involved in this question. As was stated by my friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], Louisiana, Arkansas, Virginia, and perhaps one or two other States are interested in this matter. Having hastily sent to the document room to procure Document No. 263, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, I find it impossible to gather from these disjointed pages a concise statement of the amount of any of these debts. The House ought to understand this question before a bill of such importance as this is rushed through. It is true that it is not a Senate measure and there is very little chance of it passing at the other end of the Capitol before this Congress adjourns. But I think ample time ought to be given for the full consideration of the measure and an understanding of its magnitude.

In order that Representatives of other States interested in this matter may be heard, I will not consume further time, but will yield to other gentlemen. In the first place, I yield to my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be amended by adding after the words in line 15 "that he may compromise the indebtedness of any State on such bonds or stocks" the words "or any claim of such State against the United States." I hope my friend from New York will make no objection to this amendment. It places the whole matter in a shape for adjustment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "stocks," in line 15, add "or any claim of such State against the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. I object.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I now yield four minutes to my colleague, Mr. MCMILLIN.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that when the House understands the full significance of this bill, it will not consent to take it up and pass it without a recommendation of the Judiciary Committee, without being allowed the right to amend, and without even the right to debate the proposition for more than twenty minutes on each side.

Here is a proposition to authorize the institution of suits against five or six States of this Union upon important matters that we have not been able to settle for the last twenty-five years. It is proposed to rush this bill through in the short period of forty minutes. The gentleman from New York has told us that the States to be sued are Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Florida.

Why is it, if great States are to be brought before the tribunals of the country, that the opinion of the Judiciary Committee of this Congress is not invoked? Why is it that such a bill comes without the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs? This bill does not represent the unanimous views of that committee; on the contrary, the committee is seriously divided upon the question. What pretexts will be brought next for suing States? What States will be hauled up next? Where is this matter to end? How do you propose to enforce the judgment? Will you sell the States?

One of the States to be sued under this bill has already secured the passage in this Congress of a proposition for an amicable settlement on terms laid down in an elaborate bill, which was fully discussed before its passage. There is another bill pending now which has time after time passed the Senate, which has more than once passed the House, which was voted on the other day under a suspension of the rules—a bill authorizing another of the States to settle by amicable adjustment the important matters involved here.

The House has never felt that it was justified in authorizing the institution of these suits; yet it is proposed now in a wholesale way to institute such suits against States of the Union. There ought to be a carefully prepared measure looking to a settlement with each State upon the facts affecting its particular case. There is no provision here for set-off in any action which may be brought. The equities involved in these controversies ought to be settled; equities which have caused Congress to refrain from action so long ought not to be disposed of in this way. No set-off is allowed by this bill. No provision is made for equitable defense by the State when suit is brought. On the contrary, when the suit is brought, the cold principles of law are to be applied where great equities exist.

Mr. Speaker, if this were a proposition to bring suits against the State of Pennsylvania or Iowa or New York, without the right to amend the bill, without the right for ample discussion or due consideration, I should stand, as I am standing now, against any such proposition. The States have rights in this regard which ought to be most sacredly and studiously cared for. If the proposition were that the least Territory of this Union should be brought to account in this way and dealt with thus harshly, I should resist it.

Every State is interested in not establishing such a precedent as that proposed to be established by this measure. Every individual member representing a State upon this floor is interested that this bad precedent shall not be established. If we are going, Mr. Speaker, to bring these suits against the States, let us have the Judiciary Committee of this House consider the matter and inform us that it is at least wise; let us have them say that it is constitutional; let us have them say that it is judicious; let us have some utterance from the chief law tribunal of the House of Representatives to justify such extraordinary action. But no; suddenly, without notice, with no opportunity to offer an amendment, no opportunity to set up the equities of the States involved, it is proposed to come here and by a wholesale proceeding bring more States before the judicial tribunal of this country than ever was brought by any single act of Congress before, in the history of the whole Government.

I protest against it, sir. I protest in the names of all the States. It is unwarranted and an unwarrantable proceeding. Such a measure ought not to be enacted by this body. My attention has just been called by my friend Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia to the fact that the eleventh amendment to the Constitution was adopted to prevent the hauling up of States at the request of individuals in similar cases.

That amendment was adopted soon after the adoption of the Constitution itself, by the very people who had adopted the Constitution, and was wise. Let us defeat this measure and refuse to take this very questionable step.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GIBSON. I will ask the gentleman from New York if he will allow me to read an amendment to the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I had better occupy that time or reserve it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I hope the gentleman will occupy a portion of his time now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather that the gentleman would proceed.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], who wishes to be heard on this subject.

[Mr. MCRAE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this bill as it is presented, but not for the reasons stated by certain gentlemen on the other side of the House. I have no objection at all to the first section of the bill, but I am opposed to investing any of the officers of the United States with power to compromise these claims of the United States, about which there is no possible controversy. There is no question but that certain States owe the United States, or the wards of the United States. The evidence of their indebtedness is beyond all controversy, just as it was in the case of the State of Arkansas. No man doubted but that the State of Arkansas had absorbed the entire fund which the charity of an Englishman gave to the people of the United States for the purpose of founding the great Smithsonian Institution. That money was put into the hands of the State of Arkansas half a century ago. For more than thirty-seven years that State has refused to pay either principal or interest. It now amounts to more than $1,500,000, not a cent of which that State will pay; but under the provisions of a statute authorizing a compromise they have been permitted to trump up claims against the United States, claims growing out of the grants of the United States, claims growing out of the beneficence of the United States.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEPBURN. These claims they have tried to expand until they would absorb the whole of this just indebtedness.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I hope——

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, with that example before, me I am unwilling to trust any gentleman with the arrangement of these difficulties under the comprehensive word "compromise." It means entirely too much. It gives them too much of authority to fritter away, under the pretense of settling claims of these States, these bona fide claims which the United States has against the States, about which there is no dispute, which every man knows they owe to the Government.

Mr. MCRAE. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. When he says that nothing has been paid, I simply want to suggest that he overlooks the fact that all of the 5 per cent money, all of the swamp and school indemnity fund, has been sequestered and held and applied on this indebtedness, besides a large quantity of lands in place, which counterclaims were allowed and credited under the act of August 4, 1894.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, there are some comparatively trivial sums which the United States holds in its own hands, under the general statute, and which it has refused to pay over.

Mr. MCRAE. These are not trumped-up claims, but well-recognized, equitable claims.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am entirely unwilling at this time, in this hasty way, to invest any officer of the Government with the power to compromise these claims about which there is no dispute.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHERMAN. How much time has the gentleman remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has four minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] would give me time to read an amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Let us hear from the gentleman from New York. I will try to yield to my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] later.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, my valued friend [Mr. WASHINGTON] has found fault with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs for bringing in this bill at this time. I desire to call the attention of my friend to the fact that in June last there was passed, on my motion, a resolution of inquiry directed to the Treasury Department for the information contained in this House document. No answer was sent to that inquiry, and after the House met in December I addressed a letter, and then a second and a third, and made several visits to the Treasury Department before I succeeded in obtaining the information which I desired, which reached here under date of February 4. As soon as possible thereafter the Indian Committee considered the affair and reported thereon.

This bill has been brought up here at the earliest possible moment. Certainly this House is not responsible for some little delay. We waited for nearly eight months for a report from the Treasury Department, without which we could not act. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] suggested that this bill should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Why, Mr. Speaker, this bill was properly referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Under the rules of the House that committee has to consider all questions which relate to the funds of the Indians. Excepting its chairman, presumably, it has on it as good lawyers, possibly excepting the Committee on the Judiciary, as any committee of this House. Had the bill been sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, my friend from Tennessee then, I assume, would have desired that the bill be sent to the Committee on Claims, or to some other committee. My friend says that he would stand up here and defend the States of Iowa, New York, or Pennsylvania if such a bill as this were brought in here. Thank God, Mr. Speaker, the States of Iowa, Pennsylvania, or New York will never demand a champion against defaulted claims.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that my valued friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] ought to favor this bill. I believe it is wise. I believe in giving to the heads of Departments—and this provides for the concurrent action of two—authority to compromise these debts. Without that authority it may be that we may never reach a conclusion. With that authority I believe it is possible within a reasonable length of time to bring into the Treasury a considerable sum of money, and we all agree that such a case as that would not injure the already so-alleged overfilled Treasury of the United States. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has objected to the provisions of the bill on the ground that it provides for a compromise. Does the provision of compromise provide that it shall include the equities on the part of the States as well as on the part of the General Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not in terms so provide. It provides, Mr. Speaker, that they may be sued for their debts, they may be compromised, or their securities may be sold. That is what it provides in distinct terms. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, before the time is entirely exhausted I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended fifteen minutes additional on each side, so that this question may be fully understood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time for debate may be extended fifteen minutes on a side. Is there objection?

Mr. HOOKER. I object.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I will put the request in this way, that we may be allowed ten minutes on a side. This question is not understood by the House. I appeal to my good friend not to object to that. I think the chairman of the committee will join me in that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that debate on this question be extended for ten minutes on a side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. COLSON].

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, among the objections which have already been stated to the pending measure, there is another which occurs to me, and it is this: The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of instituting actions or proceedings against any State in default, if he does not think it advisable, may proceed to sell these bonds or stocks with all the interest due thereon at the highest price which he can obtain therefor.

Now, the measure does not provide that these bonds shall be sold at public sale. It leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell them at public sale or at private sale. This is an unwise feature of the measure. The bill should have been drafted so as to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury, in case he thought it proper to sell these evidences of indebtedness, should advertise them and sell them in the open market to the highest bidder, and not leave it possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these bonds, as the present Secretary of the Treasury has sold bonds of the Government of the United States, at private sale, and in that way put an unreasonable margin of profit into the pockets of a private syndicate.

The present Administration, Mr. Speaker, has been disgraced by a proceeding which should never have been possible under the laws of the United States. A block of bonds of $62,000,000 were sold at private sale. Those bonds were worth upon the market 116 and 118, and yet they were sold in private at 104¼, giving a profit of $8,000,000 upon that sale of bonds, and putting it into the coffers of a private bond syndicate. I am opposed to such a proceeding.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects a number of States, among others the State of Florida. I will say to the gentleman from New York that there never has been a day when the State of Florida has not been ready to pay the United States every dollar of indebtedness due it if the United States would pay us what has been favorably reported Congress after Congress by every committee of this House that has ever considered these claims, and by every Department to which the claims were referred under authority of acts of Congress; and yet every time that a report has come before this House in our favor the House has failed to act upon it.

Now, this bill undertakes to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these bonds held against the several States and authorizes him to sue the several States, and yet provides for no offset, for no judgment against the United States if we prove that they are indebted to us over and above our indebtedness to them. The gentleman from Iowa says that we owe the United States undeniably some money, about the amount of the bonds. The United States owes us undeniably, outside of disputed claims, at least large claims on account of lands; and yet it is proposed to make no provision for any offset.

Mr. HULICK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I have but two minutes, or I would yield.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read as a part of my remarks an amendment which I hope will not be objected to by my friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]. It is as follows:

Add "Provided, That where any of said States has a claim against the United States, the said Secretary, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to adjudicate such claim by way of set-off against such bonds and accrued interest thereon."

Mr. Speaker, why should the Government of the United States be allowed to collect its claims which are evidenced by bonds and the States not be allowed to bring forward their claims by way of set-off? One of the most equitable principles administered in any court is that of set-off. There is nothing more unjust from the standpoint of law and equity than to allow one man to go into court and collect his claim and to deny to the defendant the right to prove his counterclaim. That is one of the barbarisms of the old common law which has been corrected by statute in all the States of the Union so as to allow a set-off, the principle of equity being incorporated upon the principles of the common law by the operation of the statutes.

For my State of Tennessee all that we ask is that when this claim of the United States is presented against her she may have the right to present to the very same officers mentioned in this bill what she has to say in defense of herself by way of counterclaim and set-off. Why should not the Government of the United States be willing to trust its own officers, the very men that it is proposed shall compromise these claims? We are willing, Tennessee is willing, that they shall adjudicate her counterclaim. How can there be any objection to that course of procedure? We take your own officers, your own Secretary of the Treasury, your own Secretary of the Interior, and your own Attorney-General, and we are willing that they shall determine whether the State of Tennessee owes the United States or whether the United States owes the State of Tennessee.

Mr. WASHINGTON. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes left.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I would ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he will not use some of his remaining time now?

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps I do not care to use any more time. My case seems to be so strong that it does not need many advocates to espouse it on the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment. I have submitted it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], and I ask unanimous consent that I may have it read and may offer it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to have read an amendment which he desires to propose. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend the bill by adding thereto the following:
"And their action shall be approved by the President of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be amended in this way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to adding the amendment presented by the gentleman from California?

Mr. LACEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] does not wish to consume his time, can it be taken by the opposition?

The SPEAKER. It can not.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, in this hurried debate very little can be added to what has been already said in regard to this measure, except to ask this question: Suppose this bill should become a law, and the officials here authorized to bring suits against these sovereign States of the Union and to collect the claims which it is alleged the Government of the United States holds against them should do so and should get judgments. How can these judgments be enforced? Is it proposed by this Congress to send the Army and the Navy against the sovereign States of this Union that are in default, to coerce the State legislatures into levying taxes and collecting the money and paying it into the Treasury of the United States?

That is a question that should be borne in mind in the consideration of this bill. Then, aside from that, the equities should be kept in mind. It should be remembered that we insist that the Government of the United States is indebted in various ways to each and all of these States. It is of no avail for gentlemen to rise on this floor and scoff at our claims and try to throw upon us the slur that we have repudiated our debts. I maintain, sir, that the honor of Tennessee is as good as the honor of New York, or of Pennsylvania, or of any Northern State. She discharges her legal obligations, and is proud to meet them when they are due.

It is true that Tennessee, like Northern States in the past, when she found herself with a debt that had not been contracted by her citizens, that was not a legal debt, did resist payment and did make an honorable compromise with her creditors. She does not deny that she owes the Government something, and the items of that obligation may be mentioned in the report cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], but at the same time Tennessee claims that the United States Government is justly indebted to her, and all that we ask is fair and just action by Congress, so that we may be allowed to put in as an offset to what we owe the Government of the United States that which it can be shown the Government of the United States justly owes us. If that can be done, and if this bill can be amended so as to allow us that right, in the interest of fair dealing, I shall not object to it, but I must continue to object as long as it is proposed to use force on the one side and to deny equity on the other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the time for debate on this side is about closed, and if the gentleman on the other side will not use up his time we shall have to submit the matter to the judgment of the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SHERMAN, to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was determined in the negative; there being—ayes 43, noes 88; two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLUE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

Mr. PERKINS. Will not the gentleman withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. DALZELL. For what purpose?

Mr. PERKINS. I want to pass a Senate resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Is it privileged?

Mr. PERKINS. I will move to suspend the rules and put it on its passage.

Mr. BLUE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DALZELL. I insist on my motion.

The motion of Mr. DALZELL was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House at 7.30 o'clock p. m. (in the absence of the Speaker) was called to order by Mr. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, Chief Clerk.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that Mr. JOHN DALZELL, a Representative from Pennsylvania, be chosen Speaker pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DALZELL, on taking the chair, was greeted with loud applause.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GILFRY, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10228) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMMIGRATION.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the message just received from the President of the United States.

The message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill numbered 7864, entitled "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States."

By the first section of this bill it is proposed to amend section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, relating to immigration, "by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age, similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not so able to read and write may accompany or be sent for and come and join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable."

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigration is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands, except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the zealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

A century's stupendous growth, largely due to the assimilation and thrift of millions of sturdy and patriotic adopted citizens, attests the success of this generous and free-handed policy which, while guarding the people's interests, exacts from our immigrants only physical and moral soundness and a willingness and ability to work.

A contemplation of the grand results of this policy can not fail to arouse a sentiment in its defense, for however it might have been regarded as an original proposition and viewed as an experiment, its accomplishments are such that if it is to be uprooted at this late day its disadvantages should be plainly apparent and the substitute adopted should be just and adequate, free from uncertainties and guarded against difficult or oppressive administration.

It is not claimed, I believe, that the time has come for the further restriction of immigration on the ground that an excess of population overcrowds our land.

It is said, however, that the quality of recent immigration is undesirable. The time is quite within recent memory when the same thing was said of immigrants who with their descendants are now numbered among our best citizens.

It is said that too many immigrants settle in our cities, thus dangerously increasing their idle and vicious population. This is certainly a disadvantage. It can not be shown, however, that it affects all our cities nor that it is permanent; nor does it appear that this condition where it exists demands as its remedy the reversal of our present immigration policy.

The claim is also made that the influx of foreign laborers deprives of the opportunity to work those who are better entitled than they to the privilege of earning their livelihood by daily toil. An unfortunate condition is certainly presented when any who are willing to labor are unemployed. But so far as this condition now exists among our people, it must be conceded to be a result of phenomenal business depression and the stagnation of all enterprises in which labor is a factor. With the advent of settled and wholesome financial and economic governmental policies and consequent encouragement to the activity of capital, the misfortunes of unemployed labor should, to a great extent at least, be remedied. If it continues its natural consequences must be to check the further immigration to our cities of foreign laborers and to deplete the ranks of those already there. In the meantime those most willing and best entitled ought to be able to secure the advantages of such work as there is to do.

It is proposed by the bill under consideration to meet the alleged difficulties of the situation by establishing an educational test, by which the right of a foreigner to make his home with us shall be determined. Its general scheme is to prohibit from admission to our country all immigrants "physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language;" and it is provided that this test shall be applied by requiring immigrants seeking admission to read and afterwards to write not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of the Constitution of the United States in some language, and that any immigrant failing in this shall not be admitted, but shall be returned to the country from whence he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him.

The best reason that could be given for this radical restriction of immigration is the necessity of protecting our population against degeneration and saving our national peace and quiet from imported turbulence and disorder.

I can not believe that we would be protected against these evils by limiting immigration to those who can read and write in any language twenty-five words of our Constitution. In my opinion it is infinitely more safe to admit a hundred thousand immigrants who, though unable to read and write, seek among us only a home and opportunity to work, than to admit one of those unruly agitators and enemies of governmental control, who can not only read and write, but delights in arousing by inflammatory speech the illiterate and peacefully inclined to discontent and tumult. Violence and disorder do not originate with illiterate laborers. They are rather the victims of the educated agitator. The ability to read and write, as required in this bill, in and of itself, affords, in my opinion, a misleading test of contented industry and supplies unsatisfactory evidence of desirable citizenship or a proper apprehension of the benefits of our institutions. If any particular element of our illiterate immigration is to be feared for other causes than illiteracy, these causes should be dealt with directly, instead of making illiteracy the pretext for exclusion to the detriment of other illiterate immigrants against whom the real cause of complaint can not be alleged.

The provisions intended to rid that part of the proposed legislation already referred to from obvious hardship appears to me to be indefinite and inadequate.

A parent, grandparent, wife, or minor child of a qualified immigrant, though unable to read and write, may accompany the immigrant or be sent for to join his family, provided the immigrant is capable of supporting such relative. These exceptions to the general rule of exclusion contained in the bill were made to prevent the separation of families; and yet neither brothers nor sisters are provided for. In order that relatives who are provided for may be reunited, those still in foreign lands must be sent for to join the immigrant here. What formality is necessary to constitute this prerequisite, and how are the facts of relationship and that the relative is sent for to be established? Are the illiterate relatives of immigrants who have come here under prior laws entitled to the advantage of these exceptions? A husband who can read and write and who determines to abandon his illiterate wife abroad will find here under this law an absolutely safe retreat. The illiterate relatives mentioned must not only be sent for, but such immigrant must be capable of supporting them when they arrive. This requirement proceeds upon the assumption that the foreign relatives coming here are in every case by reason of poverty liable to become a public charge unless the immigrant is capable of their support. The contrary is very often true. And yet, if unable to read and write, though quite able and willing to support themselves and their relatives here besides, they could not be admitted under the provisions of this bill if the immigrant was impoverished, though the aid of his fortunate but illiterate relative might be the means of saving him from pauperism.

The fourth section of this bill provides "that it shall be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country." The fifth section provides "that it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act."

The prohibition against the employment of aliens upon any public works of the United States is in line with other legislation of a like character. It is quite a different thing, however, to declare it a crime for an alien to come regularly and habitually into the United States for the purpose of obtaining work from private parties, if such alien returns from time to time to a foreign country, and to constitute any employment of such alien a criminal offense.

When we consider these provisions of the bill in connection with our long northern frontier and the boundaries of our States and Territories, often but an imaginary line separating them from the British Dominions, and recall the friendly intercourse between the people who are neighbors on either side, the provisions of this bill affecting them must be regarded as illiberal, narrow, and un-American.

The residents of these States and Territories have separate and especial interests which in many cases make an interchange of labor between their people and their alien neighbors most important, frequently with the advantage largely in favor of our citizens. This suggests the inexpediency of Federal interference with these conditions when not necessary to the correction of a substantial evil affecting the general welfare. Such unfriendly legislation as is proposed could hardly fail to provoke retaliatory measures to the injury of many of our citizens who now find employment on adjoining foreign soil.

The uncertainty of construction to which the language of these provisions is subject is a serious objection to a statute which describes a crime. An important element in the offense sought to be created by these sections is the coming "regularly or habitually into the United States." These words are impossible of definite and certain construction. The same may be said of the equally important words "returning from time to time to a foreign country."

A careful examination of this bill has convinced me that for the reasons given and others not specifically stated, its provisions are unnecessarily harsh and oppressive, and that its defects in construction would cause vexation and its operation would result in harm to our citizens.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 2, 1897.

The bill returned with the message is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract-labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age, similarly qualified and capable; and a wife or minor child not so able to read and write may accompany or be sent for and come and join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than 20 nor more than 25 words of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from review, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing. If in any case from any unavoidable cause the foregoing slips are not at hand for use, the inspection officers shall carefully and thoroughly test the ability of the immigrant to read and write, using the most appropriate and available means at their command; and shall state fully in writing the reasons why the slips are lacking, and describe the substitute method adopted for testing the ability of the immigrant.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States.

SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That all persons convicted of a violation of section 4 of this act shall be deported to the country whence they came.

SEC. 7. That notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba during the continuance of the present disorders there, who have heretofore been inhabitants of that island.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1897.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this veto message be deferred until to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal, or as soon thereafter as it can be reached—not to interfere with conference reports.

Mr. DANFORD. I suggest that the Journal may not be read to-morrow, and some definite time should be fixed for the consideration of this subject—say 1 o'clock.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no objection, I presume, to fixing 1 o'clock.

Mr. PEARSON. I object to the postponement of this question.

Mr. DANFORD. Evidently we have no quorum here to-night.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If there is objection to the request for unanimous consent, I move, Mr. Speaker, that the consideration of this veto message be postponed until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit as a parliamentary inquiry whether the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is in order? The regular order, as we all very well understand, is the matter coming over from yesterday evening. It occurs to me that whatever may be done other than the consideration of the regular order must be done by unanimous consent. I had this in mind yesterday when I insisted that the matter then pending should be disposed of. At any time when the regular order is called, I submit we must take up the bill affecting the sending of certain matter through the mails. It seems to me that no business can be entertained except by unanimous consent otherwise than the consideration of conference reports, which are always in order.

The SPEAKER (who had resumed the chair during the reading of the veto message). It is quite true that a veto message is always a question of privilege. At the same time the House very often refers such a message to a committee. There does not appear to the Chair any reason why the House may not fix a time for the consideration of such a message.

Mr. BAILEY. That is very true in the ordinary condition of business under our rules. So, too, under our rules it is ordinarily in order at any time to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills; but in the peculiar parliamentary status that now exists I doubt whether that motion would be in order. I make the suggestion purely as a friend of the court, and I have no interest in the matter one way or the other. I suppose we ought to keep our Journal correct, however, as to the order of the motions, and in view of that, I meant to suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that unanimous consent was desirable.

Mr. PEARSON. I would ask the gentleman what is the objection to the consideration of this matter now? We have all made up our minds about it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true, but we have not a full House, and it is a matter that gentlemen on both sides of the House would like to take the sense of a full House upon.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection on the part of a great number to considering the question now but for the fact that the House is slimly attended at this time, and I think the majority of the members would like to go on record. For that reason I made the motion to defer consideration until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed, I think at about 8.30 o'clock, from the best information I have, the House will receive a message from the Senate with reference to its action on the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I will say that there are many items of interest touching the public buildings, rivers and harbors, forest reservations, and so on, not yet agreed to, that will require consideration of the House; and I should think it would take two or three hours to consider them. Certainly the consideration of these matters will take up some time; and if this veto message is considered now it is manifest that its consideration could not progress very far before being interrupted.

If it meets the approval of the House, I am quite ready to ask unanimous consent, or will move to take a recess until about 8.30 o'clock, the time I hope we will hear from the Senate on that bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman defer that request for a moment, to permit me to present a Senate concurrent resolution that ought to be acted upon?

Mr. BAILEY. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there must be some disposition made of this veto message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain a motion to postpone the consideration of the matter until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is my motion.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman from Missouri has control of the time?

Mr. CANNON. The motion is not debatable.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLUE) there were—ayes 104, noes 11.

So the consideration of the veto message was deferred until 1 o'clock to-morrow (Wednesday).

ORDER TO PRINT.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the vetoed bill may be printed in the RECORD, in connection with the veto message of the President, for the information of members.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

[The bill is published in the preceding column of this page.]

REPORT ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound in red cloth 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution to print and bind 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State, having considered the same, recommend that it be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost under this resolution at $1,132.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. CANNON (at 8 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House took a further recess until 8 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., resumed its session.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that there is any business now ready for consideration, and I therefore move that the House take a further recess until a quarter past 9 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, at 8 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m. the House took a further recess until 9 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5732) to amend section 5459 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing the punishment for mutilating United States coins and for uttering or passing or attempting to utter or pass such mutilated coins.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent to omit the reading of the report, and to read in place thereof the statement of the House conferees, which fully explains the action taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask if the statement fully explains the amendments?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; you will find that the statement is much more intelligible than the mere reading of the conference report would be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[For the text of the conference report see Senate proceedings of to-day.]

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

The Senate made 192 amendments to the bill involving a net increase of $2,039,063.92.

By the action of the conferees, submitted in the accompanying conference report, 114 of the amendments are disposed of, the House agreeing to amendments involving $451,735, and the Senate receding from amendments involving $308,849.13.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following amendments, namely, numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 10, and 12, relating to public buildings, as follows:

Appropriating $100,000 for additional land for extension of public building at Bridgeport, Conn.;

Appropriating $14,000 for completing approaches to public building at Charleston, S. C.;

Appropriating $100,000 for public building at Norfolk, Va., and extending the limit of cost of said building from $150,000 to $250,000;

Appropriating $25,000 for additional site for and $75,000 for extension of public building at Topeka, Kans.;

Appropriating $325,000 for purchase of the Corcoran Art Gallery property;

Appointing a commission to examine sites and consider prices of lots suitable for a memorial building for the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; and

Appropriating $50,000 for purchase of a site for a public building at Butte, Mont.

On amendment numbered 24, appropriating $175,000 for a revenue cutter, for service on the Atlantic coast.

On amendments numbered 48, 49, and 50, appropriating $75,000 additional for the Omaha Exposition.

On amendment numbered 58, creating an additional customs collection district in the State of Vermont.

On amendment numbered 61, appropriating $1,065,156.66 for the payment of sugar bounty.

On amendment numbered 62, appropriating $2,011.13 to pay A. T. Kimball for damage to his property from the break in the Pine River Reservoir, Minnesota.

On amendment numbered 63, appropriating $15,000 to the heirs of those who were killed by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, R. I.

On amendment numbered 72, restoring to the public domain lands in Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota, reserved by Executive orders and proclamations of February 22, 1897.

On amendments numbered 73, 74, and 75, increasing the appropriation for report of mineral resources from $20,000 to $45,000.

On amendments numbered 89, 90, and 91, relating to the electric lights in certain parks of the city of Washington.

On amendment numbered 96, appropriating $26,000 to improve the road from the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to the town of Lafayette, Ga.

On amendments numbered 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, relating to river and harbor works, by which the Senate reduced the appropriations of the House $2,450,168, and added new works amounting to $1,313,000.

On amendment numbered 144, appropriating $35,000 for an additional building for the Garfield Hospital.

On amendment numbered 146, appropriating $150,000 for the Deep Waterways Commission.

On amendment numbered 147, appropriating $5,000 for a board of engineers, to ascertain the character and value of the improvements made at the Pass of Aransas, in Texas, by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company.

On amendment numbered 148, appropriating $50,000 for the improvement of Pearl Harbor, Hawaiian Islands.

On amendment numbered 149, appropriating $2,500 for a survey, designs, and estimates for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River.

On amendment numbered 168, appropriating $100,000 for a branch soldiers' home at Hot Springs, S. Dak.

On amendments numbered 169 and 170, correcting a total and relating to the manner of disbursement and accounting for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

On amendment numbered 179, providing for three commissioners to revise and codify the criminal laws of the United States.

On amendment numbered 180, appropriating $150,000 for the Nicaragua Canal Commission.

On amendment numbered 190, authorizing the Joint Committee on Printing to have prepared plans for additions and improvements to the Government Printing Office.

J. G. CANNON,
WM. A. STONE,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I first desire to move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I understand that an amendment has been adopted by the Senate confirming the transfer of certain oil rights in Indian lands. Is that among the amendments agreed upon?

Mr. CANNON. I think there is no such provision upon this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. There is no such provision in this bill, I think.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Perhaps it is on another bill.

Mr. SAYERS. It is on another bill, I think.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I should like to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] that I desire to have a vote on the adoption of the conference report, and to make my motion to further insist upon the disagreement of the House, and then any motion which the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to make will be in order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the committee, one or two questions: Is it true that the conferees have agreed to the building of certain roads in States by the Federal Government? I refer to amendments 142 and 143.

Mr. CANNON. Please be kind enough to mention them.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. One is the road to the national cemetery at Pensacola, Fla., and the other is the road to the national cemetery at Springfield, Mo.

Mr. CANNON. With the cession of the right of way, that is correct, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There is no cession of the right of way in the first amendment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the conferees have agreed to the amendments in reference to public buildings, or have they disagreed to them?

Mr. CANNON. They have disagreed to them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. All of them?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; they will come up subsequently.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Including the last amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HARTMAN. I should like to ask the gentleman with reference to the forest-reserve amendment.

Mr. CANNON. There is no agreement on that.

Mr. HARTMAN. Would a motion be in order to recede from the disagreement on that amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Not until after we adopt the conference report; then it will be.

Mr. HARTMAN. In the absence of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I make that inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the remaining Senate amendments and assent to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. I yield for a moment for a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question first. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House insist upon its disagreement to the other amendments and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will suggest that it would not be good policy to ask a single vote upon all the amendments which are not included in the conference report. I believe that the conferees of the House ought to have the judgment of the members of the House upon the several propositions involved in the Senate amendments which have not been agreed to by the conference committee. I think it will save time if the gentleman will allow these amendments to be taken up as they appear in the appropriation bill and be separately considered by the House.

Mr. CANNON. One by one.

Mr. SAYERS. We can consider some of them by classes.

Mr. CANNON. I wanted to make this general motion, and then, if gentlemen desired to move that the House recede with or without amendments to any amendment, that they would give the number of the amendment, that action could be had upon those and then that we could dispose in a motion as to the remaining amendments.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House agree to certain Senate amendments, and will send my motion to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. It is in the power of members to have separate votes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to have a separate vote on these, or rather a class of amendments in the same category, and I make my motion in regard to them all.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, for the convenience of the House, that the Clerk be directed to read the amendments as they appear upon the bill, and then we can dispose of them in their regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend it will take a long time.

Mr. SAYERS. The House will get into confusion if the amendments be not regularly considered.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I want a separate vote on amendment numbered 127.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has sent up certain matters on which he desires a separate vote, and the gentleman from Kentucky desires a separate vote, on what number?

Mr. EVANS. Upon amendment numbered 127.

The SPEAKER. Upon amendment numbered 127. Does any other gentleman desire a separate vote?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on Senate amendment numbered 61.

Mr. POWERS. I ask for a separate vote on amendment numbered 58.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 138.

Mr. MERCER. I desire a separate vote on amendments numbered 48, 49, and 50.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska desires a separate vote on amendments numbered 48, 49, and 50.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 146.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask for a separate vote on amendment numbered 6.

Mr. LACEY. I ask for a separate vote on amendment numbered 72.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on amendment numbered 136.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 168.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 24.

Mr. HARTMAN. I desire a separate vote, Mr. Speaker, on the public building amendment in Montana, and the amendment relating to forest reservations. I will get the number of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the number of the amendments on which the gentleman desires to have a separate vote.

Mr. HARTMAN. On amendment numbered 12.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 112.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 1.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 63.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 179.

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on Senate amendment numbered 4.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 149, relating to the memorial bridge.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 128.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on all the river and harbor items, beginning at amendment numbered 98 and ending at amendment numbered 139.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I desire a separate vote on amendments numbered 110 and 139.

Mr. CANNON. I desire a vote on my motion as to the amendments upon which a separate vote is not asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the House insist upon the other amendments and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, with reference to these items upon which various members have asked for separate votes, will there be an opportunity for gentlemen to explain the reasons why they desire such separate votes?

The SPEAKER. That will be a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. CANNON. Gentlemen will see at once that, with all these separate votes, debate must be real debate and exceedingly brief; otherwise we can not dispose of all these matters.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to two minutes on each item.

Several members objected.

Mr. CANNON. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that if the Chair will recognize me, as under the rules I apprehend I can be recognized, I shall have no objection to unanimous consent that debate be confined to——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (interposing). Five minutes on each item.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, some of them are more important than others, and I believe I will ask the House to stand by me from time to time and will try to divide the time fairly among members.

The SPEAKER. The proper course of procedure would be this. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] being in charge of the bill, as each amendment is reached, he will be recognized, under the rule, for an hour, and he can use such portion of the time as he pleases or as the circumstances permit.

Mr. CANNON. The House sees the necessity for dispatch, and I will state to the Chair and to the House that if I am recognized I will be absolutely impartial in yielding from side to side, but will ask the House to stand by me from time to time to close debate and reach a vote as rapidly as possible.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such additional land as he may deem necessary, and to cause to be erected an addition or extension to the United States custom-house and post-office building at Bridgeport, Conn., for the use and accommodation of the Government offices, the cost of said additional land and extension or addition not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a moment, I will say that there are seven public-building items that come in the form of Senate amendments upon this bill. In the main, I think that the items are meritorious. I can not tell the House anything new upon the public-building question. There is no time now for anything but real discussion and real action according to the best judgment of the House. As to a portion of these amendments (if the House is inclined to accept any portion of them) I think we ought to nonconcur. I do not believe that we ought to authorize a new building. I do not believe that we ought to extend the limit upon any building where its construction has not been commenced. As to this building at Bridgeport, I will say in general terms that I have no doubt that the appropriation is justifiable from every standpoint, so far as the Government is concerned, and I hope the House will act upon its best judgment upon this and all the other amendments without temper, because there is no time for that. In justice to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], I now yield to him—I hope two minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, two minutes is a very short time in which to dispose of a one-hundred-thousand-dollar amendment, especially when the chairman of the committee admits that it is right, fair, and just. The city of Bridgeport in 1880 had 29,000 inhabitants, to-day it has over 75,000. Its custom-house receipts at that time were $4,000; to-day they are $100,000. Its post-office receipts in 1880 were $40,000; to-day they are nearly $100,000. It is an absolute necessity for the proper performance of the public business in that place that there should be an addition put upon the building; not for ornament, not for the purpose of beautifying the city, but for the proper performance of the public business. I have papers, photographs, and scale drawings of the building, if anybody cares to look at them; but this does not seem to be a case of merit. Is it a case of justice? Here is the sundry civil bill, which I have analyzed, carrying $18,000,000 of river and harbor appropriations, with $5,000,000 for public buildings, and the State of Connecticut does not get one single penny.

Now, I submit it to your sense of justice, to your sense of fairness, that when the chairman of this committee admits that this building is a necessity, and when thirty-eight States carry away $22,000,000, much of which, I think, the gentleman would not admit to be necessary, you should at least give to a meritorious building in a State that has not a penny in this bill at least $100,000 to carry on that work.

Mr. HICKS. Was the gentleman's bill before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. HILL. The bill has passed the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; it has passed the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and has passed the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Each of these committees admits, as the chairman here admits, that this is a meritorious and necessary measure. I submit the case on this two-minute talk to the fairness and good judgment of members of the House.

Mr. MADDOX. I ask the gentleman from Illinois what has become of the amendment on page 92, in lines 5 to 9?

Mr. CANNON. What is the number of the amendment?

Mr. MADDOX. Ninety-six.

Mr. HILL. I ask for a vote on this amendment before we take up any other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see that the gentleman has a vote on the question.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I desire to enter a protest against the enactment of any of these various amendments that propose to appropriate money for new public buildings. It is well known to the House that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have endeavored to secure a day, in order that buildings which are needed in various parts of the country should be erected. It was my honor to be one of a committee to present to the Committee on Rules a petition signed by 308 members of this House asking that a day be given for the consideration of a part of the many meritorious measures pending on the Calendar of the House. We were denied that right by the Committee on Rules on the ground of economy. We now find that the Senate has put on this sundry civil appropriation bill public buildings amounting to almost $800,000, as follows:

Bridgeport, Conn	$100,000	Topeka, Kans	$100,000
Charleston, S. C	14,000	Worcester, Mass	3,000
Helena, Mont	20,000	Salt Lake City	75,000
Norfolk, Va	100,000	Court of Claims	325,000
Racine, Wis	9,436	Butte, Mont	50,000

The House owes it to itself and to its committee to strike out every amendment in this bill that proposes to provide a new public building in any part of the country. If the House is to stand by its committee—if it is to take care of its own rights—here is the place to do it. It is not right that we should permit the Senate to load down our appropriation bills and have them brought here and passed, the House stultifying itself and discrediting its own committee by agreeing thereto. I trust that this amendment and all others of like character in the bill may be promptly and effectually voted down.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to ask the gentleman is it not true that there have been reported to this House a large number of public building bills that have quite as much, and many of them a good deal more, merit than the bills that have been put upon the sundry civil bill?

Mr. HICKS. That is very true.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then if these amendments be passed on the sundry civil bill, a few bills which have received the support of the Senate—on what account we can not tell—will become laws, while bills of greater merit, of much more importance, for buildings where the public service much more strongly demands the erection of public buildings will be left out. I submit to the House, therefore, the justice of what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS], a member of the committee, has said, that if the Senate is to legislate upon the question of erecting public buildings or purchasing sites for them, and they are to be voted through on an appropriation bill, there is no use for a Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; there is no reason for its existence, and there is only one logical thing to do—that is, to abolish it.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the honored chairman of the committee is precisely right. The committee has been laboring during this entire session of Congress to bring before the House bills that are equally meritorious with the amendments now in question; and this House, I take it, can not in justice to itself insult its committee by voting for these appropriations. No one regrets more than I do the failure to pass at this session of Congress many of the pending public-building bills, but this is not the way to do it, and to be consistent we must refuse to concur with these amendments suggested by the Senate. It is our right to originate this sort of legislation, and as the direct representatives of the people it is our duty to stand firmly by this right.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will be careful in disposing of these items. The pending amendment is for a public building already in existence. The wants of the city concerned have quite outgrown the accommodations of the present building. The postal receipts, in view of the increased population, have amounted away up to, in round numbers, $80,000 a year.

Mr. HILL. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred thousand dollars, as the gentleman informs me. Now, standing alone, independent of anything that has taken place touching the policy in regard to public buildings, this proposition has great merit. It is not a proposition to erect a new building.

I hope the House will be careful in the decision of these questions, because there are various kinds of public building amendments here—some calling for the construction of entirely new buildings which have never been authorized. Now, I want the attention of my friend from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. You shall have it.

Mr. CANNON. At the last session of Congress, on similar amendments, we had half a dozen conferences. The House "thundered in the index." Under the lead of the honorable gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] and myself we again and again insisted. But finally the House itself yielded. My friend, vigorous as he is, was compelled, worn out by the obstinacy of the Senate, to yield also.

Mr. PEARSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is to control the time both in favor of and against these amendments?

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the committee in charge of the bill necessarily controls one hour.

Mr. PEARSON. Will no one be recognized in opposition, in his own right?

The SPEAKER. Not until the gentleman from Illinois has yielded the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I will divide fairly with the gentleman. How much time have I had?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied four minutes.

Mr. HYDE. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is it the upshot of this that the House is powerless to enact any legislation of this kind, however meritorious, and is also powerless to resist that kind of legislation when it comes from the other House? That is what I want the House to know, and want the country to know.

Mr. CANNON. Legislation is by the assent of both the Senate and the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have used about six minutes altogether.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. How much has the other side used?

Several MEMBERS. There is no other side.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring in the amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HILL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 87.

Accordingly, the House refused to recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Clerk to read the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

(4) For public building at Norfolk, Va.: For extension of limit of cost of site and building from $150,000 to $250,000, $100,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement, and concurring in the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TYLER. Will the gentleman give me two or three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will give the gentleman two minutes, although I call his attention to the fact that the temper of the House is to nonconcur.

Mr. TYLER. Well, I want to test the temper of the House a little further.

Mr. CANNON. I will give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is an exceptional case; that in effect it is to complete a building already commenced. There was an appropriation made for a public building at Norfolk six years ago, on the 2d of January, 1891, of $150,000. After the purchase of the site by the Government, and after the site had been piled, it was ascertained that the sum of $50,000 had been expended, leaving less than $100,000 to complete the building under the original plans and specifications.

From the report of the Supervising Architect the conclusion was inevitable that $100,000 or less was absolutely inadequate to complete such a building as the necessities of the city and of the public service required. Therefore I presented a bill for the additional amount of $100,000. That bill was favorably passed upon by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

This amendment is in effect simply to do that which has already been done by the report of the committee, to complete a public building. We can not use the money already appropriated unless we have an additional amount that will give us such a building as the Supervising Architect and other Federal authorities say is necessary. If we use the $98,000 now in hand, which is what remains of the former appropriation, it will be utterly inadequate to the building that we desire. So, gentlemen, I say this is for the purpose of completing a building, not to commence one. We have already a site which has been piled. We have $98,000 on hand, which is inadequate to complete the building needed, and we want $100,000 more, the amount which is given in this amendment. I hope the Senate's amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, one word in reply only. The two most meritorious amendments in relation to public buildings, in my judgment, are the one at Bridgeport and the one at Topeka. That is all I want to say about it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me one word right there? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, just one word. I desire to say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have favorably reported to this House bills for ninety public buildings, and there is not one in the entire list that ought not to pass this House if any one in this bill ought to pass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

(6) For public building at Topeka, Kans.: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase 50 feet front of ground, or so much thereof as may be needed, adjacent to the ground now owned by the Government on which the public building at Topeka, Kans., occupied as a post-office and other Government offices, is located, not to exceed $25,000; and to enable the Secretary to enlarge the said building for the better accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, and to supply the same with the necessary fireproof vaults, elevator, and other fixtures and appliances for the more convenient, safe, and ready dispatch of the public business, $75,000; in all, $100,000: Provided, That the plans, specifications, and full estimation of said building shall be previously made and approved according to law: And provided further, That said building, so enlarged, shall be unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet on the north.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the amendment, with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede and agree to amendment numbered 6, with the following amendment, to wit:

For the purchase of additional ground at Topeka, Kans.: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, by condemnation or otherwise, 50 feet front of ground, or so much thereof as may be needed adjacent to the ground now owned by the Government on which the public building at Topeka, Kans., occupied as a post-office and other Government offices is located, not to exceed $25,000; and to enable the Secretary to change and improve the buildings on said newly-purchased grounds so as to accommodate the United States pension agency and other Government offices, and to supply the same with vaults and other fixtures and appliances for the convenient, safe, and ready dispatch of public business, $10,000.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, you will notice in this amendment, in order to meet the objection that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has to erecting any buildings, that all I ask for now is that we be allowed to buy 50 feet additional ground and that we be permitted to change the buildings on the newly purchased ground, so as to accommodate the public offices at Topeka. By this amendment an appropriation is asked for $35,000, instead of $100,000. In the city of Topeka we are paying $4,650 a year for rent and other expenses for office rooms for Government offices, and if you pass this amendment you will pay, in the rent and other expenses now paid, for the ground purchase and the changing of the building in less than eight years. That is not all. Not a department in the building has sufficient room to carry on public business. Valuable papers and furniture are kept in closets. Valuable papers are piled up to the ceiling. We need two more jury rooms when the two United States courts are in session. Every office is overcrowded, to say nothing of the $4,650 a year we pay to accommodate the offices now outside of the Government building, and that amount will be saved if you pass this amendment. I hope, as I have consented to leave out the part asking for a new building, that this House will vote for this amendment. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to the gentleman from Texas, who has visited the building and knows of its condition.

Mr. CANNON. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, some eighteen months ago I chanced to visit Topeka, Kans., and while there, in company with the gentleman from Kansas who has just addressed the House, I visited this building. I went into every room, and saw that not only the rooms, but also the corridors and the gangways, were occupied, and I have no hesitancy in indorsing what the gentleman has said respecting the necessities of that building. There is no question about it. Independent of any policy which this House may have entered upon respecting the construction of public buildings, the building at Topeka is, in my opinion, entirely inadequate for the public service.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. I make the same motion as to all of these amendments, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(12) To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site for a public building in the city of Butte, Mont., there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000. Said site shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet. The appropriation herein made shall be available during this fiscal year for the purchase of said site.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring.

The question was taken; and the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The House declines to concur, and nonconcurs in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the votes on each one of these motions and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to reconsider the several votes that have not been reconsidered, and to lay that motion on the table. Without objection, the latter motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(24) For constructing and equipping a steam revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic coast of the United States, with headquarters at the port of New York, the sum of $175,000.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, if I may have permission of the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, if he desires it.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think I can state the facts in the case in two minutes. The initiative of this proposition came from the Secretary of the Treasury. The facts with regard to the case are that owing to the exigencies of the Revenue-Cutter Service and the deficiencies in seagoing cutters, the only seagoing revenue cutter that was available for use at the port of New York was taken away three years ago, and since that time there has been no seagoing revenue cutter at the port of New York, and there is none in the Service with which to supply the deficiency and the necessity.

It is said by the collector of New York that the loss in revenue to the service is certainly as much as $500,000 a year by reason of the fact that we have no seagoing revenue cutter at that port. There is none, as I have already said, with which to supply the deficiency, and the Secretary of the Treasury has appealed to Congress on three different occasions and in his report to construct this vessel. The recommendation in this case has been approved by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and a bill has passed the Senate. It is placed on this bill as one of the urgent necessities of the service, and I hope that the House will concur in the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from New York——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I had supposed that as I was on the Committee I should be recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield a minute to my colleague first.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, this amendment should be adopted by the House without regard to party for two reasons. It is necessary first, that this appropriation should be made in order to care for our revenues; in the second place, to give due protection to human life. I have received a communication from the Maritime Association of the port of New York, asking that this amendment may be adopted, and requesting me to make every effort within my power toward its adoption. But is it necessary to appeal to you, gentlemen, to give the port of New York $175,000 for a revenue cutter which is asked for by the Treasury Department, and which is demanded by our maritime interests, in this bill which carries millions of dollars for unnecessary purposes? If it be necessary, I appeal to you to give the city of New York this one appropriation.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I was directed by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to report the bill spoken of by both the gentlemen from New York who have just addressed the House favoring the construction of a revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic coast with headquarters at New York. That bill was passed by the Senate and is now on the Calendar of the House. It provides for the expenditure of $250,000 for this purpose, so I should think the House might well afford to allow the appropriation of $175,000 in this bill. The revenue-cutter Grant was constructed for this service, but it was too good to be left there and was sent to Bering Sea to watch the sealers, and since that time the entire Atlantic coast has been left unprotected. I trust that the House will allow this appropriation to stand in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I yield thirty seconds to the gentleman from New York, Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have here a letter from the Maritime Association of New York, of which I will read as much as I can in the thirty seconds allowed me.

The letter is in part as follows:

THE MARITIME ASSOCIATION OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK,
New York, February 11, 1897.

DEAR SIR: We are most anxious to secure for this port a first-class seagoing revenue cutter.

Senator HILL's bill, S. 1473, to provide for it, passed the Senate last year, and its counterpart, Representative BENNETT's bill, H. R. 3561, was favorably reported in the House, but was not reached. It was then put by the Senate into last session's sundry civil bill, but was lost in conference.

Since the Perry was ordered to the Pacific, we have not had at New York a cutter capable of going to sea, however great the emergency. It is much desired by the revenue-marine officials, and it is much needed to cruise for the relief of distressed vessels in the stormy season. Lives and property have been lost for want of it, and we confidently hope that it may be secured.

Very respectfully,

HENRY S. KNOWLTON,
Vice-President.

Hon. JOHN MURRAY MITCHELL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

I hope the Senate amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire thirty seconds only for myself to close the debate on this item. There are 23 cruisers in the revenue service, 8 harbor boats, 4 cruisers now being built, and 2 authorized, not being built, but that can be built. Any and all of these may be ordered to the port of New York, if necessary, and 14 have been built in the last ten years. I am ready for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion to recede and concur, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was asked for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 83.

So the House refused to recede and concur.

The next amendment, No. 48, was read, as follows:

Including the return of said Government exhibit.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska that we vote on Nos. 48, 49, and 50 together.

Mr. MERCER. That is what I desire. I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in amendments Nos. 48, 49, and 50, and upon that motion I desire to be heard.

The three amendments, as incorporated in the text, read as follows:

(48) Including the return of said Government exhibit, two hundred (49) and seventy-five thousand dollars (50): Provided, That the cost of building or buildings for the Government exhibit shall not exceed $75,000.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, some years ago in the lower branch of the Nebraska legislature the public buildings committee introduced a resolution providing that $500 should be appropriated to pay the expenses of that committee "to visit the penitentiary and return." One of the facetious members of the house moved to strike out the words "and return." [Laughter.] Of course that was defeated.

Now, this amendment No. 48 says, "including the return of said Government exhibit." Of course in Omaha we have a disposition to take everything which belongs to us, but we do not care to keep this exhibit any longer than it will serve the purposes of the exposition, and the Treasury Department has informed me, and the exposition managers have informed me, that $50,000, the amount originally provided, is entirely inadequate to construct the building for the Fish Commission and also to construct the administration building. I do not think the members of this House desire to see a peanut show or to see a peanut building there, and I think they are great enough and magnanimous enough to give the appropriation that is provided in these amendments, providing for the return of the Government exhibit to the city of Washington and wherever else it comes from.

Mr. Speaker, that will be an exposition of no mean proportions. It will represent the resources, the industries, and the capabilities of twenty-four States and Territories, and I desire that for once the people of the United States may look over the Alleghany Mountains and may travel there and take notice of the resources of that grand transmississippi country. We expect the East to come there with its capital and its knowledge, and we expect that after that exposition has been seen by the people of the United States those grand States and Territories beyond the Mississippi will have an opportunity to grow and prosper the same as the Eastern States have done. I trust that the members of this House, irrespective of politics, will help us on these three amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. A word in reply, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred thousand dollars for the Government exhibit at Atlanta, including public building—it was simply magnificent.

Mr. MERCER. The Government building at Atlanta was taken from Chicago already built.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. MERCER. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. MERCER. Look at the report.

Mr. CANNON. Now, that made a magnificent exhibition, and the Government has the building in stock. This House, by the persistent action of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER], of which I do not complain, passed an act for the Omaha Exposition, limiting the amount to $200,000. That was followed by an act appropriating $150,000 for the exposition at Nashville.

Mr. MERCER. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars for Nashville.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars for Nashville, the gentleman says.

I want to say that the amount already appropriated by law will make a splendid exhibit, and I do not believe that in the present condition of the Treasury, and in view of the legislation already had, we should give $75,000 additional merely because the Senate has placed this amendment upon the bill and because the honorable Representative from Nebraska does not want to be outdone by the Senate. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Nebraska this question: How much has the State of Nebraska as a State contributed toward this exposition?

Mr. MERCER. The Nebraska legislature is acting on this proposition at the present time and has not completed its deliberations. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the amendment, it was rejected; there being—ayes 49, noes 92.

The fifty-eighth amendment was read, as follows:

Sections 2525 and 2526 of the Revised Statutes are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2525. On and after October 1, 1897, there shall be in the State of Vermont two collection districts, as follows:

"First. The district of Vermont to comprise the counties now constituting the First Congressional district of Vermont, in which district Burlington shall be the port of entry, and St. Albans, Alburg, East Alburg, Swanton, Highgate, Franklin, West Berkshire, Windmill Point, and Richford subports of entry.

"Second. The district of Memphremagog to comprise the counties now constituting the Second Congressional district of Vermont, in which district Newport shall be the port of entry, and North Troy, Derbyline, Island Pond, Canaan, and Beecher Falls subports of entry.

"SEC. 2526. There shall be in the district of Vermont a collector, who shall reside at Burlington, and whose salary shall be $2,000 per annum; and in the district of Memphremagog a collector, who shall reside at Newport, and whose salary shall be $2,000 per annum: And provided further, That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise, without appraisement, are hereby extended to each of the several ports in the two districts provided for herein, and to the subports of St. Albans, Richford, Island Pond, and Beecher Falls."

Mr. CANNON. I believe the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] wishes to move to concur in this amendment of the Senate. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. POWERS. That will not be enough.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; two minutes.

Mr. GROUT. I should like to say a word, also.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will consent to discuss the matter briefly; and I do not think we shall want any time in opposition.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, this proposition, unlike the public-building propositions which have been voted down, is one having substantial merit. The simple facts which called for this legislation are these: In 1799, before the days of railroads and steamboats, an act was passed creating the State of Vermont into one collection district. The population of the entire State at that time was less than 35,000, and very few goods requiring the payment of duties were then imported into the State. Since that time no less than six lines of railway running through the British Provinces traverse the State of Vermont, carrying goods to the Boston and Portland markets and also to the markets of the city of New York. The number of entries in the northern district of Vermont to-day is four times the number made in all the rest of New England with the exception of the ports of Boston and Charlestown; and the entries in Vermont are three-fourths as many as those in the district of Boston and Charlestown.

Now, every gentleman will understand that the work of collecting duties is greater or less in accordance with the number of importations, rather than the amount of duties paid. A small import with the payment of small duty requires the same clerical force as a large one involving a large amount. Not only that, but our State is unfortunately traversed by a line of mountains running from the north line to the south, so that the collector of the port of Burlington, which is his residence, is required, in reaching the east and northeastern parts of the State, where come in two large lines of railway, bringing imports from abroad, to travel as far as he would if he were going to the city of Boston or New York.

Now, it is proposed to divide this State into two northern districts, making the port of Burlington one, and the port of Newport, where another line of railway comes in from Canada, the other, with sundry subports in both districts. This is not an unusual proposition. The State of Maine has eleven or twelve northern districts.

A MEMBER. Thirteen.

Another MEMBER. Fourteen.

Mr. POWERS. The State of Connecticut has five.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. POWERS. Does the gentleman yield the case?

Mr. CANNON. I do not; but I am ready for a vote.

Mr. POWERS. Well, so am I.

The question being taken on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment, it was determined in the negative, there being—ayes 51, noes 83.

Amendment numbered 61 was read, as follows:

Bounty on sugar: For the purpose of paying the producers of sugar the balance of claims due them under the terms of the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," providing for the payment of eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the sugars actually manufactured and produced in the United States during that part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, comprised in the period commencing August 28, 1894, and ending June 30, 1895, both days inclusive, $1,985,156.66, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the conditions, restrictions, and limitations prescribed in the said act approved March 2, 1895.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I desire to make a motion.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to move to concur?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I wish to move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the same.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to my colleague on the committee five minutes.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, this appropriation was put on this bill by the Senate in pursuance of the law enacted March 2, 1895. This is not the institution of a new bounty. It is not for the purpose of permitting anyone to receive from the Treasury any money upon sugar to be produced in the future. It is for the purpose of making up the difference between the rate fixed in the act of March 2, 1895, and the amount appropriated under that act.

By the terms of that act Congress agreed to pay to the sugar planters, whether they produced sugar from cane or from sorghum, from beets or from maple, in consideration of the fact that the bounty of 1890 had been repealed, the sum of eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound upon the crop growing that year, and which had not been gathered. The estimate of $5,000,000, which was appropriated for the purpose of paying this amount at the rate of eight-tenths of a cent per pound, was upon the growing crop. It was impossible for Congress to ascertain at that time the exact amount which it must appropriate in order to comply with the statute. The crop being larger than was estimated for, the amount appropriated in the bill was not sufficient by more than $1,000,000.

We maintain that this is existing law, and that this is merely a deficiency appropriation, to make up the amount which ought to have been appropriated in order to fulfill the provisions of the statute at eight-tenths of a cent per pound.

If I may be permitted to do so, Mr. Speaker, I will yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. BUCK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields to his colleague, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the House is in a temper to listen to extensive argument even if time allotted permitted. There is simply a question of fact as to the condition of the existing legislation under which this appropriation is now offered. The act of 1895 did not appropriate a gratuity or a donation, but it recognized the injury which had been done by the sudden repeal of the bounty under the act of 1890. It recognized that enormous capital had been invested, and that increased preparation for the production of sugar which were made under the act of 1890, had entailed loss when the bounty was repealed.

I had not the honor to be a member of the Congress which passed this provision; but I have looked into it sufficiently to believe that when Congress, in 1895, put this legislation in the peculiar form in which it now is, it did not intend to give simply the $5,000,000, but it enacted the law, which I have not the time to read, in the form of a specific provision that a special bounty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound shall be paid to the sugar producers. The eight-tenths of a cent per pound was manifestly calculated in this way:

The House, in its sense of right and justice, took cognizance of the fact that the sugar planters had acted upon the faith of the McKinley tariff act; had invested enormously in the prospect and the hope of a large increase; had added to their machinery; had incurred pecuniary obligations; and to make up the deficiency to them of the 2 cents per pound bounty which they lost by the repeal of the act of 1890, the Wilson tariff act being expected to give them 1.2 cents per pound protection, Congress enacted the eight-tenths of a cent per pound bounty as an exact equivalent for that which had been taken away.

That is the substance of the proposition before this House, that the act of 1895 provided that a bounty of eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound shall be paid, and when the $5,000,000 were appropriated, that represented merely an estimate. There is, therefore, it seems to me, nothing for the House to do except to say whether this indebtedness, which has been created by the statute, shall be recognized and honored by Congress to-day. The amounts are recognized and fixed in the Treasury Department. Returns were furnished according to the bounty law, and persons entitled have made their proof.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. How much time has been consumed on the other side?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. I ask for two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MEIKLEJOHN].

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Speaker, I confidently believe that if gentlemen of this House understand the situation out of which this appropriation grows, there will be no question about concurring in this amendment, which is based upon law, equity, and justice.

The appropriation is not in pursuance of a new authorization, but it grows out of legislation that is already upon the statute books. That legislation was passed at the close of the last session of the Fifty-third Congress after protracted debate and careful consideration. There were two paragraphs. The first was that a bounty on all sugar produced from July 1, 1894, to August 28, 1894, testing more than 90° by the polariscope should be paid for at the rate of 2 cents per pound, and all sugar testing between 80° and 90° polariscope should be paid for at the rate of 1½ cents per pound. Act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 933), entitled "An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," provides:

That there shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to those producers and manufacturers of sugar in the United States from maple sap, beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown or produced within the United States, who complied with the provisions of the bounty law as contained in Schedule E of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, a bounty of 2 cents a pound on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, and 1½ cents a pound on all sugars testing less than 90° and not less than 80° by the polariscope, manufactured and produced by them previous to the 28th day of August, 1894, and upon which no bounty has previously been paid, and for this purpose the sum of $238,289.08 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Another paragraph was adopted in the same bill, which provided that all producers of sugar who made applications, filed bonds, and secured licenses during the period from the 28th of August, 1894, to the 30th day of June, 1894, should be paid a bounty at the rate of eight-tenths of a cent per pound.

The act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 933), provides:

That there shall be paid to those producers who complied with the provisions of the bounty law as contained in Schedule E of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, by filing the notice, application for license, and bond therein required, prior to July 1, 1894, and who would have been entitled to receive a license as provided for in said act, a bounty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the sugars actually manufactured and produced in the United States testing not less than 80 degrees by the polariscope, from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown or produced within the United States during that part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, comprised in the period commencing August 28, 1894, and ending June 30, 1895, both days inclusive; and for this purpose the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated: Provided, That no bounty shall be paid to any person engaged in refining sugars which have been imported into the United States, or produced in the United States, upon which the bounty herein provided has already been paid or applied for.

The bounty herein authorized to be paid shall be paid upon the presentation of such proof of manufacture and production as shall be required in each case by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. And for the payment of such bounty the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to draw warrants on the Treasurer of the United States for such sums as shall be necessary, which sums shall be certified to him by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by whom the bounty shall be disbursed, and no bounty shall be allowed or paid to any person as aforesaid upon any quantity of sugar less than 500 pounds. * * *

That any person not entitled to the bounty herein provided for who shall with intent to defraud, apply for, or receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Under this act these claims were filed with the Treasury Department. They were passed upon by the Comptroller of the Treasury. That statute contained an administrative provision. It contained a penalty for any imposition or fraud upon the Government. It was a complete and independent act. It was found that when all the claims were audited and allowed the appropriation of $5,000,000 made under this law was short by $1,085,000.

Instead of paying eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound it paid but six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the sugar-bounty cases of the United States vs. The Realty Company and United States vs. Gay, sustained the law and the equity and justice of that appropriation. If you strike from this bill this appropriation of $1,085,000, which has been authorized and appropriated under the present existing law, and a continuing appropriation, then with the same reasoning and the same judgment I say you should strike from this sundry civil appropriation $15,000,000 which it carries as a continuing appropriation of the river and harbor bill of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to have gentlemen clearly understand that this is an appropriation which has already been authorized by law, and that equity and justice demand that this House should concur in this amendment and retain this appropriation of $1,085,000 to pay the balance of these claims which have been filed, audited, and approved by the Treasury Department. I hope the House will concur in this amendment; and that when gentlemen upon this floor vote on this proposition they will take into consideration that they are voting for a continuing appropriation, the same as the $15,000,000 in this bill is a continuing appropriation for river and harbor improvements, and are not voting to authorize a new appropriation.

Mr. PEARSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I do not yield for the purpose of offering an amendment. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] two minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the McKinley law provided for a bounty of 2 cents per pound on domestic sugar. That law was repealed by the Wilson law in 1894. The crop of 1894 had been very largely produced while the McKinley law was still in existence. The repeal of the McKinley law by the Wilson law left the producers of domestic sugar in a position of embarrassment. It was claimed by them that they had an equitable claim against the Government for certain reimbursements under the McKinley law.

I will not stop to debate the comparative merits of the McKinley law and the Wilson law. Congress decided in 1895 that the producers of domestic sugar were equitably entitled to a rate of eight-tenths of a cent per pound upon all domestic sugar for the year 1894. A sum of $5,000,000 in the aggregate was appropriated to meet the amount due under that agreement, as that was the estimate upon the crop of 1894.

The crop of 1894 exceeded that of 1893, upon which the estimates were made. When all these claims had been audited and approved, it was found that an appropriation of $6,085,000 and a little over ought to have been made to meet the claims. Five millions were paid. A deficiency of $1,085,000 still stands upon the books of the Government in favor of those producers. The question now is this, Will we pay the existing deficiency?

The producers are credited upon the books of the Government in the sum of $6,085,000 and are debited to the payment of $5,000,000. There remains, therefore, an unpaid balance of $1,085,000 in round numbers. I hope the House will recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes only to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the Republican party, since the great Lincoln, has been noted for its love of justice and fairness, and its fulfillment of all promises made to the people. This has been its record since its foundation. The bounty on sugar was an enactment by the people through the representatives of the Republican party, in the great measure that did so much for our people and their prosperity.

Mr. THOMAS. Who repealed it?

Mr. HICKS. No matter who repealed it. The Republican party said to the people of this country that they would give them a bounty upon the production of sugar, and there is a part of that bounty yet unpaid, no matter if the greater portion does go to the State of Louisiana, whose Representatives voted for the repeal of that great measure, the McKinley bill, that did so much for the prosperity of this country; no matter if the members from Louisiana did vote for its repeal, we owe it to the people of Nebraska, to the people of California, and to the people of the great State of Pennsylvania, and also to Louisiana, to comply with and live up to our contract, as fully recited in that bill.

If we desire to keep our record as honorable men and as representatives of that great party of the people, the party of Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley [applause], it is our duty to pay the balance, whatever that balance may be, to the producers of sugar who were guaranteed this bounty under the provisions of the McKinley law. I appeal to my fellow Republicans to stand by and vote for this amendment and see to it that this money is paid, as we agreed and as we promised to do. I trust this amendment will prevail.

There is but a small part of this money, as has been suggested, that goes to the so-called Northern States. Let us rise above prejudice, if prejudice still exists, and prove that the great Republican party cares as much for the people of Louisiana (even though they do vote against us) as we do for the people of our own section. The great Republican party stands for prosperity for all the people, as well as justice and equal rights for all parts of our great country. [Applause.]

Let us stand by the contracts of the McKinley bill and thereby prove our love of equal justice, regardless of where and upon whom the benefits may fall.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the other side consumed?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I can have order, and I ask that the gavel may fall at the end of five minutes, and then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. Speaker, under the law known as the McKinley law there was a bounty upon sugar, which was paid from year to year. The McKinley law was repealed in August, 1894. It is true that shortly after that repeal the Senate, by an amendment upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, appropriated $5,000,000 to pay a bounty to growers of sugar at the rate of eight-tenths of a cent per pound, that is to those growers who had complied with the McKinley law by asking for a license and filing the proper bond and notice before the 1st of July, 1894. The bounty was repealed in August, 1894.

Upon a fight in the Democratic House which passed the Wilson bill—a House Democratic by almost two-thirds—that bounty of eight-tenths of a cent a pound to those growers of sugar was agreed to; the same House that had agreed to the Wilson bill assented to that appropriation of $5,000,000. I had the honor to be a member of that House. I opposed the appropriation at the time, stating that the bounty had been enacted in the McKinley law to foster and establish an industry; that that bounty had been repealed by the Wilson law; that subsequent to its repeal the eight-tenths of a cent a pound, if given at all, would be given as a gratuity. But the appropriation passed. The $5,000,000 was paid. It lacked a million dollars of paying the amount which was provided for in the sundry civil act. I thought then it was a gratuity. I think now it was a gratuity.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. It is as just to pay this million as it was to pay that five millions. I want to state the exact facts. But, in my judgment, from the standpoint of the best interests of the Government, from the standpoint of apt legislation to establish an industry, that object was defeated and the industry was killed by the Wilson bill, and that gratuity of eight-tenths of a cent per pound was given by a Democratic Congress. So far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. If the gentleman will yield now, I will ask him whether the Supreme Court in the the sugar-bounty cases held that it was a gratuity?

Mr. CANNON. The Supreme Court, in the sugar-bounty cases, passed upon what was before it. Congress having made the appropriation, the court held in substance that that was an appropriation by the legislative power within its authority, and sustained the claim, because Congress has the right to appropriate, if it wishes to, for a last year's bird's nest or a repealed sugar bounty.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Did they not put it upon the ground of contract?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

The question was taken on the motion to recede and concur; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 63.

So the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill, asked a further conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House accede to the request of the Senate for a further conference on the Indian appropriation bill. They have rejected the former conference report and asked for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to go back to amendment No. 96.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to turn back now. Let us go on to the end first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

(63) For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed while in the employ of the United States in the discharge of their duties on the 3d day of July, 1893, at the United States torpedo station on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, R. I., by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory, $15,000; of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following persons the sum of $5,000: Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan: Provided, That where the deceased left a widow and children the widow shall receive one-half and the children shall share alike.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and concur.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire any time?

Mr. BULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BULL. I want more time than that. Mr. Speaker, the substance of the amendment in the bill is recommended by the Committee on Claims of this House unanimously, and in the Senate it has been favorably recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I can in a few words state what the case is, and I can best state it by reading from the report made by the Committee on Claims of the House. I read:

The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, in his report for 1893, on page 14, says:

"On July 3, 1893, the gun-cotton factory (at the naval torpedo station) was destroyed by fire, a full statement of which will be found in the report of the board appointed to investigate the subject (see appendix). Three employees, Jeremiah Harrington, first-class laborer; Frank Loughlin, second-class pipe fitter, and Michael O'Reagan, first-class laborer, lost their lives while fighting this fire, and it is earnestly requested that Congress be asked to grant assistance to their families. The employees of this station receive no extra compensation for the undoubted risk to which they are subjected. The fact that so few lives have been lost since the establishment of this station is due to the care which has been constantly exercised."

On page 37 of same report the inspector of ordnance at the torpedo station says:

"The destruction of the gun-cotton factory by fire, attended by loss of life, on July 3, 1893, has been made the subject of special reports to the Department and the Bureau. While the direct testimony in regard to the cause is conflicting and unsatisfactory, the opinion of the board that it was due to a spark caused by a foreign substance in the picker is concurred in by me as being the most probable.

"The immediate cause of loss of life was the explosion of some 6 or 7 pounds of dry long-staple gun cotton, used for priming detonators, etc., which was loosely stowed in a powder tank, the lid of which was tightly screwed down to exclude moisture."

The special reports of the board appointed to investigate the circumstances attending the fire and explosion are attached to this report as an appendix.

To accompany the fourth indorsement, Commander George A. Converse, inspector of ordnance at the United States torpedo station, submits the following memorandum:

1. Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan lost their lives while endeavoring to extinguish the fire which resulted in the total destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station July 3, 1893.

2. Loughlin and Harrington were regularly employed in the building, knew the character of its contents and the danger to which they were exposed; while O'Reagan, a most faithful employee of the station for about eleven years, as enlisted man and per diem laborer, was one of the first to respond to the fire alarm and joined the other two men.

3. Loughlin, who had been acting as foreman of the gun-cotton factory, knew that the only dangerous material in the building (about 7 pounds of long-staple gun cotton) was stowed in a powder tank, which, on the first alarm of fire, should have been thrown into the sea; and doubtless being cognizant of the fact that such disposition of that material had not been made, took the nozzle of the fire hose, and, with Harrington and O'Reagan, attempted to combat the fire in its immediate vicinity, fully aware of the dangerous nature of the undertaking. While thus engaged in the performance of what they believed to be their duty the explosion occurred, resulting in the death of the three men.

4. From my personal observation of the conduct of these men at the time of the explosion, I can state that they acted with great bravery, and sacrificed their lives in an attempt to prevent the destruction of Government property.

5. I renew my recommendation that provision should be made for the widows, children, or legal representatives of these men, believing that all civilians actually employed in the manufacture of explosives or war material in Government factories should be entitled to the same consideration as persons who are required to use such material in the naval or military service.

6. I believe that it is customary for private companies engaged in the manufacture of explosive material to insure the lives of the employees for the benefit of the surviving relatives; and it seems but just that an equal provision should be made by the Government.

7. A copy of the letter referred to by Mr. Bull is transmitted herewith, and attention is invited to the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for the year 1893, which contains the recommendation that Congress be asked to render assistance to the families of these men.

GEORGE A. CONVERSE,
Commander, United States Navy, Inspector of Ordnance, Torpedo Station.

TORPEDO STATION,
Newport, R. I., February 7, 1896.

The letter mentioned in the last paragraph of the foregoing memorandum is as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 5, 1893.

SIR: Please convey to the families of those men who were killed at the fire at the gun-cotton factory the deep sympathy of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and his profound sorrow at their loss.

The Bureau will make every effort to secure for them some compensation for the dependent condition in which they have been placed.

Respectfully,

W. T. SAMPSON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Commander G. A. CONVERSE, U. S. N.,
Inspector of Ordnance, in charge
Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I.

During the reading of this report, Mr. BULL's time having expired, Mr. CANNON yielded him an additional minute.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. When did the Committee on Claims make a favorable report in reference to this case?

Mr. BULL. At the last session of this Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask why other cases of equal merit have not been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims. I have had four or five bills before that committee, and I can not get any favorable report upon them. I am against any discrimination. Let us have fair play.

Mr. BRUMM. Probably the gentleman's bills were not reported favorably because he failed to bring the proper evidence before the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; the evidence has been before the committee.

Mr. BRUMM. If you had had as strong testimony to support your claims as that presented in favor of this, they would have been favorably reported.

Mr. CANNON. In this case it is alleged that three men working for the Government lost their lives by an explosion. It is not alleged that there was any carelessness on the part of the Government officials. This amendment proposes to give $5,000 apiece to the families or legal representatives of these men. Sir, is this any higher case than one in which the loss of life has resulted from the casualties of war? And have we entered upon the policy of giving $5,000 to the widow or family of the soldier or sailor who loses his life in the war? This claim does not appear in the estimates. I have never heard of it before; the Committee on Appropriations has never heard of it. It never was considered by our committee. Whether it has merit or not, I know not, but I ask the House upon the case as it appears before us, to vote down the motion to concur.

The question being taken on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment of the Senate, it was rejected; there being—ayes 33, noes 74.

The Clerk read amendment No. 72, as follows:

And all the lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota, set apart and reserved by Executive orders and proclamations of February 22, 1897, are hereby restored to the public domain, and subject to settlement, occupancy, and entry under the land laws of the United States, the same as if said Executive orders and proclamations had not been made.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who, I understand, desires to make some motion.

Mr. LACEY. I make the motion which I send in writing to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use any portion of the foregoing amount in protecting and utilizing the forest reserves heretofore proclaimed by the President of the United States. And he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to make sales of timber on any forest reservation, now or hereafter proclaimed, for mining and domestic purposes, under such regulations as he may prescribe, and to make all needful rules and regulations in furtherance of the purposes of said reserves, for the management and protection of the same. And the provisions of section 1 of the act of February 20, 1896, entitled "An act to open forest reservations in the State of Colorado for the location of mining claims," are hereby made applicable to all forest reservations set apart by proclamation of the President, except the Yellowstone Forest reserve; that all public lands withdrawn from settlement and entry for such forest reservations which, upon due examination by personal inspection on the part of a competent person or persons, appointed or detailed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be found to be more valuable for agricultural purposes than for forest uses, shall be duly restored to entry under the general settlement laws. The restoration to entry of such withdrawn lands shall be made only after due publication or proclamation of restoration by the President, based upon recommendation by the Secretary of the Interior. Publication in such cases shall be made for not less than sixty days in two papers published nearest the lands in question, and which are of daily issue and of general circulation in the State or Territory wherein the said lands lie: Provided further, That prospectors and mineral claimants shall have free access to such forest reservations for the purpose of prospecting, locating, and developing the mineral resources thereof, and that title to mineral claims therein may be acquired in the same manner as upon other mineral lands of the United States.

"The President is hereby authorized at any time to modify any Executive order that has been or may hereafter be made establishing any forest reserve, and by such modification may reduce the area or change the boundary line of such reserve, or may vacate altogether any order creating such reserve."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] how much debate we are to have on this proposition?

Mr. CANNON. Quite enough to enable the House to understand it, and just as little as possible after we understand it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to know whether we have any rights. Are we entirely under the dominance of the chairman of this committee?

A MEMBER. We are under the control of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MONDELL. I rise to move a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CANNON. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it will be possible in five minutes to explain this long amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa have as much time as he may desire. This is a very important amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I do not ask any further time now.

Mr. PICKLER. This is a very important question to our State; and I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, should have such time as he may desire.

Mr. LACEY. I have five minutes. I hope the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, and it is brought here at a very late hour, so that it will be difficult, perhaps, to make the House understand it fully. On the 22d day of February the President of the United States, by an executive order issued in pursuance of the act of 1890, withdrew from the public domain, and set apart, thirteen additional reservations as forest reservations, amounting to over 21,000,000 acres, or a little over 35,000 square miles. This naturally and almost of necessity included some lands that ought not to have been embraced in the reservations. Instead of attempting to correct this matter by a provision under which the President might withdraw any portion of this land from the reservations, or to correct the alignments, the Senate has placed upon this sundry civil bill a provision repealing entirely the proclamation of February 22.

This proposition which I now offer includes—first, a provision authorizing the use of timber from the reservations for mining purposes, under the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior. Next, it includes a bill that has already passed this House, a bill that this body has already fully considered, and although it is somewhat long, covering perhaps a printed page of the paper which I hold in my hand, it is not new matter.

The House has considered it carefully and fully in the bill (H. R. 119), and that bill is now pending in the Senate. In order not to bring too much matter into the proposition, we have cut out of that bill the part which has been read. That is in regard to the method of withdrawing from settlement and entry such parts of the various reservations as may be better adapted for cultivation than for timber. But the pith of the whole amendment is in the last five lines, which I will again read, and I invite the attention of the gentlemen from the States where these reservations have been carved out to this provision:

The President is hereby authorized at any time to modify any Executive order that has been or may hereafter be made establishing any forest reserve, and by such modification may reduce the area or change the boundary lines of such reserve, or may vacate altogether any order creating such reserve.

Mr. PICKLER. The President has had that power always.

Mr. LACEY. He has never had it.

Mr. PICKLER. He has it now.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. The gentleman is mistaken. The act of 1891 gave him the power to create a reserve, but no power to restrict it or annul it, and there ought to be such authority vested in the President of the United States. A new President will enter upon his office the day after to-morrow, and there will be no question but what he will give a patient hearing to the gentlemen from the States in which these reservations are located. We should not destroy the reservations simply because some small portions of them, or even a considerable portion of them, have not been properly located. There is no provision of law now by which the reserves heretofore established by President Harrison can be realigned and the boundaries located, in order to leave out portions that ought not to have been included. This provision will give that authority.

In the State of California there was a town of 1,500 inhabitants included in one of the reservations by the order of President Harrison. That was a mistake. That town and the land surrounding it ought to be withdrawn from reservation, and this amendment will give full authority to make this change. This draft was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. It was the product of a conference between him and some members of the Committee on Public Lands, and will be acceptable, I think, so far as the Administration is concerned.

Now, I think this ought to be accepted by the gentlemen from the States in which the reservations are situated. It protects them fully. It incorporates in that bill the very provision of the bill (H. R. 119) for which they voted, which they supported, and with which they were satisfied. It adds thereto a provision by which the President of the United States may withdraw from the reservations such parts as are no longer needed or such parts as have been improperly included. This forest-reservation system is a highly beneficial one, and the policy has been entered upon and continued now for a number of years, and has been working well.

It is true that in some instances it has worked hardship. These reservations have included here and there the farms of settlers and cut them off from the opportunity of schools. In cases of that kind the provision that we insert in this proposed amendment will give an opportunity, in almost every instance, to segregate that part of the reserve and to realign it in such a way as to exclude the parts where the settlements exist.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask the chairman of the committee for time.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman some time before I get through. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to have an opportunity to offer an amendment, or a substitute rather for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], but I am informed by the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. CANNON] that I have no right, on this floor, at this time, to offer any substitute for the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PICKLER. Claim your right, and we will try and help you get it.

Mr. MONDELL. I propose to offer, as a substitute, the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree thereto.

In the latter part of the Fifty-first Congress, in the closing days of that Congress, there came over a conference report from the Senate which contained a provision that I am about to read. That was voted upon in this House without due deliberation, without any investigation of the subject, without any debate in this House or in the Senate. The provision is as follows:

"SEC. 24. That the President of the United States may from time to time set apart and reserve, in any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations; and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof."

While this matter was under discussion, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALL] said as follows:

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not wish to interpose any objection to the conference report. I desire to say that I know nothing about its provisions, but it disposes of a vast portion of the public domain of this country, as I gather from the reading. In my judgment the question of the disposition of the public lands is one of the most important that could be presented to the consideration of this body. I believe that those lands should be reserved for homes for the people who live upon and cultivate them. And while I can not say whether the provisions of this conference report conform to the interests of the people or not, I wish to clear myself of all responsibility in this matter by saying that I shall not willingly vote or consent, if I know it, to any proposition which prevents a single acre of the public domain from being set apart and reserved for homes for the people of the United States who shall live upon and cultivate them.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say to the Senator, in response to what he has said, that no bill has passed this body or any other legislative body that more thoroughly consecrates the public domain to actual settlers and home owners than does the bill in the report just read. That is the central idea of the bill.

And still, Mr. Speaker, the setting up of these forest reservations under the provision that I have just read withdraws very great areas of land from settlement under any of the public land laws of the United States, prevents a single stick of timber being cut on any acre of it, and empowers the President of the United States, as has been held in the case in California, to prevent the grazing of cattle upon these vast reservations.

It certainly never was intended when that act was passed that these areas should be segregated without investigation and without knowledge of the people living in the vicinity of those reservations. On the 22d day of last month 21,000,000 acres of land, 32,000 square miles of the public domain of the United States, was set up as forest reservations by the President of the United States, and not a single Representative on this floor or in the other coordinate branch of Congress had the slightest intimation, until they read the morning papers the morning thereafter, that there was any intent to set up these reservations and to reserve these lands.

Now, what are these reservations? Within my State, in the Big Horn Mountains, there is one reservation of 1,129,000 acres. I have traversed that reservation from end to end, time and time again, and there is not over 100,000 acres of that land that has timber of any sort, kind, or character upon it. On every side of that great reservation are rapidly growing settlements, in the two great mountain basins. Into those valleys the hardy pioneers have gone and built their homes, and the only source from which they can obtain firewood or timber to build their houses or improve their farms is upon this reservation.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Have you any objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]?

Mr. MONDELL. I have a very decided objection to it. They have reserved these vast areas there. They have taken the public domain. Let this question be thoroughly ventilated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that my time be extended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I can not yield further to the gentleman. I now yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. BARTLETT of New York].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I believe that all this opposition to the policy of forest reservation is inspired by the timber rings in our Western States and Territories. I am so informed by a gentlemen of the highest credibility. I believe, if this amendment be adopted and that the power be taken away from the President of the United States to make these forest reservations, that the whole sundry civil bill will be vetoed; and I for one hope that the Chief Magistrate of this nation will veto this sundry civil bill if this amendment is agreed to. What is it proposed to do? It is proposed to repeal a law which was passed on the 3d day of March, 1891, and which gives the President of the United States the power——

Mr. MONDELL. Will you yield to me for a question? The gentleman does not mean to represent——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York (continuing). To make these forest reservations of land partly covered by timber. Under that law President Harrison set apart reservations of some 18,000,000 acres; and now President Cleveland, in pursuance of the same policy, has set apart 21,000,000 acres. It is proposed that without any deliberation whatever, at the close of this session, to repeal the salutary law which was enacted six years ago. A commission under the National Academy of Science made a report to the Secretary of the Interior, and it is upon that report, made by these distinguished scientific gentlemen, that this proclamation was issued.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No; I can not yield.

Now, I call attention to the fact that President Harrison set apart 18,000,000 acres in five distinct and different proclamations; and I call attention to the fact that the president of the Arizona Timber and Lumber Company, who cut some 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 feet per annum, protested against the policy that has been adopted in the Senate, and he says that no man can object to the policy of forest reservation unless he is animated by greed of pocket or is controlled by his covetousness.

So I say that we ought not to repeal this act now. Bring it up in your new Congress. I believe that the vital force against us is the force of the men who control the timber rings and the lumber rings in the various States and Territories affected. I do not care to give their names, but their names are well known, and the gentlemen who support this largely—I do not mean the gentleman from Wyoming, but the gentlemen who support this amendment—are animated by a desire to please those lumber syndicates and are not prompted by any wish to please the settlers of their States.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that I am actuated in my statements here by any idea of helping any lumber syndicate?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I stated that I made no reflection upon the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. But you made the statement that those who were opposing the amendment offered here were actuated by such motives.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I say that in the main the opposition to this amendment arises from forces controlled by the lumber and timber rings.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. You say that because you do not know what you are talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I make no reflection on any of the distinguished gentlemen.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Well, you evidently do not understand the premises. You do not know anythng about it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The House can determine whether I am intelligent or not. Now, I propose to read what Mr. Riordan, the president of the Arizona Timber and Lumber Company, says. I suppose the gentleman will admit that he is a judge. He says:

The opposition to the policy of forest reservations can be explained only on two theories: either selfish and immediate pocket interests, which expect to profit from the unregulated use of the public domain, animates the opposition, or else ignorance as to the object and purport of the reservations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that the scientific gentlemen who have made this report are not satisfied with this Senate amendment. I was informed by one of the board to-day that it was not agreeable to them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I control this time. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I will detain the House but a moment. I desire first to reply to the statements just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT]. They have already been fittingly characterized by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE]. The gentleman from New York does not know what he is talking about. There is no proposition in this amendment, Mr. Speaker, to repeal the act of 1891.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. A practical repeal.

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir; but we ask this House to vacate and set aside the proclamations that were promulgated by the Executive on the 22d of February, based on misinformation like that upon which the gentleman from New York relies. Let this be first done, and then proper legislation may be enacted to protect forest reservations and the great interests involved. There is no pretense, Mr. Speaker, that there was any definite, careful, or painstaking examination made of the different reservations proposed to be laid out by the eminent commission that made the recommendation to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They never went over the ground.

Mr. GAMBLE. They never went over the ground. They stated with reference to the reservation laid out in the Black Hills in my State that there were only thirteen claims filed in that immense area of 1,000,000 acres, while the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that there are upward of 10,000 people residents of that region. There are towns, and villages, and mining camps, and great mining industries established in that immense and wonderful region, and by this act of the Executive, without one word of advice, consultation, or suggestion from any of the Representatives from the States that were interested in the region, these proclamations were promulgated. And what of definite knowledge as to the conditions there existing do we find on the part of the Secretary of the Interior in his recommendation made to the President for the creation of these reservations? He says:

The state of Professor Gibbs's health would not permit him to accompany the commission on its tour of inspection, but the other members began their work July 2, 1896, and visited most or all of the forest reservations and other public forests of the United States.

There is no pretense, Mr. Speaker, that this commission ever visited the Black Hills, and if they had simply gone there and looked out of the car windows of the railroad that runs through this entire reservation, they would have seen these evidences of settlement; they would have seen these great investments of capital, these extensive communities, these settlers upon their farms, with their vested interests; they would have seen the great mining camps and mills, in which are invested upward of two millions and a half dollars. We insist, Mr. Speaker, that those people have a right to be heard and that these proclamations ought to be vacated, and then proper legislation may be enacted.

This wanton disregard of the rights of the people within the limits of this particular reservation will disastrously affect the mining and other industries there established and will destroy the possibility of their proper and legitimate development. Last year in the Black Hills proper the output of gold alone aggregated nearly $9,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN].

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask the gentleman to allow me five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. We have a great many other amendments to dispose of.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask it for this reason: Five million acres of land in my State have been set apart without any notice, and——

Mr. CANNON. I yield. Go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN. I defy the gentleman to name any timber ring that is in any way back of the effort which is being put forth by our people to prevent the settlers from being deprived of the right to take timber for their domestic uses and for the purpose of fencing their lands, and to enable miners to run their tunnels and to prop up their stopes. If the gentleman can do it, I want him to rise and say so. Mr. Speaker, I say it is not a fact. This is a matter which concerns every man who has taken his future into his own hands and gone into those States and tried to make a home for himself and his family. Take my own State. There are three res rvations——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman appeals to me to rise——

Mr. HARTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman intend to say that there is no lumber or timber rings in the West?

Mr. HARTMAN. I say that in the States referred to in this amendment, the States affected by this order, there are no timber rings concerned at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say there is no timber syndicate in any one of those States?

Mr. HARTMAN. I have answered your question fairly and squarely. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that upon the successful knocking out of this proclamation depend great mining industries in the city of Butte, in the city of Anaconda—mining industries which produced 212,000,000 pounds of copper last year. On one mining property there was spent over $10,000,000 in wages. This proposition of the President proposes to make it impossible for that great enterprise to be kept up. The proclamation was issued with the same lack of knowledge on the part of the President of the United States that is now possessed by the distinguished gentleman from New York who rises here as his special defender.

Mr. Speaker, one word further, and I am through—a word with reference to the manner in which this has been done. There has been no examination made at all. The matters provided for by the Commissioner of the General Land Office—the ordinary methods of investigation were not followed, the public notices which were required to be given were none of them given—not in a single case. So that we are in this position: If this House passes the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, it affords no relief whatever.

I hope the House will vote down that amendment, and then I hope my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will be recognized to make a motion to recede from our disagreement and concur in the amendment of the Senate. If there is anybody here who feels at all friendly to our side of this question, I do not want a single vote to be cast in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. I do not want to put into the hands of the Secretary of the Interior the power to go to work and repeat the farcical examination which was alleged to have been made by these alleged scientific gentlemen who never came within two or three hundred miles of some of the reservations.

They went there, put up at some of our fine hotels, took their maps and with their pencils marked out, as has been done [exhibiting a map], one-eighteenth of the entire State, without consulting a single State officer or a single Representative or Senator here in Washington. Is the House ready to indorse that? [Cries of "No!" No!"] I do not believe you will; and I thank the House for this expression of its good will.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to give me one minute to read a telegram from some of my constituents in the Black Hills country, relating to this question.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I yield the gentleman half a minute.

Mr. PICKLER. I must say to the gentleman that the Senate took two hours to discuss this question. The telegram that I am about to read is from the representative of one of the great mining interests in the Black Hills:

President Cleveland's executive orders issued Monday, reserving nearly a million acres of land in the Black Hills of South Dakota for a forestry reservation will ruin every industry here. Do all possible to have the order suspended. If you can not get it revoked until the people here can be heard, please send me a copy of the order describing the location of the lands reserved.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will yield me five minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House upon this matter, because, in my judgment, it is a vital amendment. Its adoption means the nonenactment of this sundry civil bill at this session of Congress.

A MEMBER. Well, let her go.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says, "Let her go."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Such an outrage as this upon the States whose rights are involved should not be permitted by this House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I crave the judgment of the House—not its sound. What are the facts of this case? A week or two ago the President of the United States, acting in pursuance of law, issued a proclamation withdrawing 20,000,000 acres of land from the market, calling it a forest reservation. That is the condition now; there is no doubt about it.

Gentlemen from Montana and elsewhere object. Now, I am not here to find fault with their objection; I am not here to criticise it; I am not here to use hard words; but the natural way to repeal this Executive order is by legislation—not upon an appropriation bill. It could not go an appropriation bill under the rules of the House. It could not go on an appropriation bill under the rules of the Senate. Nevertheless it comes here in the shape of a Senate amendment.

What does it do? It absolutely repeals the Executive order. Grover Cleveland made the Executive order. If that Executive order is repealed, it must be done by the approval of the President of the United States. It was made two weeks ago.

Now, what does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] propose to do? The gentleman from Iowa proposes in lieu of the absolute repeal of this Executive order, to provide, first, that the President of the United States shall have power to repeal this Executive order, in whole or in part. The President never dies. One person is President to-day, another person perchance is President next week. Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] if adopted, and if that was the only provision in it, renders it possible for the President of the United States to repeal this Executive order entirely, or to modify it in whole or in part.

Now, granting, for the sake of the argument, that gentlemen from the State of South Dakota and gentlemen from other States are aggrieved, are they not better off under the amendment than they are now?

Mr. LACEY. Without any law.

Mr. CANNON. Without any law. Now, this is first. What next does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], by his amendment, propose to do? He proposes to throw open these reservations, made by Executive order, for mineral-land entry. They are not open now. If his amendment is adopted and enacted into law, they will be open for both mineral-land entry and agricultural-land entry.

Mr. LACEY. Not for agricultural-land entry; but they can use the timber for agricultural purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I was mistaken. They will be open for mineral-land entry. What else does the amendment do? It puts it in the power of the Secretary of the Interior, aye, it makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, whether this provision of this Executive order is made or not, to sell the Government timber to the miner, to the settler, and to the farmer. Am I correct about that?

Mr. LACEY. Under exactly the same terms as the House has already imposed by the bill H. R. 119.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. LACEY. I did not attempt to write anything new for the House, but simply copied that which the House on due deliberation, upon motion of the Committee on the Public Lands, after careful consideration, had already, as far as it was in the power of the House, enacted into law.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will do. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. LACEY] is familiar with these questions. I was not so familiar with them. When this Senate amendment came to the House, not being familiar with it, but knowing the ability, the knowledge, the honesty, and the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, I at once went to him and said "I wish you would take charge of this. It is on my bill, out of order. If it remains on my bill, an absolute repeal of an Executive order that was made two weeks ago, I believe that my bill, carrying $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors, and for every branch of the public service, will be lost."

The gentleman from Iowa considered the matter. He has moved his amendment. Now the gentleman from Montana and the gentlemen from the Dakotas oppose this amendment. Does it not place them in better shape than they are in now? There is no doubt about that.

But the gentlemen from these States, without regard to the welfare of this bill, seek to fasten, out of order, this provision upon a great money bill which runs to every corner of the Republic, and in its expenditures to every ocean upon the earth, and to hold it up by the throat, and say that that Executive order, made by the President, shall be repealed with the consent of the President in less than two weeks after it has been made, or that this bill shall not be enacted into law.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has the reasonable side of this case. These gentlemen are placed in a much better position. I would go far to accommodate my friends from the West. I have every sympathy with them, and the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is a vast improvement upon the present condition.

I ask the House to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, and let us go on with the other amendments upon this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. I hope I may have five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will not ask that.

Mr. LOUD. I shall not attempt to impede the business of the House; but I believe the matter contained in this amendment is of great importance to the people of my State.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my friend, I will say I understand I think it is the temper of the House to adopt the amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, for three days I stood in this House last Congress on a measure of this kind.

Mr. BRUMM. Regular order.

Mr. LOUD. By going slowly we will get along a good deal faster. If the gentleman says he will except the State of California, I have no objection.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman from California will allow me, I suggest as to this part of the bill, which authorized the sale of timber for domestic and mining uses, he desires to amend it so that they can not do that in California. I have no objection to that. The other States where they do not want to sell will have no objection to Califofnia having that exception made.

Mr. CANNON. We can fix that in conference, I will say to my friend.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman agree to fix that? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for a vote. Gentlemen have had two minutes to our one; and we must finish this bill.

The question was taken; and the amendment of Mr. LACEY was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 98:
For improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement, strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five;" so as to read "$375,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill is recognized.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. For what purpose?

Mr. HOOKER. I want to ask a question and make a suggestion about several amendments here.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. I intended to move that the House nonconcur in all of these amendments concerning rivers and harbors.

Mr. CANNON. Notice has been given as to various ones of these amendments, that gentlemen would move to concur, or recede from the disagreement, which takes precedence over my motion in those cases where such notice was given.

Mr. HOOKER. I will suggest that amendments numbered from 98 down to 130 involve substantially the same thing.

Mr. EVANS. Except amendment 127.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have given notice concerning——

Mr. HOOKER. My statement will not interfere with yours in the slightest. These are simply for appropriations where projects are put upon continuous contracts, and the amounts inserted in the bill in the House are reduced in the Senate for no other purpose whatever, and I ask unanimous consent that a vote may be taken on the twenty-two together. They are 98, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 116, 118, 120, 123, 124, 125, 126, 129, and 130.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that many of those amendments are closed up already. And let me say to my friend, to save trouble about this matter, the horizontal cut upon the river and harbor items amounting to $2,000,000 is not of very great importance, except if the Senate amendments are concurred in that there will be a deficiency to be provided for next winter. But so far as the public service is concerned, with the power to contract, the money will be paid in the meantime.

My trouble and that of the House conferees very largely is not upon those items where the amount of the appropriation was reduced, but the principal trouble that the House conferees have is the legislation touching rivers and harbors upon this bill; in other words, the provisions which make this a river and harbor bill as well as a sundry civil bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman permit just a question?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I do not feel that we ought to do that, but we ought to submit it to the House for its consideration and action.

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman will permit me a question. The amendments I have suggested do not involve any legislation.

Mr. CANNON. I beg your pardon; some of them do.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They concur in some.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to nonconcur in such of the amendments as may reduce the appropriations made by the House.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman had been here during the whole evening, he would see at once that we would make better headway by going on as we have been.

Mr. HOOKER. I was hastening by asking a vote upon twenty-two propositions at once.

Mr. CANNON. That can not be done. Separate votes have been demanded on many of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 94, amendment 98:
"Strike out 'five hundred thousand' and insert 'three hundred and seventy-five thousand;' so as to read '$375,000.'"

Mr. CATCHINGS. Is not a separate vote asked?

Mr. CANNON. Vote.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I desire to state to my friend from Illinois that we can expedite the matter if the motion of the gentleman from New York is entertained. He makes the motion to nonconcur in all of these amendments where the Senate reduces the amount. You can embrace them all in one motion.

Mr. CANNON. We can do it one by one.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Very well.

Mr. CANNON. My motion is that the House insist on its disagreement.

Mr. SAYERS. The proper motion is that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing improvement of channel connecting the waters of the Great Lakes between Chicago, Duluth, and Buffalo, (99) including necessary observations and investigations in connection with the preservation of such channel depth, $1,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, that amendment is not even in conference.

Mr. SAYERS. The report of the conference committee embraced that item as settled.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing improvement, (100) $400,000—strike out "four" before "hundred," and insert "three;" making the appropriation $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving channel in Gowanus Bay, New York: For improving Bay Ridge Channel, the triangular area between Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, and Red Hook and Buttermilk channels in the harbor of New York, N. Y.: Continuing improvement (101), $400,000.

Strike out "four," before "hundred," and insert "three," making the appropriation $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, nobody has asked for separate votes on the amendments that are now being read.

Mr. HOOKER. I asked unanimous consent a while ago to take the vote on 22 of them together.

Mr. TOWNE. Separate votes were asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] made the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Savannah, Ga.: For continuing improvement (102) $400,000.

Strike out "four" and insert "three;" making the appropriation $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: For continuing improvement (103) $400,000 (104).

Strike out "four" and insert "three," so as to make the appropriation $300,000. After "dollars" add "to be immediately available."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent as to amendments numbered 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, that the House further insist upon its disagreement with the Senate.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on amendment 109, as it relates to a matter with which I have some acquaintance.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will except 109.

The Clerk read the other amendments enumerated by Mr. CANNON, as follows:

Amendment 105, reducing appropriation for harbor of Portland, Me., from $400,000 to $300,000.

Amendment 106, harbor at Rockland, Me., reducing appropriation from $400,000 to $300,000.

Amendment 107, harbor at Buffalo, N. Y., reducing appropriation from $550,000 to $412,500.

Amendment 108, harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay, reducing appropriation from $450,668 to $338,000.

Amendment 110, Sabine Pass, Texas, reducing appropriation from $400,000 to $300,000.

Amendment 111, harbor at Cleveland, Ohio, reducing appropriation from $400,000 to $300,000.

The motion of Mr. CANNON that the House further insist on its disagreement with these Senate amendments was adopted.

Amendment numbered 109 was read, as follows:

Improving Winyaw Bay, South Carolina: For continuing improvement of harbor at Winyaw Bay, $400,000. Amend by striking out "four" and inserting "three," making the appropriation $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what motion does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON] desire to submit?

Mr. PEARSON. That we concur in the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. PEARSON. I do.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PEARSON. It will take not more than three minutes for me to say what I want to say.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman that time.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, when I last asked the gentleman in charge of this bill to be permitted to take the floor, it was for the purpose of moving an amendment in relation to the question of the sugar bounty, which was then before this body, to the effect "that the appropriation be made available only after the expiration of a period of thirty consecutive days during which the revenues of this Government shall be equal to its daily expenditure," and I am here to say to the distinguished chairman in charge of this bill and to the House that the reason I select this item of Winyaw is that I know the spot, I know the river, and I know that the appropriation is not needed; and I know further—but I would not like to make any personal remarks in this connection—I do know, however, that the receipts there are only $300 a year, and are you not content with $300,000?

Do you insist upon $400,000 for a place that brings in only $300 a year? Is that the economy that is to characterize this Administration, or rather this Republican House? I make this point not because the locality is South Carolina, or because it is on this river, but because of the unworthiness of the appropriation, and I believe that there are other unworthy items in the bill, particularly one on the far Northwestern coast, where $400,000 is appropriated for a harbor at a place where they will have to dig a hole in the sand and call it a harbor and pour in $400,000, a place where there is no town, no custom-house, not a dollar of revenue collected, and yet it is proposed to put in $400,000, and at a time when we have not the money.

A MEMBER. What place is that?

Mr. PEARSON. It is a place called Grays Harbor, and it is only one of thirty or forty of such items.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, stick to your point on this amendment.

Mr. PEARSON. I will stick to this, but I say it is only one of many unworthy items. In saying this I am inspired by no spirit of sectionalism, but simply by a knowledge of geography and a knowledge of the receipts and expenditures of this Government at this point and a desire to protect the public Treasury in its present distress.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. How near do you live to the place?

Mr. PEARSON. I was born on the river that empties into this bay.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman differs entirely with the report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS].

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from South Carolina, more immediately interested in this, I desire to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The gentleman from North Carolina does not understand the situation at all, if we are to judge by his remarks. Winyaw Bay is the outlet of all the rivers practically in the State of South Carolina. Those rivers carry a constant and valuable traffic, as is fully set forth in the reports of the Chief of Engineers and the local engineers in charge of the work there.

This improvement is a matter of so much importance that delegations have been repeatedly sent here from the State of South Carolina on this subject. It is a matter of so much moment that the legislature of South Carolina, on more than one occasion, has passed resolutions expressly insisting that Congress should deal liberally with this improvement. It is within a very few miles of Charleston. The customs receipts cut no figure in the matter at all, because practically all the business goes to Charleston and figures in the receipts of that place.

I repeat that the State of South Carolina is filled with navigable streams, every one of which to-day is being made use of for the purposes of commerce; that the aggregate commerce upon those streams is simply enormous; that they all—practically without an exception—empty into Winyaw Bay. There is not a more worthy project in this bill than the one under discussion, and the gentleman from North Carolina simply does not know what he is talking about when he undertakes to denounce this as an unworthy project.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment of the Senate, there were—ayes 24, noes 78.

Mr. PEARSON. I make the point of no quorum. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I have not yielded my rights. If we must squander this money, let us do it in daylight.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded time to my friend to discuss this question. I want to say to him that we are now within less than thirty-six hours of the expiration of this Congress. The present proposition is simply the sending of this matter to a conference. It is not a question of legislation. That was determined a year ago. I appeal to my friend not to make the point of no quorum. I want to get this bill into conference.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. PEARSON. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that at the beginning of the consideration of this bill I demanded a second on the motion which was made to suspend the rules. I had the right to control the time, and the men who stood with me had the right to be heard in opposition to the measure. That right—by accident, I ought to say, in justice to the Speaker—was denied me. It was not his fault; it was simply a mistake of fact.

Now, I know that there are men enough on this floor to defeat these unworthy measures if we have a fair hearing. I knew it on that day; I know it this night. And I know the Treasury is not in a condition to stand the expenditure for these unworthy objects. In justice to the people whom I represent, in justice to the Federal Treasury, and in accordance with the oath which I have taken in front of the Speaker's chair, I shall stay here all night, if necessary, to oppose such legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman demand a quorum?

Mr. PEARSON. I demand a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. "Not thou, but the rule railest at me." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this item.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no use in doing that.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done unless the point of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. PEARSON. I am not an obstinate man by nature; and I have no disposition to antagonize the gentleman from Illinois. I feel that I have not been treated as I should have been in this discussion; and I know there are men enough on this floor when we have a full House to defeat such legislation as this.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to pass over this item until we have finished the bill and then return to it. Will that be satisfactory to the gentlemen from North Carolina?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from North Carolina withdraws the point of no quorum, that can be done; otherwise it can not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not see what good that will accomplish.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum, we can then, by unanimous consent, pass over this amendment until we complete the rest of the bill, when we can return to it.

Mr. PEARSON. I decline to yield unanimous consent, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; then let us get a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count the House.

Mr. PEARSON (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I have emphasized my opposition to this bill; I find that my opposition must be unavailing, and I withdraw the point of no quorum. I am not willing to tax the patience and the physical strength of the members now present.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is withdrawn. Th noes have it, and the House insists upon its disagreement. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(112) The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made a survey and estimate of cost of deepening and widening the straight channel in Maumee River and Bay, with a view to obtaining and permanently securing a channel of a uniform width of 400 feet and 20 feet deep at low water, the cost of said survey to be paid out of money already appropriated for the improvement of said channel.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, in order to save time, I will say that this amount is payable from the appropriation upon its face. The reason that your conferees did not agree to this was that it is legislation, and belongs on a river and harbor bill. This is the sundry civil appropriation bill, and we did not feel at liberty to recommend to the House to make it in whole or in part a river and harbor bill. Having made that statement, I know of no objection to the amendment upon its merits, and if the gentleman moves to recede, I am willing to allow the vote to be taken.

The motion of Mr. SOUTHARD to recede and concur was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

(113) In line 20, page 90, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert the words "three hundred and seventy-five."

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: For continuing improvement under present limit, $200,000. And the provision of the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, relating to improving harbor at Oakland, Cal., is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: Continuing improvement under existing project, $20,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute work on said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $666,000: Provided further, That in making such contract or contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount hereby authorized to be expended."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a minute. I move that the House recede from this disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment. I simply wish a few minutes time in which to make an explanation.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want five minutes or three minutes?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Five minutes, and I will include the kindred measures.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish the House would give me its attention for a moment. This matter is similar to two other amendments, numbered 121 and 122. The Oakland Harbor matter, the Ohio River dams, and the Kentucky River are the three similar items.

They were all placed in the last river and harbor bill; but the Chief of Engineers, through a mistaken estimate as to the cost of these projects, did not give the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a sufficient limit of cost, and the limit fixed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was made too low. So, when the Secretary of War came to let the contracts, as he was authorized to do, he found that he could not let contracts for the completion of the work on these three items inside the limit.

Therefore the matter was referred to the Judge-Advocate-General, who decided that, inasmuch as the limit was not sufficient to complete the work, the Secretary of War had no business to let the contracts at all. So they were not embraced in the sundry civil bill that was passed through the House. The Senate put them on in the shape of amendments, and cured the difficulty by providing that the amount should be what would be necessary to prosecute the work.

The amendment does not raise the limit in either case, and the items are before the House simply on the Senate amendment, with the technical objection cured by the Senate amendments. I therefore hope that the House will concur in the Senate amendments, as it puts them on the same footing with all the other items in the river and harbor bill under what is known as the contract system.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman what was the estimate for the improvement provided for the item in amendment numbered 121?

Mr. WILLIAM A STONE. Item 121 is the four dams in the Ohio River.

Mr. HEPBURN. What was the original estimate?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The original estimate, which has not been raised at all, was a limit of $2,020,000, and that embraced four dams, Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5. Now, the Senate has eliminated dam No. 5. They have not raised the limit at all, but they have appropriated the amount which the Secretary of War estimates is necessary.

Mr. HEPBURN. Nearly the amount for the four that was estimated for the five.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, that was clearly a mistake of the Secretary of War. He got his estimate too low.

Mr. HEPBURN. But that was a mistake that induced the committee of the House to consent to go into this enterprise.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What committee, the River and Harbor Committee?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes. Well, they want to improve river Dam No. 6; Dam No. 1 has been completed long ago. This simply corrects a mistake made by the Chief of Engineers. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from California desire a minute?

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, the last river and harbor bill had a provision for the completion of the work on Oakland Harbor, upon a plan that was devised years ago, and which fixed the limit of cost at $666,000. After the river and harbor bill had been passed, and Congress had adjourned, a new engineer was put in charge of this work. He revised the figures of his predecessor and raised the estimate by several hundred thousand dollars. Now, a responsible contractor, one who has had vast experience in this kind of work, has offered to do this work, to complete the improvements upon the original plan, for the amount fixed in the river and harbor bill itself.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a word, and I am ready to vote. At Oakland, the provision in the river and harbor bill that passed a year ago was to complete the work according to the plans of the engineer and within a limit of cost of $686,000. Now it seems that to complete it according to the engineer's estimate referred to it will cost $1,062,000.

Mr. HILBORN. I said we had an offer to complete it for the original estimate.

Mr. CANNON. The Senate comes in and proposes to amend this provision of the river and harbor bill by striking out the word "complete," and putting in the word "continuing," so that by this legislation the amount of money carried by this bill can be devoted to that improvement.

Now, then, a word as to the four dams on the Ohio River. They are in the same fix exactly. By the legislation on the river and harbor bill, that work can not be done by $1,000,000, according to the plans described in the river and harbor bill.

The same is true as to the Kentucky River. It will cost a million of dollars more than the limit fixed in the river and harbor bill passed a year ago.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. Now, by the Senate amendment as to Oakland, Cal., as to the four dams on the Ohio River, and as to the Kentucky River, they come in with legislation to expend this money in "continuing," changing the law of the river and harbor act and making a river and harbor act of this bill.

Now, when I state that, I hope that the House is in possession of the fact, and it is for the House to say whether this bill, reported by the Committee on Appropriations, is to not only be an appropriation bill in pursuance of existing law, but is also to be a river and harbor bill that legislates for the improvements of rivers and harbors. I am ready for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask for a stand-up vote, and then I am done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 14.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask that the other two be considered in the same way. They are exactly the same as this.

Mr. CANNON. Read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(115) The officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey detailed to serve on the Board to locate a deep-water harbor for commerce and of refuge at Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, California, or at San Pedro, in said State, which Board was created by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, United States Statutes at Large, page 213, shall receive from the appropriation in said act provided with relation to said harbor, in addition to his mileage provided for in section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, and notwithstanding its provisions, such a per diem allowance for subsistence as the Secretary of War may deem proper.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any motion there?

Mr. SAYERS. This amendment seems to be for the payment of an officer detailed upon a board of survey.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 116: Strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read "$300,000."

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that we further insist upon disagreement on this amendment and send it to conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(117) That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend from existing appropriation "For dredging Salmon Bay and improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound, at Salmon Bay, with Lakes Union and Washington, by enlarging the said waterway into a ship canal, with the necessary locks and appliances in connection therewith" made by the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," received by the President August 7, 1894, the sum of $10,000 in making a definite survey and location of said improvement from the head of Salmon Bay to termination on Smiths Cove and connect with former survey from Lake Washington to head of Salmon Bay, and in preparing a cadastral map, showing each piece of property required to be deeded to the United States or from which a release is required, with its metes and bounds.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Mississippi think that this amendment ought to be concurred in?

Mr. CATCHINGS. No, sir; I do not. I think it ought to be nonconcurred in.

Mr. CANNON. Then I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 118:
Strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read "$300,000."

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be ordered that the House further insist upon its disagreement to this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Great Kanawha River, W. Va.: Completing improvement, $273,000.

Mr. HULING. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The House has voted so frequently I will say nothing about it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 120 was read, reducing the appropriation for improving the upper Monongahela River from $400,000 to $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment No. 121 was read, as follows:

(121) Improving the Ohio River: For continuing construction of Dams Nos. 2, 3, and 4, between Davis Island dam and Dam No. 6, $400,000; and the provision in the river and harbor appropriation act of June 3, 1896, authorizing contracts to be made for improving Ohio River by the construction of Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the whole or any part of the material and work as may be necessary to prosecute work on said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,999,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That in making such contract or contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment No. 122 was read as follows:

(122) Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: For completing Locks and Dams Nos. 7 and 8, $200,000; and the provision of the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, relating to improving Kentucky River, Kentucky, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute work on said improvement in accordance with the present project for same, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,349,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

"Provided, That of the amount authorized to be expended, $93,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in addition to the $50,000 herein appropriated in continuing construction and completion of Lock and Dam No. 7, by contract or otherwise, and said $93,000 shall be immediately available: Provided further, That in making such contract or contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which these amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, with reference to amendments 123, 124, 125, and 126, I ask unanimous consent that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Amendment numbered 127 was read, as follows:

Add to the item for improving falls of Ohio River, at Louisville, Ky., the following: Provided, That the Secretary of War may carry to completion the present project of improving the falls of the Ohio River and Indiana Chute Falls, Ohio River, by contract, as provided in the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," which became a law June 3, 1896; or the necessary materials may be purchased, and the work done otherwise than by contract, in his discretion, if more economical and advantageous to the United States.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and concur in the same.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the only possible objection to this provision is that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill. It does not increase the amount. The engineers want it, and say that in the condition of that work they ought to have the discretion to do at least a part of the work by days' work, because it is not practicable to do it entirely by contract. The only reason that the conferees disagreed to the amendment was that they wanted the House to assume the responsibility of putting legislation upon this bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Why is it that the limit of the total cost is not included here?

Mr. EVANS. It is limited in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CANNON. In amendment 126 the gentleman will find that it is limited.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it contemplated, then, that this other method of doing the work shall not in any event increase the cost?

Mr. CANNON. It will not increase it.

Mr. EVANS. It will diminish it.

The motion of Mr. EVANS to recede and concur in the Senate amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the last motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

Amendment numbered 128 was read, as follows:

Add to the item for improving Chicago River, Illinois, the following:

"In pursuance of the provisions of 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and improvement of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1896; and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the said provisions of said act relating to the improvement of said Chicago River, that all of the work in the improvement of said river which was recommended or suggested to be done in the interest of commerce by Capt. William L. Marshall, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, in his report of August 9, 1893, may be done: Provided, That the total cost of such improvement or work shall not exceed the limit provided for in said act."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER].

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and concur in the same. Mr. Speaker, I want to say only a few words on this subject. It is not sought by this amendment to make an appropriation.

In the last session of Congress an appropriation of $50,000 was made for the improvement of the Chicago River, and the Secretary of War was authorized to place that river under the contract system and expend up to $700,000 for necessary improvements, or improvements recommended by the engineers stationed at Chicago. By this amendment we seek only to construe the law passed at the last session, so that we may be able to go on and put our river under contract and complete the work or exhaust the $700,000 appropriated at the last session.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield a minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has objected seriously to certain of these amendments because they apparently indicate an effort of the Senate to introduce legislation that belongs to a river and harbor bill alone. He has objected to the sundry civil bill being transformed into a river and harbor bill. But there is another objection to the pending amendment, which the gentleman has entirely passed over. Here is another assumption. This amendment, it appears, proposes to construe a law passed heretofore, so that it is a usurpation of a function of the Supreme Court. This amendment undertakes what is the proper construction of a law passed at some previous period. I simply want to call attention to this additional objection to the amendment.

He objected to the sundry civil bill becoming a river and harbor bill. Now, there is another objection to this clause that the gentleman has entirely passed over. Here is the assumption of another function. This section proposes to construe a law—a usurpation of the function of the Supreme Court. We find here an attempt to define the proper construction of a law passed at some previous period. I simply call attention to this as another objection to this section.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this provision not only construes a law; it creates one. The river and harbor act passed June 3, 1896, was clear enough. It made provision "for improving the Chicago River, in Illinois, from its mouth to the stock yards on the South Branch and to Belmont avenue on the North Branch, as far as may be permitted by existing docks and wharves."

That provision was distinct enough—"as far as may be permitted by existing docks and wharves." It contemplated only the work of dredging. It is perfectly clear that that is what was intended to be expressed in the law. An estimate has been recently made by the local engineer at Chicago, showing that there are four items of expense to carry out the improvements contemplated in this bill—$280,000 for dredging, $100,000 for widening, $176,000 for building docks, $144,000 for right of way.

Now, the past is secure so far as this improvement is concerned. It is provided that dredging shall be done, though I think it is a mistake to provide even that in this location. Nearly every harbor on the Great Lakes is of a certain type. There is a creek or river, usually a narrow one, like the Chicago River and its branches, emptying into the lake. The Government constructs a pier from the mouth of the river out into the lake far enough to reach navigable water. But every improvement on the river or creek inside of that pier is made at the expense of the municipality or of private parties. In the city of Buffalo, in the city of Cleveland, in the city of Milwaukee, in all these great ports on the lakes, every dollar of the expense inside of the Government pier is paid by the municipality or by private parties.

Now, concede that there should be such degree of favor shown to Chicago that dredging be done inside of that pier, it is wrong to pay also for right of way and to rebuild docks that are made by deepening. The Government engineer expresses himself clearly on this subject in his last report:

> It has been customary for the United States to maintain the channel between the piers and docks of the entrance to Chicago River by dredging to such width and depth as required by vessels of the dimensions navigating Chicago River.
> This dredging has been restricted to that part of the channel lying seaward of the Rush Street Bridge. The city of Chicago uses this river as an outfall for its sewage, and also annually dumps large volumes of slush and street cleanings into the channel through the operations of its street-cleaning department.

There is not a man in this House more friendly to river and harbor improvements than I, but we should carefully draw a line between that which should be performed by the General Government and that which should be performed by private parties and municipalities. To illustrate: In the common council of Buffalo I am informed that a few days ago a resolution was introduced reciting the terms of this bill, and directing that an investigation should be made, with the view to secure an appropriation for improving Buffalo Creek, which is the same kind of a stream as Chicago River, but has always been improved by the city. I do not wish to see this bill pass without the House understanding the dangerous precedent which it will establish—that of doing at the expense of the Government a work which should be done by others.

More than that, the Government has no business inside of the Chicago River. It is very narrow, spanned by bridges every 300 or 400 feet, and crossed by tunnels which limit the depth. There is a city ordinance, the validity of which was tested in the Supreme Court of the United States, by which the city of Chicago closes those bridges for an hour in the morning and an hour in the evening. The Supreme Court decided that it was a matter exclusively for the city of Chicago to determine—that until the General Government interfered and took control of that river, not merely improved it, but took absolute control and directed what should be done with those bridges, the city of Chicago had the exclusive control of them. Fancy where we would be if the General Government should endeavor to buy the right of way and cut off corners and straighten the river and then build docks to be used by private parties. It is a matter of private enterprise, I submit, that the city of Chicago should take care of. [Applause.]

I am willing to concede in justice that Chicago is a great port, which has not received large appropriations from the Government; but I submit that we ought not to establish this precedent; that we ought not to extend this favor to one locality which will operate as a discrimination against other localities and as a dangerous precedent everywhere.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to my colleague [Mr. REEVES] for five minutes.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, although my colleague on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BURTON of Ohio] and I have been unable to agree on this matter, I accord to him perfect fairness and honesty in what he does. At the same time I must insist that he is in error both in principle and in fact. The chief objection made by the gentleman to this proposition is that the work is to be done in the Chicago River, inside of the Government piers. He claims that because the work is thus inside of those piers it is not in the interest of the commerce of the country at large, and therefore must be in the interest of the city alone, and that the expense should be borne by it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. My colleague on the committee, I know, does not wish to misstate my position. I do not claim that this improvement is not in the interest of commerce, as of course it is. The only question is as to the agency which should do the work, and the parties who should pay for it.

Mr. REEVES. My friend shifts his position from what it has been heretofore on this question.

I want to make a suggestion to the House, which I ask may be heard by everyone here. There are grain elevators built on this river with a capacity of 37,000,000 bushels, every bushel of which is shipped in from the States of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and that region of country, simply to be transferred and carried to the seaboard. I want to know if that is not the commerce of the country, rather than any local commerce or anything of a local character. That is only one item of many of a kindred kind.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the whole trouble about this Chicago River lies in this: Some 12 or 15 miles from Chicago down the lake is another river called the Calumet. Some of the property owners about that stream want to drive the harbor of Chicago down there, and a constant alarm has been kept up, and all manner of agitation and rumors have been spread through the House and elsewhere against the improvement of the Chicago River, in the interest of the property owners on the Calumet River. The truth ought to be told plainly. I want to say to the House that if you drive the commerce of that great city away from the Chicago River, you will incur an expense of more than $100,000,000 to change the railroad terminals and the improvements in the interest of commerce that have been made on the Chicago River.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] says that we are establishing a precedent. In that he is mistaken. The precedents have long since been established for the doing of work for the Government inside of the Government piers. He will find upon examination that Newtown Creek in Brooklyn is a parallel case to that of the Chicago River.

Mr. BENNETT. No, it is not.

Mr. REEVES. I beg your pardon, but it is. That is a stream on which millions of tons of commerce pass, and it is located within the city of Brooklyn. Do not let me be misunderstood, and I hope the gentleman here, who acts a little nervous about this, will not understand that I am by any means condemning the improvement of Newtown Creek, for I believe it to be a valuable and proper one. I supported it in the committee and in the House, and it is in this bill which we are now passing.

My friend will also find that Michigan City, on Lake Michigan, is a kindred improvement, exactly parallel. He will also find that between Menominee and Marinette the Menominee River is improved for a distance of 2 miles, dredging to a depth of 16 feet between these two towns, and the case is parallel to that of the improvement in the Chicago River.

The gentleman will also find, upon examination of volume 28 of the Statutes at Large, page 351, an item for the improvement of the Warrior and Tombigbee rivers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I trust the time of the gentleman will either be extended, so that he may answer some questions which I wish to propound to him, or that I may have a little further time.

Mr. BENNETT. And I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to explain the case that I talked to him about.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman refers to Newtown Creek. That is not in the city of Brooklyn. It is between Long Island City and Brooklyn, between two separate counties, and widely different from the case of the Chicago River. It is a stream about 1,000 or 1,200 feet wide. The river and harbor act provided for a channel not for the full width, but 125 feet in width, through the center of the stream presumably, leaving it to the abutting owners on the two sides to do all the work that is sought to be done at the expense of the Government in the case of the Chicago River. There is a very wide difference between cutting out a channel 125 feet in width in a stream 1,000 feet wide and doing what is sought to be done in this bill, which is to have the Government replace the piling at the edges.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes; but the gentleman concedes that the improvement proposed in this amendment is in the interest of the commerce of the country, does he not?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly; but so is the building of an elevator by a private individual. So is the bringing of a railroad into Chicago.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is not a parallel case.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask my friend a question. Does not the act of June 3, 1896, which is being construed here, really pass upon the main question of appropriating for work inside the Government piers?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It does. I think that was wrong, but I concede that what was determined upon then should be carried out.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have passed that point in legislation.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That point is settled, so far as the dredging is concerned, but not as far as going to the sides and replacing the piling is concerned, or buying the right of way. There are two distinct items, one of $176,000 for docks, and another for $144,000 for right of way, which, I submit, ought to be eliminated.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like if the gentleman from Ohio will make clear to the House the effect of this interpretation of the act of June 3, 1896. What was done under this act, and what is the effect of this in relation to the act of June 3, 1896?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I can answer that in part by reading the official report of Major Marshall. In 1893, in making recommendations for the benefit or interest of commerce, he says:

> First. That the Chicago River from its mouth to the stock yards on the south branch and to Belmont avenue on the north branch as far as may be permitted by existing docks and wharves be dredged to admit passage by vessels drawing 16 feet of water.
> Second. All encroachments on the stream by docks within the original meandered lines of the streams obstructive to navigation, as it exists to-day, should be removed at the expense of the encroaching parties, and obstructive bridges be required altered or changed.

The act of 1896 only provides for dredging. This bill includes provision for purchase of right of way and for building docks.

This bill is more than an interpretation. It carefully leaves out the provision for removal by encroaching parties, and lays upon the Government the expense of doing all the work of improvement of the river, which was recommended and suggested to be done in the interest of commerce by Capt. William L. Marshall. In his recommendation he said that these encroachments ought clearly to be removed by private parties there.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I ask if the gentleman will allow me five minutes?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I yield to my colleague two minutes.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I only want to finish a word I was saying in respect to an inquiry, and as to the particular kind of work that may be required to make the improvements. The fact is that the river and harbor bill passed in June last quotes the language of Major Marshall, the local engineer, almost, if not entirely, verbatim. I drew it myself, and know whereof I speak.

The simple truth is that the Comptroller of the Treasury, in his efforts to interpret this statute, said that he will not audit all the bills for the work provided by the river and harbor bill until the work shall be done, and this interpretation is given to it to the end that the money appropriated a year ago may now be made available. It does not add anything additional. My friend says the Government should not be called upon to put in piles, and I agree with that, except where the Government tears them down in making the improvements. That is all that is contemplated here. We are now doing this work at various points, taking out some piles. Major Marshall recommends that they be put in again. The same kind of work is done all over the country in these river and harbor improvements.

I want to say only one word in further answer to a suggestion as to the sewage put into this river at Chicago and the character of the river. Some gentleman has said that he wants to know about the ditch. I will answer both questions at the same time. It means that the city of Chicago is expending now, and has nearly completed an improvement that has cost $30,000,000, that it is paying out of its own pockets. This is not alone for the purpose of drainage, but for the purpose of commerce in connecting the Great Lakes with the Gulf of Mexico, which every engineer says must be done.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to my colleague representing one of the Chicago districts, and then I hope for a vote.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I desire to say in reference to the commerce that is carried on Chicago River that this appropriation is utterly insignificant when you consider how enormous is the extent of that commerce.

Listen for a moment to the figures. The river contains 214,290 feet of dock front, or 40.6 miles. The elevators along the river have an aggregate capacity of 40,000,000 bushels. In 1895 there were shipped 82,300,000 bushels. There were shipped in addition 1,507,000 barrels of flour, and 4,063,000 packages of miscellaneous freight. There were received 2,000,000,000 feet of lumber by water, and 1,000,000,000 feet by rail. There were received 3,207,000 tons of coal.

The amount of commerce done upon the Chicago River equals that at New York. It is so great that all these other harbors sink into utter insignificance in comparison with it. Now, with reference to the point of the gentleman from Ohio, that there is no precedent for improving it, why, so long ago as in 1888 Congress appropriated $100,000 for the removal of certain obstacles that were in the Delaware River, opposite the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does not the gentleman know that that appropriation was made upon the express provision that the docks should be extended out into the river? The city of Philadelphia owned certain docks and private individuals owned others, and both were to bring them out to the line of the channel dredged by the Government.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I refer only to the purchase of the island in the river for the purpose of improving the commerce of Philadelphia. The gentleman will excuse me for not yielding, because he has already spoken and my time is limited. At Michigan City, I quote from the Engineer's Report:

> The harbor is the creek which winds through the town, and to which all vessels having business at this port proceed.

The Menominee River has received a large appropriation for the purpose of widening and extending the channel; and at New York the appropriation which was made for improving Spuyten Duyvil Creek across to the Harlem River required a total expenditure of $2,700,000 for widening and deepening that channel, an enormous work, which was demanded by the great commerce there carried on. That is a precedent for the appropriation for the harbor of Chicago which was contained in the river and harbor bill passed last year, and I call the attention of the House to the fact that in the provision placed upon this bill by the Senate, by way of an amendment, there is not a dollar of addition made to the appropriation contained in the river and harbor bill.

There is merely such a construction given to it as will induce the War Department to make the expenditure. The act of last spring provided that the improvement should be made "according to the recommendation of Capt. William L. Marshall, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, in his report made under date of August 9, 1893," and the endeavor is made by this amendment to make the appropriation read exactly as Major Marshall would himself have drawn it had he been drawing the act. Here is the language:

> And it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the said provisions of said act relating to the improvement of said Chicago River, that all of the work in the improvement of said river which was recommended or suggested to be done in the interest of commerce by Capt. William L. Marshall, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, in his report of August 9, 1893, may be done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Just a word, Mr. Speaker, and then I shall be ready for a vote. The city of Chicago is the second city in the Union, and let me add that the tonnage of Chicago River is greater than the tonnage of any port in the United States. I want to say further that the river and harbor bill of a year ago, right or wrong, authorized the improvement of this river up to the amount of $700,000, and this provision, while it is legislation, does not increase the limit of cost, but requires that this work shall be done within the limit, instead of practically increasing the limitation as the House has done to-night in relation to Oakland, Cal., the four dams on the Ohio River, and improvement of the Kentucky River. I am ready for a vote.

The motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment was adopted.

On motion of Mr. LORIMER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the Senate amendment was laid on the table.

Amendment 129 was read, as follows:

> Illinois and Mississippi Canal: For continuing construction (129), $1,700,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as to amendments 129, 130, and 131, that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that amendment No. 131 should be passed over temporarily, until we reach No. 133, so that the two can be considered together.

Mr. CANNON. All right. Then my request for unanimous consent applies only to amendments 129 and 130, and as to them, I move that the House insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment 131 was read, as follows:

In the item for continuing improvement from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Missouri River, strike out the following:

"And of the sum heretofore appropriated and authorized to be expended and contracted for during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1896, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the said Secretary of War is directed to expend so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to prevent the Mississippi River from breaking through into Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo."

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have suggested to the gentlemen from Illinois that we consider that with amendment 133, as they both relate to the same point.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a proper motion, providing that the cost of this improvement on the Mississippi River shall be paid in whole or in part from the appropriation for the Lower Mississippi and the Upper Mississippi.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to raise that very question, and I will move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in Senate amendment 131, my purpose being to make a similar motion later with reference to amendment 133.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and concur in the same.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Then, Mr. Speaker, for convenience, I would like to discuss the same motion with reference to amendment 133 at the same time.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CATCHINGS. A very few minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Three or four?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will not be very long. The gentleman can call me down when he chooses.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman five minutes. I would not like to call him down. [Laughter.]

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, the representative from the Cairo district [Mr. SMITH], accompanied by a delegation from the city of Cairo, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and represented to them that at a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo, the Mississippi River was likely to break through into the Cache River, a smaller stream which at that point runs nearly parallel with the Mississippi and empties into the Ohio at Mound City, which is seven or eight miles up the Ohio from Cairo. And they asked the Committee on Appropriations to provide that an amount not to exceed $100,000 might be used out of the appropriation provided for that section of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio for the purpose of preventing the Mississippi River from so breaking into the Cache.

The Committee on Appropriations very properly declined to take the matter into consideration until it had first been submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Thereupon Mr. Smith, the representative to whom I have alluded, appeared with his delegation before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, who were assembled for the special purpose of giving him a hearing. It was represented to us that if the Mississippi River should break through into the Cache, the national cemetery located at Mound City at the mouth of the Cache River, which has cost the Government something like $150,000, would be entirely destroyed; and I think that statement was absolutely true.

It was also represented to us that there was a marine hospital at the city of Cairo, constructed by the Government at a cost of something like $80,000, which would also be in imminent danger if this break should occur: and I think that is absolutely true. It was represented that this danger was imminent, and that this provision should be made for the preservation of this Government property.

We asked if this matter had been submitted to the Engineer Department. Mr. Smith stated that they had called upon the Chief of Engineers, who had telegraphed to Major Handbury, the engineer in charge of this section of the Mississippi River, who had replied that he did not think there was imminent danger of this break occurring, but would consider the matter in the orderly course of improving that section of the river. But these gentlemen were so urgent in their representations to us that, concluding this work would possibly be necessary to be done at some time, we decided to recommend to the Committee on Appropriations that this diversion be authorized. So we addressed a communication to the Committee on Appropriations to that effect.

Amendment 131 contains the provision which the Committee on Appropriations thereupon made, by which a sum not to exceed $100,000 of the appropriation for the section of the river between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio was authorized to be used for that purpose. The provision in that form passed the House. It went to the Senate, where a communication was submitted from the Chief of Engineers in which the suggestion—not the request—was made that perhaps this diversion should be made from the appropriation for the lower section of the Mississippi River. Thereupon, without the request of any Senator or Representative, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate provided in their first draft of the bill that this $100,000 should be taken from the appropriation for the lower section of the river.

In open Senate, after a full discussion, that amendment which the Senate committee proposed was stricken out. The provision carried in the bill as passed by the House was also stricken out, and an independent, specific appropriation of $100,000 was made for that purpose. I submit that the action of the Senate was proper and wise—thoroughly justified by the circumstances. The danger, if there be one at all, is purely local. It in no sense affects the navigation of that section of the Mississippi River. If the city of Cairo were absolutely destroyed, commerce would not be delayed or vexed in the least in any section of that river. But there is valuable Government property which might be destroyed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I ask a few more minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the object of this appropriation is not to affect the commerce of the river in the least degree. It is purely local—for the purpose, in the first instance, of protecting public property, and in the second instance, preventing serious damage to the city of Cairo.

The suggestion which my friend has just made and which was made by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, that the money for this purpose should be taken from the appropriation for the Lower Mississippi River, is entirely without warrant. This danger, if it occurs, will not occur upon that portion of the river. The appropriation has no relation, commercially or otherwise, to that section of the river. If such a diversion of the appropriation were made, it would simply disturb the division of the funds between the different sections of the river, which was amicably adjusted in the river and harbor bill and was satisfactory at the time to all persons concerned. I want to move, when we reach that point, that the House concur in the Senate amendment whereby $100,000 was specifically appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. PEARSON. Does not the Senate amendment add precisely $100,000 to the appropriation already carried by the bill?

Mr. CATCHINGS. It does.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I crave, for three minutes, the attention of the House.

For this river, from the Head of the Passes to Cairo, there is in this bill and the deficiency bill, under the provisions of the last river and harbor bill, over $3,000,000 available. From Cairo to Minneapolis or St. Paul, upon the same two bills, there is available about $1,000,000. Cairo, on the Mississippi, is threatened with the destruction or damage of navigation, and the adjacent country with overflow; and therefore, under the lead of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, $100,000 was segregated from this Mississippi River appropriation to confine the river to its present banks by revetments. That provision, which will be found in this bill, on page 103, was stricken out by the Senate. Later on in the bill the Senate makes this appropriation—absolute, pure legislation. My friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] says that the object of this is not to protect navigation, but to protect Cairo, the cemetery, and adjacent country.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is in part to protect navigation, and, incidentally, to protect the adjacent country, and that is true of every dollar of these multiplied millions carried on this bill for the Lower and the Upper Mississippi.

Now, what I want to ask this committee to do is to insist on its disagreement to both these Senate amendments, and let this go back to conference, and let the Senate recede, and let this $100,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River be segregated from one or the other of these appropriations, carried on these bills, in pursuance of the river and harbor bill.

Now, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as this matter is within my own district, I ask my colleague [Mr. CANNON] to yield to me a few minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Oh, I do not care for two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will say to my colleague——

Mr. CANNON. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman sooner than quarrel with him.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I would not quarrel with my colleague for anything on earth, because I know I should get the worst of it.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that I, fortunately or unfortunately, live between the Ohio and the Mississippi rivers. The Ohio is a peaceful stream, but the Mississippi is a raging one at almost all times.

Cairo is at the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio. There is a little stream called the Cache River, running into the Ohio some 6 miles above Cairo.

A few years ago there was about 6 or 7 miles of land between the Mississippi and Cache River; but the Mississippi began cutting and cutting at a point called Beach Bridge, above Cairo, and to-day it is within 1 mile of the Cache River.

Three weeks ago, inside of twenty-four hours, 124 feet of the bank caved in, bringing it that much nearer to the Cache River. Unless this work is done and done speedily, the Cache River and the Mississippi River will be connected.

I must correct my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] in one statement that he made, that this danger was not imminent. The report from the engineer was that it was not "immediately dangerous."

Mr. CATCHINGS. My friend misunderstood me. I said that that the engineer said that it was not immediate.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Not immediate, that is correct; but if we wait until the Mississippi shall have cut through into the Cache River, and have an "immediate" condition of affairs of that character, it will cost this Government $800,000 or $1,000,000 instead of $100,000.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Six hundred thousand dollars is a small part of the "cash river" that has flowed into the Mississippi. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Now, I have always stood with those who favor river improvements, so far as those improvements go to the benefit of the general public. I know the facts connected with this matter, and know that this improvement is necessary and urgent.

As has been well said by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], the Government has a national cemetery there, which is represented by my State, and when the Mississippi River cuts through this one-half mile, that cemetery will be gone.

The Government not only has that, but it has a custom-house in Cairo which has cost this Government over $125,000. It has a marine hospital there which has cost the Government about the same amount.

Now, I am not particular where this money comes from. [Laughter.] I think I might as well be honest, even though I should differ from some of my colleagues. [Laughter.] I care not whether this appropriation comes from the appropriation made for the Upper Mississippi or the Lower Mississippi or as a separate appropriation.

What we want and what is demanded here is that an appropriation be made and that this work be done, and I certainly think that the good sense of this House will bear me out in my statement that this is necessary, that it ought to be done; and I trust that my colleagues living along the great Mississippi, which bears on its bosom the great bulk of the products of this country to the Gulf, will assist in the matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand that the gentleman from Ohio first moves, on amendment numbered 131, the vote being separate, that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

I hope that will be voted down, and that the House will insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, so that it can go back to conference and let this matter be adjusted, my intention being, if the House does so vote, that this money shall be available from the Upper or the Lower Mississippi appropriation, or both.

Now, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. Put it into the Lower Mississippi River, if you can.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. Has the previous question been moved on this question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois if he desires to move the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I hope my friend will let us dispose of this, and then he can make his request.

Mr. BARRETT. If the gentleman from Illinois does not object, I would like to make my request now.

Mr. CANNON. We can not take up matters foreign to this now. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BARRETT. If the gentleman from Illinois will accord with me in his pleasant way that my request shall receive due consideration, I shall withdraw it until the matter is disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman shall certainly have an opportunity to make his request. That can be done after we dispose of this paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon receding and concurring.

The question was taken; and the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. That means, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, to further insist without further vote.

The SPEAKER. The House has been so treating it to-night, and unless objection is made, and the technical form is insisted upon, the Chair will so rule.

Mr. CANNON. Then the same rule of further insisting necessarily is applicable to No. 133.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be considered as included in the vote. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to make a request.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House I appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and asked that the appropriation for the improvement of Boston Harbor should "be made immediately available." I find that there are two separate items in this bill on which that request has been accorded. I wish now to ask unanimous consent that on page 95, line 13, there shall be put in the words "to be immediately available;" and the reason I make that request, Mr. Speaker, is this.

Mr. CANNON. I will call my friend's attention to the fact, on looking at the bill, that the improvement of the harbor at Boston, Mass., "for continuing improvements $400,000," is not in disagreement between the House and Senate at all. There is no Senate amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. I understand, Mr. Speaker, of course, that a point of order can be made against my request.

Mr. CANNON. It is not a question of a point of order; but simply there is no Senate amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. I think I understand the situation, Mr. Speaker, but by unanimous consent it can be inserted. I ask the House to listen to me for a moment, and then I will ask for unanimous consent. The contract for Boston Harbor has been awarded, Mr. Speaker, and the boast is made that the work——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The House will please be in order.

Mr. BARRETT. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the point of order might be made, but trust it will not be made. There are several points of order that might be made at this time to this bill, which gentlemen present well understand without my calling attention to them. Now, I ask that for the improvement of Boston Harbor the House will put in the words "to be immediately available," for this reason. It was understood when these appropriations were made that the work should be done during the year now coming on.

The contract for Boston Harbor has been awarded under such conditions that no work can be done there during the summer now coming on. The person to whom the contract has been awarded has, I am told, made the statement that under the peculiar conditions of the award no work will be begun during the year 1897. Now, I desire that Boston Harbor shall be treated the same as other harbors in this bill. I ask unanimous consent that on page 95, line 13, the words "to be immediately available" may be inserted.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, however much I would like to oblige the gentleman, I am constrained to object, for the reason that there is no Senate amendment and that the contracts are let for the work to commence at the beginning of the next fiscal year, on the 1st of July. I want to finish the bill and shall be compelled to object, because it would be followed by requests for unanimous consent from everybody else, and the provisions of the river and harbor bill which fix the time of commencing the work under contract would be amended all along the line by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in charge of the bill will accord me a moment, I am sure, because I have stayed in my seat all the night, have helped to keep a quorum, and have voted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I find on the same page, in relation to Cumberland Sound, that the appropriation is made immediately available.

Mr. CANNON. But I will call my friend's attention to the fact that the House insists on its disagreement to that amendment. That has not been agreed to, and it will not be agreed to.

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to add, Mr. Speaker, that if the House shall finally insist on its amendment with regard to Cumberland Sound I will make no objection to striking out Boston, but I do insist that for a harbor so far north as Boston, where harbor improvements can not be prosecuted later than the 1st of October, the same accommodations should be given that is given much farther south, where work can be continued during the whole of the winter months. I simply ask that my amendment may be inserted with the understanding that if Cumberland Sound is finally rejected, so far as the Senate amendment is concerned, I shall make no objection to Boston being stricken out; but I must insist that our northern harbors ought to be treated with the same consideration as harbors much farther south.

Mr. CANNON. Read the next amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. Wait one moment——

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. BARRETT. All right.

Mr. CANNON. Read the next amendment.

Amendment 132 was read, as follows:

Add to the provision for improving the Mississippi River in front of Muscatine, Iowa, the following:

"Provided, further, That the sum of $50,000 of said sum shall be expended for continuing the work of constructing artificial banks between the mouth of Flint River and running along the west bank of the Mississippi River to the mouth of the Iowa River."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to that amendment. Now, let us understand about this. It segregates $50,000 from the appropriation for the Upper Mississippi River for the construction of artificial banks between the mouth of Flint River, running along the west bank of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Iowa River. I want the House to dispose of this.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman wish the House to concur in the amendment? If he does, I will make the motion.

Mr. CANNON. I do not make that motion at all. This is an entirely new matter and I do not want any perfunctory action about it. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment 134 was read, as follows:

Add to the provision of $25,000 to repair and protect the works in the neighborhood of Nebraska City, in the State of Nebraska, the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to that amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARRETT. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 1.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, is there——

Mr. WELLINGTON (interposing). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. SAYERS. I trust the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. CANNON. I appeal to gentlemen to let us go on with this bill, and I especially appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], whom I call upon to testify that I have treated him with the greatest courtesy, to let us go on with the bill. The motion is to do in this case exactly what is done about Boston—that is, to insist that Congress will not make this money immediately available.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Chair recognized the fact that I rose in my place immediately on the announcement of the vote, in order to ask whether a quorum had voted on the division.

The SPEAKER. A quorum did not vote on the division.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of no quorum?

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill one question, and then, perhaps, I shall not make the point, but in the meantime I reserve it. This item says "to be immediately available." I wish to ask the gentleman if, when this matter comes into the House again——

Mr. WELLINGTON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh, let the gentleman from Massachusetts ask his question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I will not.

Mr. BARRETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, if I can not be allowed to ask a question, I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of no quorum?

Mr. BARRETT. I do not wish to do that, provided I can have the privilege of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Regular order.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman's question, if I can, if the House will allow him to ask it.

Mr. BARRETT. Of course the members of this committee understand the position that every other member of the House is placed in. Now, there are certain items on this bill——

Mr. CANNON. I shall be glad to have the question.

Mr. BARRETT. I will ask it. There are certain other items upon this bill that are made immediately available. They have all been disagreed to by the House by a vote, and I wish to ask the gentleman if, when this bill comes out of conference again, an opportunity will be given for a vote on these items as to which the appropriations are made "immediately available," so that they can be considered on their merits?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, when this conference report comes back, if ever it does come back to the House, it will be for the House to adopt the report or to defeat it. The House can exercise that right. I could not cut it off if I would, and I would not if I could.

Mr. BARRETT. On that statement, Mr. Speaker, I shall not raise the point of no quorum.

Amendment 135 was read, as follows:

(135) The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the improvement of the Suwanee River, Florida, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for deepening the West Pass of the Suwanee River at its mouth.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment numbered 136 was read, as follows:

(136) A sum not exceeding $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the money heretofore appropriated for the construction of reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River may be used and is hereby made available for the payment of damages for lands and tenements overflowed or injured by the construction of a reservoir and dam at Gull Lake, Minnesota.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the House recede from its disagreement from this amendment and concur in it.

The motion of Mr. FLETCHER to recede and concur in the Senate amendment was agreed to.

Amendment numbered 137 was read, as follows:

(137) That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to investigate the extent of the obstruction of the navigable waters of Florida, Louisiana, and other South Atlantic and Gulf States by the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth, and to perform such experimental work as he shall deem necessary to determine some suitable and feasible plan or method of checking and removing such obstacle, so far as it is a hindrance to interstate or foreign commerce, and to report the results of such investigation and experimental work; and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the cost thereof.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman allow me one question? Is it not a fact that the navigation of the rivers in Florida and some other States is very seriously interfered with by the growth of these aquatic plants?

Mr. CANNON. I will say in answer to the gentleman that the committee over which I have the honor to preside is an appropriations committee; that this is a matter of legislation thrust in upon this bill where, under the rules of both bodies, it has no place. I simply do not know about these aquatic plants. It will be time enough when we make a river and harbor bill, through the action of a committee well equipped to answer the gentleman's questions, to take that matter into consideration.

Mr. WANGER. I ask the gentleman to give me just a moment. I have been informed by gentlemen who are connected with the navigation interests, on the St. Johns River particularly, that these plants have been growing very rapidly, so that they interfere with the progress of the steamers. The difficulty from this source is becoming more and more serious—is assuming large proportions. I believe it is to the interest of the public and of the public Treasury that means should be devised at the earliest practicable period to find a way, if possible, to remove these obstructions.

This appropriation, as I take it, is simply for the purpose of determining upon a suitable or feasible method of removing these obstacles, or checking their growth. If by the prompt expenditure of $10,000 we can save hundreds of thousands of dollars in the future, it seems to me it would be better to do it.

Mr. CANNON. There are multiplied millions of things on earth and in the universe generally that perhaps should be done, that it might be wise for somebody to do, but about which I know nothing. [Laughter.] This is a sundry civil appropriation bill; and I hope the House will further insist on its disagreement to this amendment. If in due time, in the framing of a river and harbor bill, the accomplished gentlemen who have given technical attention to this matter think that some provision like this should be made, legislation for that purpose can then be had.

I trust we shall have a vote.

Mr. SPARKMAN. My colleague, who has this matter in hand, being unavoidably absent to-night, I want to say a word to the House before the vote is taken. I know of my own knowledge, and also from information, that the St. Johns River, in the State of Florida, is very much in need of this legislation, and that if something is not done, and done speedily, the navigation of that river will be seriously impeded.

I hope therefore that the House will not vote according to the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], but that it shall recede from our disagreement to the Senate amendment, and concur therein. If we wait until next December or next February, when we have the next river and harbor bill before the House, it will be too late to attend to this matter, and serious damage may, and doubtless will, be done to the navigation of that river. I ask that the House recede, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON, it was agreed to.

Amendment numbered 138 was read, as follows:

(138) That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to cause a survey to be made to examine into the feasibility and advisability of the improvement of the waterway beginning at a point at or near the site selected for Lock No. 13, on the Warrior River, and continuing up Valley River from its mouth, following the general course of said stream, to Bessemer, Ala.; thence up the Valley to Birmingham and beyond to Five Mile Creek, at a point where sufficient head can be obtained to supply water for that part of said route between Five Mile Creek and Bessemer, Ala., so as to secure a channel to have a minimum depth of 6 feet and be at least 50 feet in width at the water line, and to ascertain the cost of such improvement, and the cost of such survey shall be defrayed from the unexpended balance of the funds heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Black Warrior River from Tuscaloosa to Daniels Creek.

Mr. CANNON. I am informed that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TRUMAN H. ALDRICH] desires to make a motion in reference to this amendment.

Mr. TRUMAN H. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this is a worthy object, and that the amendment does not add one dollar to the amount appropriated by the bill. The funds are already in hand and unexpended. Furthermore, the object is to ascertain whether the greatest coal and iron district of Alabama can use the improvements of the Warrior River, on which the Government has spent millions of dollars.

I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in it.

Mr. CANNON. There have been several surveys ordered upon this bill. This legislation belongs on a river and harbor bill. If the River and Harbor Committee had been one-thousandth part as industrious heretofore as they have been to-night, out of order, this amendment would not have to be carried on this sundry civil bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. If my friend will give me thirty seconds, I will answer that part of his statement.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to my friend thirty seconds.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. The last river and harbor bill directed that a preliminary examination of this project be made. The engineer in charge reported that no preliminary examination could be made. He said that owing to the importance of the interests involved in it, a survey was necessary, and he recommended that a survey be made, estimating the cost at $15,000. In that estimate the Chief of Engineers concurred. The provision in the bill, however, carries no appropriation whatever. It provides for defraying the expense out of the unexpended portion of a balance that belongs to the building of the locks in the Warrior River.

Mr. CANNON. Can we not have a vote?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Why, yes; I think we may safely leave it to the House now for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede from the disagreement of the House, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(139) For the purpose of a dredge boat for use in the harbor improvement at Sabine Pass, Tex., $100,000, and for the expense of operating the same during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, $30,000; in all, $130,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to that amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I want to move to recede from the disagreement and concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER], to recede from the disagreement of the House and concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I will call the attention of my friend to the fact that even if his motion should be adopted the amendment is wrong. It should be for the "purchase" of a dredge boat This amendment reads "for the purpose of dredge boat."

Mr. COOPER of Texas. This is a clerical error.

Mr. CANNON. I understand this is a clerical error, but nevertheless this is a Senate amendment.

Now, one thing further. There is an appropriation of $400,000 in the river and harbor bill for Sabine Pass, and in my judgment the House should insist on its disagreement, and, if this item for a dredge boat goes into the bill for the improvement of Sabine Pass, it ought to come, like the appropriations for the Mississippi River, from the appropriation for that harbor. I trust that the House will send the item back to conference.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I think there should be fair play in this House, and I believe that the House will give me fair play. I notice that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] seemingly opposed certain legislation upon this bill and at the same time he wanted the House to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. To what amendment does my colleague refer.

Mr. SAYERS. I refer to the amendment affecting the city of Chicago. I voted for that amendment because I believed it was a proper one. But that was legislation pure and simple.

Mr. CANNON. When my friend says I "seemingly" opposed the item, my friend does not do me justice, because in matters of legislation I seemingly do nothing that I do not really mean.

Mr. SAYERS. I simply want to make a statement to this House in reference to this particular item.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. SAYERS. Sabine Pass is represented by my colleague [Mr. COOPER of Texas], but it so happens that I have some knowledge of the circumstances with reference to this matter.

It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that there is an appropriation of $400,000 in this bill, or sought to be appropriated by this bill, for the purpose of continuing the work at Sabine Pass. Now, if you take the $130,000 for this dredge boat and charge it against the authorized limit of the contract, then there will be a deficiency in the sum necessary to complete the contract. It is absolutely necessary that this boat should be purchased or built, and that this dredging should be begun. Two jetties are already being built at Sabine Pass, and it is necessary to have this boat in order to facilitate the establishment of the channel, and also to direct the current in the proper course.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. SAYERS. Now, there are other items on this bill that ought not to be here. We have concurred in legislation amounting to millions of dollars to-night, and now the gentleman seeks to single out this particular amendment and interpose an objection, so that it shall go back into conference.

When the river and harbor bill of last session passed, it contained an amount of $1,400,000 for the work at Sabine Pass. It went to the Senate, and nearly $400,000 was eliminated from that item, so that a reduction was made to a million, instead of $1,400,000, as it passed this House. If the gentleman insists that this $130,000 shall be taken out of this appropriation of $400,000, then there will not be sufficient to complete the work. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. The gentlemen cry "Vote." I am ready for a vote with the statement that there is $400,000 available in this bill for the completion of the Sabine Pass. If it is the sense of the House to legislate, I can not help it. They have legislated on other items; perhaps, none so baldly as this, but I am ready for a vote.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move to concur in the Senate amendment, substituting the word "purchase" for the word "purpose," to correct a clerical error.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, is an amendment in order?

Mr. CANNON. It is in order to agree with an amendment making it "purchase" instead of "purpose."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, strike out the word "purpose" and insert the word "purchase."

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in with an amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(146) Deep Waterways Commission: For surveys and examintions (including estimate of cost) of deep waterways and the routes thereof, between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic tide waters, as recommended by the report of the Deep Waterways Commission transmitted by the President to Congress January 18, 1897, $150,000. Such examinations and surveys shall be made by a board of three engineers, to be designated by the President, one of whom may be detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and one shall be appointed from civil life.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what was done with 140?

The SPEAKER. That was nonconcurred in.

Mr. CANNON. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion on amendment numbered 146. I requested a separate vote on it. I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to ask the gentleman has there been a route decided upon for this deep waterway?

Mr. TOWNE. This is for the purpose of deciding upon a route.

Mr. BENNETT. This is for the preliminary survey?

Mr. TOWNE. It is to make complete surveys for the purpose of obtaining data to determine where the great public work contemplated by the original resolution shall finally be built.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman moves that the House recede and concur. Will three minutes do the gentleman?

Mr. TOWNE. That will be ample time at this hour of the morning.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a few words in support of this motion. There certainly has been in the direction of proposed improvements in interior communication no proposition in recent years so important or far-reaching as this one, which contemplates the opening of deep-water communication between the Great Lakes and the sea. It has been indorsed by all the public bodies of the large cities upon the Great Lakes, and in the vicinity of the proposed route or routes.

It has awakened the attention of publicists and the newspapers, and the preliminary report, which has been drawn by a commission composed of men of very great ability and submitted to the present session of Congress, has attracted general and deserved interest and attention. It certainly has placed prominently before the country the desirability of this great improvement, as an ultimate public work to be undertaken when we are in full possession of the necessary information, and shows it in importance to be second to none ever contemplated by this Government.

The gentleman from Illinois shrugs his shoulder as if he desired me to cease, and if so, I will, as I know how the time is flying.

Mr. CANNON. I will withdraw the "shrug" if my friend will go on.

Mr. TOWNE. If he should withdraw the "shrug" from some of his remarks, he would deprive them of much of their emphasis.

Mr. CANNON. That is very nice. I hope to get a vote. Now, then, I will yield a minute to the gentleman who wanted me to yield to his request and I made the motion deprecating yielding to him, but my friend from Minnesota, all the while dwelling in his good opinion, I fear, thinks that nothing can take place unless it has relation to him as the center.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota one question. You talk of the proposed line.

Mr. TOWNE. I was not aware that I had talked about any particular proposed line.

Mr. BENNETT. I understood the gentleman to say the proposed line.

Mr. TOWNE. The line or lines.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it intended to go by Lake Michigan into the Mississippi River, or by some other route that may hereafter be selected by this Commission? I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that this is a matter in which the State of New York is deeply interested. Several propositions have been presented whereby bills have been introduced in both branches of Congress for completing a great canal from the Great Lakes to Lake Champlain, and so down the Hudson River. Is any such proposition as that contemplated in this provision?

Mr. TOWNE. Why, that is exactly the proposition, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. BENNETT. That is all I wish to know.

Mr. TOWNE. It does not contemplate any connection with the Mississippi River at all.

Mr. LOW. Has any route been anticipated?

Mr. TOWNE. There are, I believe, three several routes under contemplation and discussion. There have been, however, only a series of preliminary examinations from existing data, without any careful surveys or study as contemplated in this particular provision. That is the purpose of this provision.

Mr. LOW. So that large lake vessels can pass to the seaboard, making practically a connected waterway between the lakes and the sea?

Mr. TOWNE. That is the object of this great project.

Mr. CANNON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FOOTE].

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this motion may be concurred in. This is a matter of vital interest to the people of New York State, and not only to the people of that State, but to the people of the great Northwest. There are, as I understand it, three great routes contemplated. One, and the most feasible, is by Lake Champlain, and another is by the Erie Canal. I sincerely hope that the House will consider this subject thoughtfully and will adopt the motion to recede.

Mr. CANNON. A single word, Mr. Speaker. I hope the House will not concur. I do not antagonize this survey; I do not antagonize this deep-water project. I live in Illinois, and I know what water transportation to the seaboard is. But I think this ought to go back to conference for one reason if for no other. It contains this language:

> Such examinations and surveys shall be made by a board of three engineers, to be designated by the President, one of whom may be detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and one shall be appointed from civil life.

Now, we have a whole corps of people educated at the expense of the Government for this very business, and I think that when it is agreed that the survey shall be made it should be made by the Army engineers, who are specially educated for that kind of work and are intrusted with it.

Mr. TOWNE. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill allow me just a word?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am cognizant of the purpose with which this particular provision was drawn. It is perhaps known to most of the members of the House that the engineering portion of the preliminary work thus far done by the existing commission, acting in cooperation with the corresponding commission appointed by the Canadian Government, has been done by the well-known engineer, Mr. Cooley, of Chicago.

I think that perhaps it may be said that he enjoys a reputation as high as that of any other engineer in the world in that particular department, certainly as high as any in the United States. He has given to this work unsurpassed ability, long devotion, and a large amount of time, and he has received no compensation for his services. It is in the view of those interested in the great improvement here contemplated that Mr. Cooley's services shall be availed of in the further prosecution of the work. I think it was not only wise, I think it was almost indispensable for the proper continuation of this great enterprise, that the law was drawn so as to enable the Government to avail itself of the experience, the services, and the ability of this distinguished man.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know Mr. Cooley. He may be a good man, but we have plenty of good men of our own without incurring this expense. Let us not found an industry while we are trying to get deep-water communication. I am ready for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion that the House concur, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TOWNE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 13.

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOOTE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Amendment 147 was read, as follows:

> That for the purpose of ascertaining the character and value of the improvements made at the Pass of Aransas, on the Gulf coast of Texas, by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, a board of three engineers shall be appointed by the President, from the Engineer Corps of the Army; and such board shall personally make examination of the work done by said company for the purpose of deepening the channel and removing the bar at or near said Pass of Aransas.
>
> It shall be the duty of the board so constituted to report the depth of water upon the bar at the time of their examination; the character of the work done and the cost of same; the character and cost of any unfinished work contracted to be done by said company; the probable result upon the deepening of the channel across the bar of any work contracted for or contemplated by said company but not then finished; the value to the Government of all work done or contracted to be done by said company for the purpose of deepening said channel or removing said bar, and such other information as they may deem essential to be known to Congress in making future provision for the purchase of said works by the United States Government.
> Said board shall report the result of their investigation to the Secretary of War on or before the first Monday in December, 1907, and the Secretary shall immediately transmit the report to Congress; and $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the said board and for the services of the said engineers, the amount of such compensation for said services to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede, and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I am ready for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WELLINGTON, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Division.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 34, noes 2.

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KLEBERG, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Amendment 149 was read, as follows:

> Memorial bridge across Potomac River: To enable the Chief of Engineers of the Army to make the necessary surveys, soundings, and borings, and for securing designs and estimates for a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property, $2,500.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I hope that will not be done, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MEREDITH. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 29.

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MEREDITH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Amendment numbered 168 was read, as follows:

> For the erection of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota, which shall be erected by and under the direction of the Board of Managers of the National home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, which Branch Home, when in a condition to receive members, shall be subject to such rules, regulations, and restrictions as shall be provided by said Board of Managers, $100,000.
> Provided, That such Branch Home shall be erected on land donated to the United States by the people of Hot Springs, S. Dak., and accompanied with a deed of perpetual lease to one or more of the medical or hot springs for the use of the above-named Home, the location and area of the land and springs of hot water to be selected by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers or such persons as they may appoint to make the selection of location and hot springs, and that exclusive jurisdiction shall be vested in said Board of Managers over the premises occupied by said Home as over other realty held by said Board until further enactment by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the House will concur in this Senate amendment. Preceding this amendment there is a provision for the location of a soldiers' home at Vermilion, in the county of Vermilion, State of Illinois.

The time is coming, nay, is now here, when more of these special homes must be provided for the accommodation of our soldiers, who are now growing old. I think this provision is a wise one. The provision for the home in Illinois is doubtless a good one, but I feel confident that this amendment for a soldiers' home at Hot Springs, S. Dak., is one which, above all others, should be adopted. I advocate this home, not simply because it is my State, but because, as is shown by the reports of the managers of the National Soldiers' Home, as is shown also by the request of the managers of several State homes, this location at Hot Springs, S. Dak., is peculiarly well suited for a national soldiers' home. The medicinal properties of those waters are well known. I incorporate in my remarks the conclusions of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs in reference to this matter, as embodied in their report:

1. That another Branch Home is needed in fulfillment of the intentions of the Government toward its veterans, existing Homes being crowded, while the demand for accommodations is increasing.
2. That the location of a Branch Home at Hot Springs, S. Dak., will accommodate the veterans of a region for which existing accessible Branch Homes possess inadequate facilities.
3. That the medicinal water at Hot Springs, S. Dak., is a curative agent for ailments most common among ex-soldiers, experience having demonstrated this to the satisfaction of the officials who have watched the effect in a stated number of cases there subjected to experimental treatment.

The Managers of the National Soldiers' Home recommend this proposition. It is also recommended by the assistant inspector-general, General Averell. For the cure of rheumatism and kindred maladies the waters of South Dakota hot springs are shown to be superior to any others in the country. Thirty thousand of these old soldiers have gone down to death during the last year. For the million that remain some provision of this kind should be made. Our National Homes are now crowded. This institution at Hot Springs will afford accommodations for the relief of soldiers in other places, who are now suffering from diseases for which these waters are especially applicable.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman claim that the climate of South Dakota is good for rheumatism?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir. That is shown in the Senate report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I never heard of that fact before.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, let some of your lame Tennesseeans come up there, and we will straighten them out in a short time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not imagine that Dakota was a good place for rheumatism.

Mr. PICKLER. This is not a matter of speculation, Mr. Speaker. Here are the scientific reports about the medicinal virtues of the waters at the Hot Springs. Their curative properties were known to the Indians long before the white settlers came there. As shown in the report of the managers of the National Home, 44 per cent of those using these waters for rheumatism were cured. The place is admirably suited for a soldiers' home. An institution of this peculiar character is needed at the present time—needed for soldiers at other homes who are suffering from diseases for which these waters are especially applicable. There can be no reason, it seems to me, why this amendment should not be concurred in.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This is a proposition which was contained in a bill introduced some time ago?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLELLAN. A bill which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in this House, and not reported.

Mr. PICKLER. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. A bill making provision of this kind was passed by the Senate some time ago, and was referred in this House to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And not reported.

Mr. PICKLER. A provision just previous to this in the bill is for a soldiers' home in Vermilion County, Ill. I think that institution is probably necessary. As shown by the report of the Managers of our National Home, more of these soldiers' homes should be provided. If you are ever to do anything for these old soldiers who are suffering and so rapidly dying from disease, now is the time and this the place to do it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How far is this place from Chicago?

Mr. PICKLER. About 900 miles.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What number of these old soldiers have you in your State?

Mr. PICKLER. There are about 7,000 in South Dakota. But this institution is not intended exclusively for South Dakota.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE].

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I trust that this motion will not prevail. It is a very serious question with all those who have studied this matter of soldiers' homes deliberately and carefully as to whether or not there should be any more homes added to those already built. If the regulations suggested in the bill which has been formulated by the committee of investigation of the Home at Leavenworth, Kans., become a law, I have no doubt at all but what the result will be that the homes already built will be more than sufficient to meet the demands of the Government.

If $4 per month shall be accorded to each inmate for his necessities, reserving the balance of the $16 per month, which, as I understand, is the maximum allowed to the inmate of a Soldiers' Home, for the benefit of the soldier's family, and for outdoor relief, I apprehend that it will very materially curtail the number of inmates in the Homes. This is a proper provision. There is no equity, good judgment, or good sense in maintaining a man at a Soldiers' Home, giving him food, clothing, and shelter, and, at the same time, furnishing him money to buy intoxicants and to use in the abuse of himself. If these provisions that are suggested by that bill are adopted, they will save a great many thousand dollars to the Treasury of the United States.

It is a question of grave doubt in the minds of many who have carefully examined this question whether the addition of the home in Illinois was a proper measure. But that is in the center of a populous region. It is a highly favored location. If this home which is now proposed should become a part of the system of the soldiers' homes, it would be remote from the centers of population. Transportation there would be expensive, and the chances are that there never will be a large soldier population in that part of the country.

The fact that there may be some healing springs there is of little consequence. That will not be a sufficient inducement to soldiers to encourage them to come to that particular locality, considering the cold and inclement weather which prevails there during the greater portion of each year.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLUE. If you will be quick about it, I will, yes.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to ask the gentleman if he has read this Senate report, and if he does not know that the managers of the Soldiers' Home say unanimously that there should be another Home between the Mississippi River and the West?

Mr. BLUE. But, Mr. Speaker, the trouble about that is that the judgment of the managers of the Soldiers' Homes is not always reliable. Anyway, it is based on conditions as the Homes are now managed.

Mr. PICKLER. The trouble is it is too close to the Leavenworth Home, is it not?

Mr. BLUE. Oh, no, it would in no way interfere with that Branch Home. The opinion of the managers of the Soldiers' Homes in this particular is, I think, faulty. The difficulty about this is that members of the board are constantly asking for more; they are constantly seeking to add to the expenditures of the Government, without any reason or any just cause for it. The old comrades long for the pleasures of the society of their families and friends. They desire out-door relief. They do not covet the associations of the Soldiers' Homes.

Mr. LOW. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLUE. Yes.

Mr. LOW. Would you deny to an old soldier the privilege, the opportunity, and the wherewith to take a drink?

Mr. BLUE. Oh, no; not in moderation. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact about it is that many of the men who get into these homes get there by reason of their habits of intemperance..

Mr. PICKLER and other members. Oh, no.

Mr. BLUE. When they get their food and clothing and shelter, if you give them $4 a month as pin money, that, in my judgment, is sufficient for their ordinary necessities.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This drink which is spoken of is water, is it not?

Mr. BLUE. Not always, unfortunately. So, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of sentiment. There is no good reason why these men should be given pensions to squander upon strong drink. When they are given a small amount of money, sufficient for their immediate necessities, and the balance of their pensions is preserved for their families, it will be better for them and those dependent upon them.

Mr. HOWE. May I ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes, or such time as the gentleman may desire, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and then I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, we have one soldiers' home already in the legislation of this Congress. A soldiers' home is not the ideal place for the old soldier. I pity the old soldiers who have to go there. For those who have to give up wife and child, and the ideal life of the family, the Soldiers' Home is good enough, but it is no place for a man to go who still has a hold on life, its activities, its duties, and its loves. I have visited the Soldiers' Homes, and have always left them with sorrow in my heart.

When this country is able to help the soldier more than we do under existing law, let it be done in such a way that he can stay with his wife and his children in the midst of the community in which he has lived. [Applause.] That is the ideal life for the defender of the Republic, and we should not send him where he must retire from the duties of life and the ardors of manhood, and sink into that condition where there are no aspirations left for the human heart, and nothing to do but to vegetate. We have enough of that. If we have money to give, let Congress give it so that it may be expended on men who can stay among their communities where they have been brought up, and where they have returned with well-won honors, to be enjoyed among their kindred. I am against this idea for establishing a home for Dakota, or for any particular State, and I am against it in the interest of my comrades.

Mr. CANNON. I yield a minute to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Iowa of course sets up an ideal condition here that we would be glad to get if possible. But we are crying out, and if this is voted down it will be voted down because it costs a little money to the Government. When it comes to building up homes and supporting them, we would like that ideal for the soldiers if we could get it.

This is not a soldiers' home, gentlemen. It is a sanitarium. It is recommended by the National Board of Managers as a place to cure soldiers sent from the other Homes, and not an ordinary soldiers' home. We are not asking that. Contrary to the assertion of the gentleman from Kansas, contrary to the gentleman from Iowa, these Soldiers' Home are now overcrowded. That is what the officers say.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to recede and concur.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(179) That the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three commissioners whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States.

That they shall proceed with their work as rapidly as may be consistent with thoroughness, and shall report the result of their labors to the Attorney-General when completed, to be by him laid before Congress, and shall make such other reports during the progress of their work as they shall see fit to the Attorney-General, to be laid before Congress at his discretion.

That their report shall be so made as to indicate any proposed change in the substance of existing law, and shall be accompanied by notes which shall briefly and clearly state the reasons for any proposed change.

That each of said commissioners shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, which, as also a sum sufficient to pay the expenses of the commissioners, to be approved and certified to by the Attorney-General, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the House recede and agree to the amendment of the Senate. I only desire to say that in the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, without respect to party, we feel that the conditions of the law in this respect are such that this contribution ought to be made in the interest of the people.

Mr. ELLETT. I concur in the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I believe that closes the amendments, does it not?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we take up amendment numbered 9, page 8, which has been inadvertently passed over.

Mr. CANNON. That is the Corcoran Art Gallery. I do not think the House will agree to it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like to be heard on it for three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I am concerned, I shall not object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the vote of the House be rescinded, and that a vote be taken on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Clerk read the amendment?

The Clerk read as follows:

(9) That the sum of $325,000 is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, for and in the name of the United States, the real estate, with the improvements thereon, known and designated as original lots numbered 5, 6, 7, and 8, in square 167, in the city of Washington, D. C., containing 17,733 square feet, more or less, fronting on Pennsylvania avenue and on Seventeenth street, being the property of the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Said Secretary is directed to acquire said property by purchase from the owners at said sum for use by the Court of Claims, the title to be approved by the Attorney-General.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, you all know the Corcoran Art Gallery. You know that it was an organization created by the late William Corcoran. A large fund was laid aside for this great work that in other great capitals assumes the phase of a governmental organization and enterprise. The gentlemen who are the directors of this fund found that the building was too small for them, and they have recently erected a magnificent building, costing over $700,000. They are obliged to vacate the building which they have occupied. They wish to sell it, in order to obtain a fund from the interest of which they will be enabled to support this institution. The institution in itself is in the nature of a governmental institution. It is for the promotion of art and architecture. It conducts a great work in instruction. I am told it has over 160 pupils now whom it instructs free of charge.

Now, so much for the interests of the gallery. I am assured that the Government of the United States requires a building for the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims now occupies the building occupied by the Department of Justice. I am told that the architect of the Government has declared that that building was unsafe, that it has too many occupants, that there is too great a weight imposed upon it, and the Department of Justice is desirous of getting rid of the Court of Claims in that building. The chief justice of the Court of Claims and the associate justices have united, I am informed, in a letter requesting the purchase of this building as a convenient and appropriate place for the sessions of that court.

Now, as to the value. I am told by real-estate men of character and standing in this community that they valued this property at from $500,000 down. I am also informed that the original price asked for it was $500,000, but they have come down in the price to $325,000. From my knowledge of real-estate values in this city, considering the location, that is a very reasonable price. The location is a favorable one, directly opposite the War Department, and in such a situation property constantly increases in value. In view of the necessity of the Government providing a suitable place for the Court of Claims, I think it is a reasonable price for this property, and I think the property is well adapted for the purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will take three minutes; and then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like three or four minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would not speak on this question if I did not feel it was one of very great importance. One of the greatest attractions of this nation is the Corcoran Art Gallery. It was donated by Mr. Corcoran. It has been of no expense to this Government or this city. There is no family anywhere in this country that visits Washington but one of the first pilgrimages made is to the Corcoran Art Gallery.

They have just given us a building dedicated to art. Though not equal in size to some galleries in Europe, it ranks in its perfection, in its beauty, in its adaptation to the exhibition of works of art, sculpture, and painting equal to anything in the Old World. The trustees are among the aggressive and enterprising men of the Republic. Now, the value of the old building has been referred to by my friend from Nevada. It is needed, and as time goes by we will need more and more of this land convenient to the interests of this city. Take the ground upon which the old Riggs Bank is situated. They paid $20 a foot for that ground, and thought they had a bargain.

At the same rate, consider the ground alone. As you will see from the bill, it contains in round numbers 18,000 feet, and it is worth $360,000 there, within sight of the White House and the State Department, in the most delightful part of the city. We need it for the Court of Claims. We are getting it at a bargain, and at the same time we are upholding the hands of those who are carrying out the will of the late Mr. Corcoran, who has done so much for this city and for the country.

Mr. PEARSON. Will not the proceeds of this purchase money simply go to add to the art collection?

Mr. HENDERSON. Every dollar of it will go to the benefit of the people of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want a little time, and then I hope gentlemen will be disposed to vote. The first objection to this is that if the amendment is to be adopted this property ought to be paid for from the joint revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States, while this provides for taking it entirely from the Treasury. That is objection number one. The second objection is this. The gentleman says in one voice that this is for the Court of Claims, and in the next voice that it is a donation to the art gallery.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not at all. I said the proceeds would be a donation to the art gallery.

Mr. CANNON. Another objection is this: We have $7,000,000 invested in the finest building in the world, right across the park here, with space, wall, floor, all ready for art, to be paid for from the Treasury. Again, one gentleman says this ground is worth $20 a foot, amounting to $360,000, and the other gentleman says it is worth $500,000. Then, the name of all that is good, why cheat this institution by buying this property for $325,000? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman entirely misstates me when he says I stated that the property was worth $500,000. I said that the valuations put upon it ranged all the way from $500,000 down.

Mr. HENDERSON. And I spoke of the value of the ground alone, without reference to the building.

Mr. CANNON. Well, they are anxious to sell it, and they come to Congress and offer it by a Senate amendment, not by independent legislation, at $325,000. Now, if it is so good a thing they had better keep it and get $400,000 for it. [Laughter.]

One word further. I have nothing to say against the Corcoran Art Gallery. It is a good institution. It is a worthy organization. I do say, however, that it will cost $30,000 to convert that building, which many people allege is a mere fire trap, into quarters for the Court of Claims. I think we had better not do this. If it is to be done at all, it ought to be done only after being reported from the proper committee, and I trust that under all the circumstances the House will vote down the motion to concur. Let us not gush about these things. Let us have a little hard-headed judgment about them.

Mr. LOW. Let me ask the gentleman whether the country at the present time can afford the expense of this luxury?

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman knows that we are running emptyings in the Treasury. [Laughter.] There is about a foot and a half between Uncle Sam's breeches and his vest. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILNES. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he knows the value of land where the new art gallery building has been erected?

Mr. CANNON. I do not.

Mr. MILNES. I was told to-day by a real estate dealer that land could be bought in that vicinity for $2 a foot.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that would be a good price for it.

Mr. MILNES. And that is just as good a place for a Court of Claims as the other.

Mr. CANNON. Every bit. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] for one minute, and then I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, to buy this building as here proposed would be a mistake. We have a magnificent square in this city—Judiciary Square—suitable for the court-houses and law buildings of the city. In the not far distant future this Government will be compelled to build a Department of Justice somewhere, and, if it is to be built at all, that is the place for it. Let us build a Department of Justice there. Let us not buy these old worn-out firetraps, but erect buildings of granite and marble like the new Library, that will stand for all time and be a credit to the Government. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. NEWLANDS that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, it was decided in the negative.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDOX. I rise to ask unanimous consent to recur to amendment numbered 96, on the ninety-second page of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before that consent is given, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the amendment read.

Mr. MADDOX. I make this request because I was called out at the time when the amendment was reached.

Amendment 96 was read, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War, through the Commissioners of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to improve the Lafayette or State road in Georgia from Lee and Gordon's Mill, in that State, to the town of Lafayette, $26,000.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to this amendment and that the House recede from its disagreement and concur with the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, as I understand, desires unanimous consent to set aside what has been done, to go back to this amendment, and to move to concur.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I shall make no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, have we already taken action on that amendment?

The SPEAKER. We have.

Mr. MADDOX. I was called out of the House when this bill was brought in, and did not have the chance to call for a separate vote on this proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we passed on this matter when we had a full attendance of members, it is unfair now to ask that the measure be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX]?

Mr. DALZELL. I object.

Mr. MADDOX. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have been urging this matter for the last five hours.

Mr. ELLETT. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by several gentlemen.

Mr. ELLETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has undertaken to state the ground of his objection, but the ground is groundless. The House has not passed upon this question; it was passed over by the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CANNON. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we have now disposed of all these amendments.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS as conferees on the part of the House in the further conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

FRATERNAL BENEFICIAL SOCIETIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amedmnents of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia.

The amendments were read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. These amendments are almost all of them merely formal. They have been examined by the District Committee; and we recommend that they be concurred in.

Mr. LINTON. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Fifty-fourth Congress, without leaving copies, papers in the case of E. Warriner, no adverse report having been made.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw papers filed in support of the bill (H. R. 3222) for the relief of James H. Wimpey, there having been no adverse report.

REPRINT OF BILLS.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the reprinting of the sundry civil appropriation bill with the amendments.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

On motion of Mr. BREWSTER, by unanimous consent, a reprint was ordered of House report (No. 2569) of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures upon House joint resolution No. 183.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOY, for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. SHANNON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HUFF, for one day, on account of important business.

RECESS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. CANNON. At the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], I ask the gentleman to name half past 10 o'clock as the hour for reassembling.

Mr. HENDERSON. Adopting the suggestion of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I move that the House take a recess until half past 10 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., Wednesday, March 3) the House took a recess until 10.30 a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting further information in relation to the official residences of foreign diplomats—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of State, apprising the House of a letter from the minister at Teheran, Persia, concerning a building for the legation at that capital—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Florence A. Puryear, administratrix of R. R. Hightower, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 3, 1897.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

REPORT OF EXCISE BOARD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a report of the excise board of the District, for the license year ended October 31, 1896; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 61, 112, 114, 115, 119, 121, 122, 127, 128, 136, 138, 146, 147, 149, and 179, and agrees to the same; recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 72, and 139, and agrees to the same with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; further disagrees to the residue of the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5732) to amend section 5459 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing the punishment for mutilating United States coins and for uttering or passing or attempting to utter or pass such mutilated coins; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Young Men's Congregational Club of Boston, Mass., praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Commercial Travelers' Club of Springfield, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VILAS presented a petition of the legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the bill (S. 3690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the legislative assembly of California, praying for the passage of the so-called California mineral lands bill; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Telegram.]

CAPITOL, SACRAMENTO, CAL., March 2, 1897.

Hon. GEORGE PERKINS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following joint resolution was this day adopted by the California legislative assembly:

[Joint resolution No. 30, relative to and advocating the passage of the California mineral lands bill.]

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a California mineral lands bill;

Whereas the speedy enactment thereof is a matter of vital importance to California: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be requested to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the same.

Be it further resolved, That the governor transmit a copy of this resolution by telegraph to the California delegation in Congress.

JAMES H. BUDD, Governor.

Mr. ALDRICH presented sundry petitions of churches in Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented sundry petitions of churches in Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment of an impartial, nonpartisan industrial commission, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building and grounds, and also to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pawtucket, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the transmission of gambling matter by telegraph, as such transmission has already been forbidden by mail and express; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. I present a memorial from the national convention of the representatives of commercial bodies of the United States, reviewing the insolvency laws and statistics of failures of the several States.

I move that the memorial lie on the table and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10364) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I present a report of the Joint Committee on the Library upon the hearings had before that committee under the authority of the concurrent resolution of the Senate of May 5, 1896, together with additional testimony and a statement of the cost of such hearings.

I move that the report and accompanying testimony be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHERS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom were referred the following resolutions, reported them severally without amendment, and each was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such testimony as may be taken by the committee or its subcommittees in connection with appropriation bills, and to have the same printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the compensation of the stenographer employed to report the hearing by the Committee on Indian Affairs in relation to the removal of the Lower Brule Band of Sioux Indians from their homes south of White River, South Dakota, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report a statement before the Committee on Naval Affairs relative to torpedo-boat destroyers be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 3735) to increase the pension of Mary F. Hopkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 3736) to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT ON PACIFIC COAST HARBOR.

Mr. WHITE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the report made to him by the board appointed to locate a deep-water harbor for commerce and of refuge at port Los Angeles or at San Pedro, Cal., under the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, together with the plans, specifications, and estimates made by said board.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents for the calendar year 1896; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of members of the legislature of Idaho, remonstrating against Henry Heitfeld being sworn in as a Senator from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. If Senators will take up a copy of the bill with the amendments numbered, I will state what items are still in disagreement, so that they may know, without trying to follow the reading, the amendments upon which the conferees have failed to agree.

Amendment numbered 2, appropriating $6,720 for the free public library, is still in conference, the controversy between the Senate conferees and the House conferees being whether the sum shall be paid as usual, one-half by the United States, or all by the District; also the proposition on the part of the House to transfer all the books of the Departments not used in their circulating libraries and not needed for the use of the Departments to this library.

Amendment numbered 8, remitting penalties on taxes due and payable on or before July 1, 1895, is still in controversy.

Amendment numbered 6, appropriating $210,000 for payment of judgments for the land condemned for the extension of Sixteenth street, was put in the appropriation bill by the Senate last year, and again this year. It was dropped out last year because the House would not agree to it, and the House conferees object to it now. They are judgments rendered by the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Amendment numbered 7 is an appropriation of $65,000 to pay for lands to be condemned for the extension of Rhode Island avenue.

Amendment numbered 53 strikes out the House provision giving authority for necessary extensions of electric arc lighting.

Amendment numbered 55 prohibits the laying of conduits or erection of overhead wires for electric-lighting purposes. Senators will remember that that is the amendment which came from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and was supposed to be a compromise reached by the different interests.

Mr. CULLOM. Those are amendments not agreed to by the conferees?

Mr. TELLER. They are amendments not agreed to.

Amendment numbered 58, reappropriating the unexpended balance and appropriating $266,746.38 to resume work on the Washington Aqueduct tunnel, is not in controversy concerning the amount, but on the question whether we shall undertake to complete that tunnel.

Amendments numbered 102 to 123, inclusive, striking out the general appropriation proposed by the House for charities and appropriating specifically for charitable institutions in the District of Columbia, are still in controversy.

Amendment numbered 131, repeating the provision contained in the last District of Columbia appropriation act, defining the policy of the Government with reference to appropriations for charitable institutions, properly goes with the former amendment.

If Senators desire to ascertain what the conferees have agreed to, they will find it by taking the bill and running it over as the reading of the report proceeds. The Senate put in some items for improvement of streets, and the conferees have been compelled, under the stress of haste, to drop a good many of those streets, disagreeing to some, and so report the bill without them. I ask that the report be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, 5, 15, 20, 22, 23, 25, 29, 30, 31, 34, 36, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 54, 59, 60, 61, 62, 69, 71, 77, 78, 88, 90, 99, 101, 127, 128, 129, and 134.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 16, 17, 18, 26, 27, 28, 32, 33, 37, 38, 46, 47, 52, 56, 57, 65, 67, 68, 70, 72, 79, 80, 81, 85, 89, 90, 92, 94, 97, 98, 125, 126, 132, 133, and 135, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$165,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,125;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$48,812;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,550;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,778;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,735;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For paving North Capitol street between O and Q streets, $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$70,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "': Provided, That if any surplus remains of the sum hereby appropriated, the same shall be expended for regulating, grading, and paving Baltimore street from Columbia road to Twentieth street, and thence along Twentieth street to the Adams Mill road entrance to the Zoological Park: Provided however, That the portions of Baltimore street and Twentieth street so regulated, graded, and paved are, or shall be, dedicated by the owners for conformity with the plans for highway extension."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "condemnation," in line 3 of said amendment, insert the words "to a width of 130 feet;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$104,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 26 of said amendment strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty;" and strike out all of lines 42, 43, and 44 of the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$140,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and at the end of line 4, page 26, of the bill insert the following:

"And the limit of cost of said Western High School building, including site, is hereby increased from $100,000 to $133,000, and a further contract for the completion of said building is hereby authorized within the said limit of $133,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$596,020;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Hereafter each of the members of the fire department shall be entitled to leave of absence each year, with pay, for such time, not exceeding twenty days, as the Commissioners shall determine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$41,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$56,300;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, in line 5 of said amendment, insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the words "For the" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Toward the;" and in line 6 of said amendment strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 6, 7, 53, 55, 58, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, and 131.

HENRY M. TELLER,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. W. GROUT,
M. PITNEY,
A. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McMILLAN. We can not understand anything about what the amendments are from the reading.

Mr. TELLER. I believe if members of the Senate who are desirous of knowing what we have done in conference would take the bill and run through it, they would get the information more quickly than in this way.

Mr. CULLOM. I think if the Senator would explain, as he started in to do, each item referred to, we would learn as much as we could learn by examining the printed bill, unless we took a couple of days to look at it. I think the Senator ought to explain the report.

Mr. TELLER. We can not have a new print now. If Senators will take their copies of the bill with the amendments numbered, I will state the page and line, and they can follow me as I go along.

In amendment numbered 1, page 3, line 18, we proposed to give to the deputy collector the authority to act in the absence of the collector. The House conferees objected, and the Senate conferees receded.

The next amendment, numbered 2, is for the free public library, on page 8. That is yet in controversy.

Amendment numbered 3, page 10, which is the tax question, is still in controversy.

On page 11, amendment numbered 4, to enable the register of wills to compare, correct, and reproduce certain records, or will books, and purchase of books, $2,000, the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. McMILLAN. And that is stricken out?

Mr. TELLER. That is stricken out.

Amendment numbered 5, on page 12, is a modification of the act repealing the act to amend, etc., for the settlement of outstanding claims relating to the public works. The Senate inserted the clause "unless Congress shall hereafter specifically direct payment thereof." On that amendment the Senate conferees receded.

Amendments numbered 6 and 7, for the payment of judgments for lands condemned, are still in controversy.

Amendment numbered 8, on page 13, for assessment and permit work, the Senate appropriated $175,000, the House having made the amount $125,000. The conferees have compromised on $150,000.

On page 14, amendment numbered 9 appropriated $200,000 for the work on streets and avenues. The conferees have reduced the amount to $165,000, and then the schedules following along will be reduced proportionately, and I need not read them.

The Senate conferees receded from amendment numbered 15, on page 14, for paving with asphalt East Capitol street between Eleventh and Thirteenth streets.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 16, for paving H street between Twenty-second and Twenty-third streets NW.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 17, for paving Morris street between Sixth and Seventh streets NE.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 18, for removing cobblestone and repairing with asphalt block D street between Sixth and Seventh streets SE.

Amendment numbered 19, for paving of North Capitol street between O and R streets, was amended by striking out "R" and inserting "Q," and reducing the amount from $9,000 to $5,000, and then the House conferees receded from the disagreement.

On amendment numbered 20, for paving the north half of B street between Ninth and Tenth streets NW., the Senate conferees receded.

On page 16, amendment numbered 21, for suburban sewers, the House had appropriated $36,000, and the Senate increased the appropriation to $100,000. The conferees have fixed the amount at $70,000.

Amendment numbered 22, on line 22: The Senate increased the Rock Creek and B street intercepting sewer appropriation from $90,000 to $130,000, and the Senate conferees receded from it.

Amendment numbered 23: The Senate raised the appropriation for the Tiber Creek and New Jersey avenue high-level intercepting sewer from $50,000 to $100,000, and the Senate conferees receded from it.

Amendment numbered 24: The Senate struck out the provision in the item for paving Connecticut avenue and Columbia road between Florida avenue and Eighteenth street extended, and the House conferees receded from the disagreement.

Amendment numbered 25: The Senate conferees receded from that amendment; the conferees added the following provision:

Provided, That if any surplus remains of the sum hereby appropriated, the same shall be expended for regulating and paving Baltimore street from Columbia road to Twentieth street, and thence along Twentieth street to the Adams Mill road entrance to the Zoological Park: Provided, however, That the portions of Baltimore street and Twentieth street so paved are, or shall be, dedicated by the owners for conformity with the plans for highway extension.

That is practically what the Senate originally recommended.

On amendment numbered 26, for grading and regulating Clifton, Irving, Yale, Bismark, Harvard, Columbia, Steuben, Kenesaw, Wallach, and Thirteenth streets from Seventh to Fourteenth streets, and Roanoke and Princeton streets from Seventh to Thirteenth streets, completing improvements, the House conferees receded.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 27, for grading and regulating Sherman avenue.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 28, for grading and regulating Kenesaw avenue and Park road.

From amendment numbered 29, for paving Spruce street, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 30, for grading and graveling Albemarle street, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 31, for grading and graveling Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth streets, Langdon, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 32, for grading and regulating Twelfth street extended from Florida avenue to Mount Olivet road, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 33, for paving Massachusetts avenue extended from Twenty-second street to Sheridan circle, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 34, for grading Pennsylvania avenue extended SE., $5,000, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 35, page 20, for grading and regulating Emporia street, the House conferees receded with an amendment. Instead of $5,000 the conferees made the appropriation $4,000.

From amendment numbered 36, for continuing the improvement of the road extending from Broad Branch road to Chevy Chase circle, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 37, for improving Thirty-seventh street between Back street and Tennallytown road, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 38, for paving Spruce and Bohrer streets from Larch street to Florida avenue, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 39, for improving and protecting Connecticut avenue extended beyond Rock Creek, $10,000, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 40, for grading and regulating Providence, Lansing, Hartford, and Tenth streets, Brookland, $9,000, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 41, for the purchase of land belonging to the Catholic University and lying between the west line of Eighth street east, extended, and so on, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 42, for grading and graveling Joliet street from Connecticut avenue extended to the Zoological Park, and acquiring same by purchase or condemnation, $5,000, the House conferees receded with an amendment. The amendment is that the street shall be 130 feet wide.

From amendment numbered 43, for grading and regulating Lowell street from Seventeenth street to Klingle Ford road, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 44, for grading and regulating Michigan avenue, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 45, for the grading and improvement of G street from First street east to Fourth street NE., the Senate conferees receded.

From amendments numbered 46 and 47, for grading and regulating and paving Princeton street and Roanoke street from Thirteenth street to Fourteenth street, the House conferees receded.

The next amendment, numbered 48, is incidental, being a total.

From amendment numbered 49, for the straight extension of Connecticut avenue, the House conferees receded with an amendment on page 23, where there is an appropriation of $200,000, which is increased to $250,000, striking out lines 19, 20, and 21, about the bridge.

From amendment numbered 50, for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, for which the House appropriated $130,500, the Senate increased the appropriation to $150,000, and the House conferees receded with an amendment making the appropriation $140,000.

From amendment numbered 51, for lighting, the House appropriated $135,000, the Senate increased it to $185,000, and the House conferees receded with an amendment making it $160,000.

From amendment numbered 52, for street lamps, the House conferees receded, leaving the maximum $20, as it was last year.

From amendment numbered 53, for electric arc lighting, etc., the Senate struck out the words "and for necessary extensions of such service," which is a matter still in controversy.

Amendment numbered 54, relating to the appropriation for electric arc lighting, etc., the Senate struck out "$55,000," and inserted "$40,000." The House conferees receded from the disagreement on that amendment.

Amendment numbered 55 also relates to electric arc lighting, and is still in conference.

On page 28, from amendment numbered 56, providing that the Chief of Engineers of the Army shall report to Congress at its next regular session for erecting a bridge over Rock Creek, the House conferees receded.

On amendment numbered 57, for engineering, maintenance, and general repairs of the Washington Aqueduct, the Senate increased the appropriation from $20,000 to $21,000, and the House conferees receded from that.

Amendment numbered 58, which is the Washington Aqueduct tunnel, is still in controversy.

On page 33, on amendment numbered 59, the Senate proposed an increase of salary of the janitor of the Wallach School building of $100. That was objected to, and the Senate conferees receded.

The Senate conferees receded from amendment numbered 60, which, of course, goes with the preceding item.

On page 34, amendment numbered 61, for the care of smaller buildings and rented rooms, including cooking and manual training schools, etc., the Senate increased the appropriation from $58,996 to $59,096, and the Senate conferees have receded from that.

From amendment numbered 62, for rent and care of Miner School building on Seventeenth street, $3,050, the Senate conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 63, for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds, on lines 19 and 20, page 34, the House appropriated $32,000 and the Senate increased the amount to $40,000. The House conferees receded with an amendment making the appropriation $35,000.

In the next amendment, numbered 64, for the purchase of tools, machinery, material, and apparatus to be used in connection with instruction in manual training, the House appropriated $8,000, the Senate increased it to $10,000, and the House conferees receded with an amendment making it $9,000.

On page 35, from amendment numbered 65 the House conferees receded. That is a Senate amendment increasing the appropriation for contingent expenses, including furniture, books, stationery, etc., from $28,500 to $29,500.

Amendment numbered 66, relating to text-books and school supplies, the House appropriated $38,000, the Senate increased it to $42,000, and the House conferees receded with an amendment making it $40,000.

On page 35, amendment numbered 67, for purchase of water filters, $2,000, the amendment of the Senate was to make the appropriation immediately available. The House conferees receded from that.

Page 36, amendment numbered 68, for one eight-room building and site, seventh division, county, $40,000. These are school buildings. The House conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 69, for one eight-room building and site northeast, sixth division, $40,000. The Senate conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 70, for one eight-room building and site in the vicinity of North Capitol and R streets, $40,000. The House conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 71, for four-room addition to Birney School, eighth division, $8,000. The Senate conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 72, for lot adjoining Curtis School building, to be acquired by purchase or condemnation, $5,000. The House conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 73, for completing Western High School, to be immediately available, the House appropriation was $50,000. The Senate increased it to $83,000. The House conferees receded with an amendment increasing the limit of cost from $100,000 to $133,000.

On page 37, amendment numbered 74, under the head of "Metropolitan police," the House provided for 286 privates, class 1, the Senate increased the number to 318; and on the next page, amendment numbered 75, the House provided for 194 privates, class 2, and the Senate increased it to 226; and amendment numbered 76 is the total appropriation, from all three of which amendments the House receded.

Amendment numbered 77 relates to the annual leaves of absence of the Metropolitan Police. The Senate increased the time from twenty to thirty days, and in amendment numbered 78 the Senate inserted the words "at such times;" so as to read "at such times as the Commissioners shall determine." The Senate conferees receded, making it twenty days and leaving it to the Commissioners to determine whether they shall have any leave or not.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 79, increasing the number of foremen for the fire department from 17 to 18, and from amendment numbered 80, increasing the number of privates from 13 to 20, and from amendment numbered 82 the House conferees receded, with an amendment giving them twenty days' leave of absence a year, and struck out the words "at such times," leaving it to stand in harmony with the provision for the police.

From amendment numbered 83, for repairs to engine houses, the House conferees receded with an amendment. The House appropriated $3,000; the Senate increased it to $4,500, and the House conferees receded with an amendment fixing the amount at $3,500.

Amendment numbered 84, for repairs to apparatus and new appliances: The House appropriated $3,000; the Senate increased it to $4,500, and the House conferees receded with an amendment fixing the amount at $3,500.

Amendment numbered 85, for purchase of horses: The House appropriated $6,000, and the Senate increased it to $7,000; the House conferees receded from that.

Amendment numbered 86, for contingent expenses, horseshoeing, etc.: The House appropriated $9,000; the Senate increased it to $10,500, and the House receded with an amendment making it $9,500.

The amendment numbered 87 is a total.

From amendment numbered 88, for exchange of old-style truck for aerial turntable truck, the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 89, for house, lot, and furniture for one engine company, to be located in the section bounded by Seventh and Twelfth streets and C and F streets NW., $35,000, to be immediately available, the House conferees receded.

By amendment numbered 90, for house, lot, and furniture for one engine company, to be located in Anacostia, the Senate made the appropriation immediately available, from which the House conferees receded.

Amendment numbered 91 is the total from which the House conferees receded.

By amendment numbered 92, for general supplies, repairs, new batteries and battery supplies, telephone rental and purchase, the Senate increased the appropriation from $11,000 to $11,500, from which the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 93, for extension of the fire-alarm telegraph, including new boxes, etc., the House conferees receded with an amendment cutting down the appropriation from $15,000 to $7,500.

From amendment numbered 94, under the head of "Health department," providing for two inspectors of garbage, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 95, increasing the total appropriation for the health department from $30,900 to $33,300, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 96, for incinerating all combustible waste collected in the District of Columbia and delivered at the furnaces, etc., the Senate conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 97, for the purchase of a site for a contagious-diseases hospital, which the Senate struck out, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 98, for two isolating buildings to be constructed in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on the grounds of two hospitals, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 99, providing that the Secretary of the Interior, the Surgeon-General of the Army, and the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service shall be constituted a commission to examine suitable sites for a contagious-diseases hospital in the District of Columbia, the Senate conferees receded.

On page 48, from amendment numbered 100, providing for a wall around the jail grounds, the House conferees receded, with an amendment decreasing the appropriation from $20,000 to $10,000, and some slight amendment in the phraseology that is immaterial.

From amendment numbered 101, for the construction of a crematorium which shall contain two alternating furnaces, the amendment presented by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senate conferees receded?

Mr. TELLER. The Senate conferees receded.

I called attention to the subject of charities, which are still in controversy, being amendments numbered 102 to 123.

From amendment numbered 124, for repairs and furniture, the House conferees receded, with an amendment reducing the appropriation from $5,000 to $2,000.

From amendment numbered 125, for the appointment of superintendent of hospital, the House conferees receded.

The House conferees also receded from disagreement to the provision inserted by the Senate, amendment numbered 126, providing for salary and compensation of the surgeon in chief, etc., which puts the law back as it was last year, leaving the hospital in charge, not of a superintendent, but surgeon in chief.

On amendment numbered 127, providing that any legally licensed physician may attend private patients, when they occupy pay rooms, in any of the public hospitals of the District of Columbia, the Senate conferees receded.

In amendment numbered 128, Reform School for Girls, the Senate provided for a cook at $240. The Senate conferees were compelled to recede from that amendment.

The next amendment, numbered 129, is a total.

In amendment numbered 130, for the Industrial Home School, the House appropriated $9,900; the Senate increased it to $12,000, and the House conferees receded, with an amendment making it $11,000.

Amendment numbered 131 is connected with the charities, and is still in controversy.

From amendment numbered 132, relating to the compensation of the clerk to the joint select committee concerning the charities and reformatory institutions of the District of Columbia, the House conferees receded.

From amendment numbered 133, increasing the appropriation from $3,000 to $3,600 for expenses of rifle practice and matches in the District of Columbia militia, the House conferees receded.

The Senate conferees receded from amendment numbered 134, which proposed to insert in the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the money as is appropriated by this act for public works in the District of Columbia may, at the discretion of the Commissioners of said District, be made available from and after the 4th day of March, 1897.

The House conferees receded from amendment numbered 135, which strikes from the bill section 3 in the following words:

SEC. 3. That hereafter no electric-light company doing business in the District of Columbia shall charge or collect from the United States or any other consumer of electric arc or incandescent lights or electricity for power prices exceeding 75 per cent of prices charged for such lights and power on the 1st day of January, 1897, in the said District of Columbia.

Those are all the subjects of the conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the question is taken on concurring in the report, I desire simply to emphasize an observation I made the other day concerning the burial ground at the Washington Asylum, the so-called potter's field.

I notice that the Senate conferees receded from the amendment which I had inserted in the bill providing for a crematorium. I am not going to argue the question this morning, but I wish to repeat that there is here in the District of Columbia, in the capital of this great nation, a condition of things existing such as I apprehend can not be found in any other great city perhaps in the civilized world, and some remedy ought to be provided at the earliest possible moment, so that this reproach will not be laid at our doors. I regret that the conferees on the part of the Senate surrendered the amendment, but especially so without providing at least for the purchase of additional ground for the burial of the indigent and pauper poor in the District of Columbia.

There is one other matter concerning which I simply want to make a single observation, and that is the provision I had inserted that any legally licensed physician may attend private patients when they occupy pay rooms in any of the public hospitals in the District of Columbia. I think that this must be the only city in the United States in which public hospitals exist, getting contributions from the public fund, where pay patients are refused the privilege of having their own physicians. I believe there is only one hospital in the District where that condition of things exists. The medical profession have insisted, and very properly have insisted, that these restrictions should be removed and that physicians should be allowed the same privileges here in that respect that they are allowed in the other great cities of the country.

I simply desire to say that I regret the conferees on the part of the Senate have felt constrained to surrender that amendment, because it is a very proper one and one that ought to have been kept in the bill; but I take it that the Senate conferees had to surrender something; that this is a compromise measure, and they are very earnestly desirous of reaching a conclusion and agreement. So I find no fault concerning their action, except to say that I feel sure such a provision will in the near future be incorporated in the District of Columbia appropriation bill and that this restriction, which ought not to exist, will be removed.

Mr. CALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. I understand that amendment numbered 7, on page 13, is still in conference. It is the provision to pay for lands to be condemned.

Mr. TELLER. That is still before the conference committee.

Mr. CALL. The Senator will allow me one other question. I understand also that the provision of the bill relating to the unpaid taxes of the District of Columbia is still in conference.

Mr. TELLER. That is still in conference. I wish to say that the committee, in surrendering some of the amendments put on in the Senate, do not pretend, of course, to express any disapproval of or any lack of merit in the amendments, or any lack of sympathy, but we were compelled to surrender some matters that we felt were very important. If the hours had been longer between the time we were sitting and the closing of the session, I doubt very much whether we would have surrendered what we did surrender. There seems to be a general feeling that we ought to get these appropriation bills through, and members of the committee are exceedingly anxious that there shall be no reasonable ground for anyone to be charged with neglect of duty. We remained in conference on the bill until nearly 4 o'clock this morning. I suggest that it is not worth while to read the entire report after the explanation which has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments and request a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate; and Mr. TELLER, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

Mr. PLATT. I obtained yesterday unanimous consent that after the passage of the deficiency and other appropriation bills there should be some time given to the consideration of unobjected House bills on the Calendar. I wish that that order may be now enforced.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me for a moment in order to have the action of the House on the sundry civil appropriation bill laid before the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, agreeing to certain amendments with amendments, receding from certain other amendments, insisting on its disagreement to the residue of the amendments, and agreeing to the further conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that any further action is required. The House has agreed to our conference and has receded from certain amendments. However, having agreed to some amendments with amendments, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments proposed by the House so that those amendments may be carried into conference as well.

Mr. HOAR. Why not ask for a further conference?

Mr. ALLISON. We have asked for a conference and the House has granted it, but to some amendments the House has made amendments, and we want those in conference. As we seem to be technical about conference reports, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments proposed by the House to certain amendments of the Senate, and ask a conference upon those amendments as well as the amendments upon which the House insists upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to inquire what is the status of amendment numbered 6?

Mr. ALLISON. Amendment numbered 6 has been concurred in by the House with an amendment. Does the Senator desire to have the Senate concur in the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. PEFFER. I wanted to inquire what amendment to it the other House has proposed?

Mr. ALLISON. It is at the desk.

AMENDMENT OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I shall not occupy five minutes, but I wish to explain a very unusual paper which I am about to present.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to present a conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia subsequently. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2663) to amend the laws relating to navigation, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate, section 2, line 2, strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

Section 2, line 4, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Section 2, line 6, strike out the word "superficial" and insert in lieu thereof the word "square."

Section 2, line 8, after the word "therein" insert the following:

"Provided, That any such seagoing sailing vessel, built or rebuilt after June 30, 1898, shall have a space of not less than 100 cubic feet and not less than 16 square feet measured on the deck or floor of that space for each seaman or apprentice lodged therein."

In line 9, after the word "drained," insert the word "heated."

Section 3, line 31, strike out the words "be then," and after the word "also" insert the word "be."

Section 4, in lieu of the language proposed by the Senate insert that proposed by the House, as follows:

"Section 12, line 1, strike out the word 'and,' and also in line 2, strike out the word 'and,' and in line 3, after the letter '(c),' insert the words 'rule 16 and rule 17,' and in line 14, after the word 'fifteen,' insert the following: 'Whenever there is a fog, or thick weather, whether by day or night, fog signals shall be used as follows.'"

Section 12, after line 22, insert the following:

"RULE 16. Risk of collision can, when circumstances permit, be ascertained by carefully watching the compass bearing of an approaching vessel. It the bearing does not appreciably change, such risk should be deemed to exist.

"RULE 17. When two sailing vessels are approaching one another, so as to involve risk of collision, one of them shall keep out of the way of the other, as follows, namely:

"(a) A vessel which is running free shall keep out of the way of a vessel which is close hauled.

"(b) A vessel which is close hauled on the port tack shall keep out of the way of a vessel which is close hauled on the starboard tack.

"(c) When both are running free, with the wind on different sides, the vessel which has the wind on the port side shall keep out of the way of the other.

"(d) When both vessels are running free, with the wind on the same side, the vessel which is to the windward shall keep out of the way of the vessel which is to the leeward.

"(e) A vessel which has the wind aft shall keep out of the way of the other vessel."

Section 18. Strike out lines 12 and 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal or modify section 4611 of the Revised Statutes."

Section 20. Strike out all of the section after the word "effect" in line 1, and insert in lieu thereof the words "July 1, 1897."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM P. FRYE,
KNUTE NELSON,
STEPHEN M. WHITE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SERENO E. PAYNE,
JOHN SIMPKINS,
A. S. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I should like to have the section of the report read which applies to seamen, to see whether it contains any of the flogging features that were contained in the bill some time ago.

Mr. FRYE. Let me read it to the Senator, instead of the Clerk. The existing law is this:

SEC. 5347. Every master or other officer of any American vessel on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, who, from malice, hatred, or revenge, and without justifiable cause, beats, wounds, or imprisons any of the crew of such vessel, or withholds from them suitable food and nourishment, or inflicts upon them any cruel and unusual punishment, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than five years, or by both.

The courts held that those words "malice, hatred, or revenge" imposed upon the beaten sailor the duty of proving not only that the beating was without justifiable cause, but that it was from malice or hatred or for the purpose of revenge. The Senate Committee on Commerce believed that to be an unjust burden on the sailor, and therefore they simply strike out of this law the words "malice, hatred, or revenge."

Mr. ALLEN. How will it read then?

Mr. FRYE. One moment, because I have been vicariously suffering for the Committee on Commerce, and a great deal of abuse has been heaped upon my unfortunate head within the last two months, the charge being made that I had restored flogging on American merchant ships. How anybody could have believed that is beyond my comprehension. The man who did must have been a fool or insane; and yet I was blackguarded in one or two great papers of the country as "that brutal Senator FRYE; that man who had restored flogging to the merchant marine." Yet everything that that "brutal man" had done has been done by the Committee on Commerce, and has been done to save the sailors of this country from being compelled, if they were beaten, to prove not only that it was without justifiable cause, but that it was from malice or hatred or revenge.

I never undertook to defend myself in the United States Senate, as I might have done, from those charges. I never did defend myself in Congress since I have been here. I regarded it as furnishing amusement to ignorance and to incapacity, and as doing me no possible harm. Now, the committee, paying the same consideration to ignorance that I did by keeping still, has in conference added to this section these words:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal or modify section 4611 of the Revised Statutes.

Which those wise gentlemen never had read, which was passed in 1850, and which says, "Flogging on board of vessels of commerce is hereby prohibited." In order to relieve those wise men, we have consented that an amendment shall be added to this section that we do not intend to restore flogging in the merchant marine by repealing section 4611. I trust that that will be entirely satisfactory to any sailor, no matter how crazy he may be.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I know but little about this section, as I have only scanned it over on one or two occasions, but I do not understand the rule of law as the Senator from Maine lays it down, or says the courts have laid it down, to the effect that the burden of proof is upon the sailor to prove malice and ill will, independent of the circumstances under which the assault occurred.

Mr. FRYE. Judge Morrow laid it down very recently in California.

Mr. ALLEN. Then Judge Morrow ought to revise his knowledge of law.

Mr. FRYE. That makes no difference. We have cured that to the satisfaction of everybody.

Mr. ALLEN. Because the law is now, and always has been since we have had any criminal jurisprudence in this country or in England, that the circumstances of the assault themselves may prove malice. An unprovoked assault, an inexcusable assault, carries with it, as a necessary and natural and indubitable conclusion, unless rebutted in some form, that the assault was actuated by malice and ill will. If there is any court in this country that is so imbecile and so foolish and so ignorant of the law as to say that the sailor must prove as a distinct proposition that the assault was actuated by malice, that man ought to be retired to private life, or he ought to be hedged off by statutes which will prevent him from making such an error.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator ignores the fact that there are two words added there which do not appear in any criminal statute touching an assault of any kind. Those words are "hatred or revenge." Those are very unusual words, and they are in this statute, and we wanted to get rid of them so that the sailor should have abundant opportunity to go and prove his case.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to know from the Senator from Maine, who is familiar with these matters, especially matters of commerce, what circumstances will justify the assault of a sailor, either on shore or on a vessel?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, Mr. President, there are any quantity of circumstances that would justify it. If a sailor with a sheath knife came at the captain, it would be his duty to knock him down; if he was on duty at the wheel and undertook to cast away the ship, or run it on a rock, it would be the duty of the captain to deprive him of the power of doing so. There are any quantity of circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that quite well; but I want to know if there are any circumstances, aside from the mere fact that it occurred upon a vessel which may be thrown upon the rocks, or cast aside from its course, and so forth—whether there are any circumstances on board a vessel that will justify an assault upon a sailor that would not justify an assault on land by one private citizen upon another?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, I think so; because if a gale of wind was seen approaching and the captain of the ship should order the sailors to reef sails, and they refused, when there are lives in his charge and when there is an immense amount of property endangered, I have no doubt the captain would be justified in making an assault upon a sailor who refused.

Mr. GRAY. The same as with a soldier.

Mr. FRYE. The same as with the Army or with the Navy.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Delaware says just the same as upon a soldier. There would be no justification for an assault upon a soldier under those circumstances. That is altogether an assumption.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator must see very plainly that there was no intention upon the part of the Committee on Commerce to restore flogging on shipboard.

Mr. ALLEN. I can understand very well that exigencies may arise upon a vessel requiring prompt action where the sailor fails to perform his duty; but aside from those peculiar exigencies which are incident to navigation and which might result possibly in mutiny or in the destruction of the vessel or injury to it in some form, or injury to passengers, are there any circumstances that will justify an assault upon a sailor by an officer any more than an assault made upon a private citizen?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Maine will allow me, I will reply to the former Senator.

It is not necessary at this juncture to go into theoretical discussions as to the circumstances under which a master or an officer may strike a sailor. The question at issue is simply what are the changes made by the pending bill in the existing law; what is the difference between the House measure and the Senate measure?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to make a statement?

Mr. ALLEN. Not now.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. I will make it by and by.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not concede for a moment that it is a mere question between the House bill and the Senate amendment, or whichever it may be. I think it rises to a greater dignity than that. I can understand quite well that it is necessary to have discipline on board a vessel, and I concede that the authorities should be given ample power to enforce discipline, to protect the vessel, to protect freight, to protect passengers, and so forth, and should be permitted to have control over the persons of the seamen under those circumstances to a certain extent; but I can not understand why an officer or a subordinate on board of a vessel, whenever he may become incensed or angry at a sailor for some little remark he may make or something of that kind, would be justified in assaulting him with a weapon or with his fist with the same degree of brutality that he would assault an ox.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think he would be. I think he would be liable under that statute if he did.

Mr. ALLEN. Nor can I understand the kind of jurisprudence to which the Senator from Maine has referred, which casts the burden of proof upon the sailor, in a prosecution for an assault, to prove as distinct propositions, separate from the circumstances of the assault itself, actual and distinct malice, hatred, or ill will.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. When the statute provides that the assault which is to be punished shall be with malice or from revenge, would not the Senator think that that cast upon the person who committed the assault the burden of proof that it was from malice or revenge?

Mr. ALLEN. I have said it cast upon the prosecution the burden of proof, but it does not cast upon the prosecution the burden of proving those things distinct from the circumstances under which the assault occurred. For instance, in the case of murder, there must be willful and deliberate malice, or malice aforethought. Suppose a man, an entire stranger to his victim, shoots down or stabs his victim to death, will not the court infer, and will they not instruct a jury to infer, or that they may infer, that under the circumstances of the assault willful and deliberate malice are to be presumed, and that it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove as a distinct proposition that there was malice aforethought independent of the circumstances under which the assault took place? I understand the distinguished jurist to whom my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] refers has held that these things must be proved as distinct propositions independent of the mere circumstances under which the assault occurs. If that is true, I suggest to my friend from Maine that those jurists should be hedged in by a statute which will prevent that in the future.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that the question of malice may be inferred from the act may be correct as a general proposition, but it is not true in this particular case. The existing law which is sought to be amended by this provision of the bill which the Senator from Nebraska criticises is as follows:

SEC. 5347. Every master or other officer of any American vessel on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, who, from malice, hatred, or revenge, and without justifiable cause, beats, wounds, or imprisons any of the crew of such vessel, etc.

The courts have decided as long ago as in 2 Sumner, and decided by as eminent a jurist as Judge Story, a member of the Supreme Court, that in prosecutions under that statute two things must be established and concur in order to justify a conviction. First, it must appear as an independent proposition that the master was actuated by malice, hatred, or revenge; then, in the second place, that the assault was made without justifiable cause. What we aim to do by the proposed statute is to eliminate one of those grounds. We may not go so far as the Senator desires in this respect, but if this report be adopted and the bill shall become a law, we eliminate one of the ingredients that are necessary now in order to secure conviction in the case of the beating by a master of a sailor on shipboard, and it will no longer be necessary to prove that the beating was through malice, hatred, or revenge. That is as far as we have gone, and that is practically as far as the House bill has gone, although they use different language.

Now, let us see the two sections of the bill which amend the section of the Revised Statutes I have read. The House provision amends that section as follows:

SEC. 5347. Every master or other officer of any American vessel on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, who willfully beats, etc.

In that phrase in that connection all lawyers understand that the term "willfully" does not mean merely intentional; it does not mean the reverse of accidental. If a man approach me in a threatening manner and strike me down, and I beat him, repelling force with force, and strike him down, in one sense that is intentional, in one sense that is willful, but not in the meaning of the law. It is not a willful beating, for I have a justifiable ground.

The bill as amended by the Senate, and that is incorporated in this conference report, reads as follows:

SEC. 5347. Every master or other officer of an American vessel on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, who, without justifiable cause, beats, etc.

So, practically, as a matter of law, the two sections of the Senate and House bill are identical, and by both we have relieved that provision of the law of that bad feature which existed before, which rendered it almost impossible to secure a conviction, because the court invariably instructed the jury in all such cases that, in order to convict, they must find that the beating on the part of the master or officer was done through malice, hatred, or revenge. If this bill becomes a law, the sailors will no longer be required to prove that fact.

Mr. President, the sailors have a man here, as is proper enough, to represent their interests. He is not a lawyer. He made the mistake, when he noticed the Senate section, of intimating that it restored flogging in the Navy. There never was a greater mistake in the world. He charged the chairman of the Committee on Commerce with being guilty of taking a retrograde step to restore flogging. There never was a more outrageous and unjust charge in the world. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce has manifested from first to last, so far as I know—and I think I know what occurred in reference to this matter—a disposition to go as far as is just and proper to protect the sailors.

"Flogging" has a technical meaning. It does not mean striking a man. The term "flogging" was used to describe a punishment which once existed not only in our merchant marine, but also in our Navy.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the Senator explain the difference between flogging and an assault.

Mr. NELSON. "Flogging" is a technical term used in the sense of punishment in our Navy as well as in our merchant marine. Flogging was administered as a punishment, just as it is in the State of Delaware for some offenses now. The law authorizing flogging was repealed in 1850 by a provision of law now incorporated in the Revised Statutes. Let me read that section:

SEC. 4611. Flogging on board vessels of commerce is hereby abolished.

By this provision of law flogging was forbidden.

The gentleman who represents the sailors insinuated or claimed that by this amendment which we have incorporated in this bill, and by which we sought to relieve the sailor from the onus of proving that the assault was committed in malice or for revenge, we had restored flogging to the Navy or the merchant marine. There never was a more outrageous or unjust charge in the world. But in order to take away all doubt on that question, we have added a proviso to this amendment so that section as amended shall not be construed in any manner to restore flogging in the Navy.

Mr. President, I will agree with the Senator from Nebraska that perhaps we might have gone further to relieve the sailors in this case; but we have taken a great step and inaugurated a great reform to remove an evil which has existed in the law since 1835. As in all reforms, we could not accomplish everything with one leap, one jump. We thought we had better go gradually. I think at present all intelligent sailors and all well-meaning sailors are satisfied with what we have accomplished; and if this is not sufficient, by and by we can go a step further; but what we have now done ought to be ratified, because it is in the interest of the sailors and a great advantage to them.

Mr. FRYE. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I shall be pleased to answer any question the Senator from Nebraska may wish to ask.

Mr. ALLEN. Just a word, for I shall not detain the Senate at this time. I do not think the Senator from Minnesota ought to be permitted to put Judge Story in a false light. Judge Story never held in 2 Sumner, or in any other case, that it was necessary to prove malice, hatred, ill will, or willfulness of conduct independent of the circumstances under which an assault occurred, and there is not a decision in all the decisions of the United States which I have had occasion to examine—I have examined some of them, not all of them—aside from the one referred to by the Senator from Maine, which ever laid down the foolish doctrine that the burden of proof was upon the prosecution to establish either malice or hatred or ill will or any circumstances aggravating an assault necessarily independent of the circumstances attending the assault itself. If nothing appeared justifying the assault, it was presumptively proved.

Mr. FRYE. I think, as the Senator modifies his statement, he is entirely correct, that the jury may find from the circumstances that there was malice.

Mr. ALLEN. Not only may find——

Mr. FRYE. But it must be found.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly, it must be found; but the very fact that the assault was unprovoked, that the relations between the parties were the relations of strangers, or that they had previously been friends, or that nothing existed in their relations making them enemies—the very fact that the assault was made under circumstances of that kind not only authorizes the jury to infer that the assault was malicious and willful, but the court would tell the jury that they should infer from those circumstances, if the assault was consummated, that it was willful and deliberate.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator, I take it, does not object to our trying to make it a little easier for the sailor.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all.

Mr. FRYE. Then it is important to get a vote on the report, so as to get the matter over to the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLEN. I will retire in a moment.

Mr. FRYE. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Suppose, under the law as it existed, as read by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], a sailor had been indicted, it would be necessary, of course, to show not only that the assault was unjustifiable under the circumstances in which they were placed as master and sailor, but also that it was actuated by malice, hatred, or revenge. Now, it is quite conceivable that an assault might be unjustifiable from the point of view of a mariner and the relations that exist between the sailor and the officer, and yet not be actuated by either hatred, malice, or revenge.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, there may be such a thing as that, but if there is, I am altogether too obtuse to see it.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] undertook to draw a distinction between an assault and battery and flogging. I must admit that the distinction is not comprehensible to me. Why, Mr. President, the very menace or threat of an assault, if the assailant be within striking distance and capable of executing his threat, is a simple assault itself, for which a man may be punished, and any laying of the hands upon a person in anger, however light it may be, is an assault and battery.

Now, the Senator from Minnesota undertakes to draw a distinction between this kind of an assault and battery and that kind of an assault and battery that is found in the case of an officer taking one of these unfortunate sailors off into some place and striking him with a whip or with some other weapon. There may be a distinction between these two assaults. If there is, I am incapable of seeing it. What I want to do is to protect the sailor as an American citizen on board his vessel as well as an American citizen on shore.

I can understand quite well, as the distinguished Senator from Maine says, that there are rare and exceptional circumstances under which the officer might be justified in inflicting corporal punishment, but the burden of proof should be placed upon that officer, whenever he is arraigned before a court charged with that offense, of proving the justifiable circumstances.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have a vote now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT. Now I suggest that we proceed with the consideration of unobjected House bills on the Calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar will be announced. The Chair will state, however, that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] addressed the Chair and gave way to the Senator from Maine to present a privileged report.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Georgia will wait one moment, and let us put the order in the way of execution, then he can proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement will be announced.

RAILROADS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (H. R. 8850) to amend an act passed at the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, entitled "An act to grant to railroad companies in Indian Territory additional power to secure depot grounds and to correct alignments," was announced as the first business in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read at length.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be read again.

The bill was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment which has heretofore been adopted will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 85, after the word "alignment," an amendment was adopted to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the right to add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved to Congress, or to any State which may hereafter be established in the territory through which the lines of said railroad companies are constructed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment heretofore proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 28, after the word "stations," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That any railroad company which shall avail itself of the privileges of this act shall not charge more than 3 cents per mile for carrying cash passengers through said Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I think no man on the floor of the Senate taxes this body less often than myself. I do not wish to make a speech, but I do ask unanimous consent for a few moments' indulgence in order to explain a rather unusual communication which I am about to present. If this consent is granted, the Senate will discover that while the purpose which I have in view is rather sentimental and patriotic than practical for this late hour of the session, yet it is neither an idle nor improper object.

One hundred years ago, Mr. President, in Congress Hall, Philadelphia, was witnessed an inaugural ceremony which I will not say was in strange, but certainly it was in striking, contrast with the one upon which we are to look in this Capitol to-morrow.

The incidents and facts connected with that scene and some most interesting facts connected with that early period of our history have been collated and described by that accomplished gentleman and patriotic citizen, Judge James H. Embry, of this city, in a communication to myself, which I ask the Senate to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, it will be recalled that in Congress Hall, on the 4th of March, 1797, stood George Washington making his Farewell Address to public life and to official connection with his country. Another figure which appeared upon that scene, certainly not less picturesque and scarcely less eminent, was John Adams, who was to assume the Presidential office. It will do no harm in this period of our country's power and splendor and upon this centennial to place in the record of our proceedings some account of that remarkable scene.

It was the "farewell" of the man who was first designated by Light Horse Harry Lee, the father of Gen. Robert E. Lee, "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen;" the permanent retirement of that man of whom Mr. Jefferson said that his fame would go on increasing through the centuries until some constellation in the heavens would be called after him. The prediction of Mr. Jeffers on will probably never be realized, but we will all agree, I think, as will all the liberty loving of our race, that Washington's name will not be forgotten while any of that race shall survive or republican institutions live.

The other figure to whom I allude was John Adams, who with his thundering words had done for American independence and freedom what Mr. Jefferson had done with his pen and what Washington had enforced with his guns—the man who Mr. Jefferson declared was our Colossus on the floor of Congress.

It will do no harm to revive the picture of the scene in that little hall in Philadelphia one hundred years ago, when George Washington, in his severely plain black suit, stood amidst his weeping hearers, bidding his farewell to all official connection with his country. It will do no harm to have our children recall John Adams, in his no less severely plain drab suit, as he sat with his ruffled-bound hands covering his face, wet with tears, as the father of his country was uttering those solemn, golden, and ever-memorable words.

Mr. President, begging the pardon of the Senate, realizing the fact that this is no time for speech making, I ask that this paper, which I think is worthy of preservation, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The paper is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1897.

MY DEAR SIR: May I remind you that time's tireless march will bring us in a few hours to the centennial of one of the marked epochs of our national life—the retirement of the illustrious Washington from public life; the surrender by him of the great trust of the Presidential office, and the first successful experiment of free government within the Western Hemisphere. It is well to pause and contemplate the nation, then an infant, and now a giant, and in imagination to picture it a century hence, when a population of hundreds of millions between the two oceans that bathe our shores, preserving, as we all devoutly hope, the blessings and liberties we this day enjoy, shall be prepared to hand to another century our Constitution unimpaired and our Federal Union unbroken. Just a century ago, besides the original thirteen States, three stars had been added to our flag, and Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee had taken their places in the great assembly of American Commonwealths. Virginia had, with royal munificence, dedicated to the nation the Northwest Territory, an area larger than the British Isles, and had given the fairest portion of her domain—Kentucky—to become one of the sisterhood of States. The invitation to become a State of the Federal Union was extended to Kentucky before it was to Vermont. The sixteen States of the Federal Union just a century ago had a population not exceeding 5,000,000; now forty-five American Commonwealths contain a population of about 75,000,000.

Many questions, foreign and domestic, confronted Congress during the Administrations of Washington. With affection for his memory, with reverence for his character, and with a warm appreciation of his advice and counsel, the Senate pauses in its deliberations to hear and ponder his Farewell Address to his countrymen, and to place it anew upon its records, that millions may again read its patriotic utterances and be imbued with his spirit of intense devotion to the public weal.

As we look back at the record of our national life a century ago, we find Congress sitting in Philadelphia—a city then of less than 40,000 population. The first Congress ever assembled on the Western Hemisphere met in that city on the 5th of September, 1774, and the great Declaration was proclaimed within its limits. The British forces occupied the city from September, 1777, to June, 1778, the battle of Germantown having been fought October 4, 1777. From 1790 to 1800, the city of Philadelphia was the seat of government of the United States. It is interesting to note some of the proceedings of Congress near the close of Washington's last Administration—just a century ago. Assembling then as now on the first Monday of December, instead of sending a message, President Washington appeared on December 7, 1796, in the Chamber of the House of Representatives, where the Senate had already assembled, and addressed the two Houses. On the 10th, the Senate transmitted an address to the President in answer to his speech, and on the 16th the members of the House in a body waited upon the President at his residence, and the Speaker, on their behalf, delivered an address to the President. On February 8, 1797, the two Houses assembled in the Representatives' Chamber and counted the votes for President and Vice-President. On the 15th, John Adams, the President-elect, addressed the Senate on his retirement from the body for the remainder of the session, and on the 22d the Senate made answer to the address. On March 1st the Senate considered a bill the President had vetoed, to amend the act "to ascertain and fix the military establishment of the United States." On March 2d a bill was considered by the Senate for the relief and protection of American seamen. On Saturday, March 4th, President Washington issued a summons to the Senate to meet in their Chamber at 10 o'clock to receive any communication which the President may lay before them.

On December 14, 1796, a bill was discussed in the House to report the debates. A member inquired the cost, and thought "the expense altogether unnecessary." He said that if the debates of the House were printed, and four or five copies given to each member, they would employ all the mails of the United States. The question was debated at some length. On March 1, 1797, the questions of duties on distilled spirits and protection to American seamen were discussed in the House. On March 2d a bill making appropriations for the military establishment was discussed, and among the items agreed to was one "for the payment of the Army, $356,450." Naval appropriations were also discussed, and Mr. Smith, a member from South Carolina, proposed to add $172,000 for finishing the three frigates United States, Constitution, and Constellation, but Mr. Nicholas opposed the appropriation of so large a sum. On March 3d sundry bills were passed, and an evening session was held. The last hours were occupied in a debate upon a resolution expressing sympathy for the sufferings of General Lafayette in his long and rigorous imprisonment, and as to measures that should be adopted toward effecting his restoration to liberty. Mr. Livingston reminded the House that Lafayette "came here from the pompous ease of a foreign court; he voluntarily served the cause of America and bled for her;" that "besides spending a princely fortune in our cause, he asked nothing, nor would accept any compensation for his services." For want of time, no final action was taken upon the resolution, and about 11 o'clock on the evening of March 3d the House adjourned sine die.

The morning of March 4th had arrived, and Congress Hall, on Chestnut street, in which Congress held its sessions, was the spot to which all eyes were turned. Close by stood, anchored to the earth, the most sacred temple on American soil—"the Runnymede of our nation"—old Independence Hall, the refuge and the rock of the fathers of the Revolution. Before noon time the members of the Senate, conducted by the Vice-President, Thomas Jefferson, who had just taken the oath of office, and accompanied by the officers of the Federal and State governments and a vast concourse of eminent citizens, repaired to the Hall of the House of Representatives, where a large audience of ladies and gentlemen had assembled to witness the ceremonies. What an imposing assemblage of illustrious men, representatives of the States and of the people—among them James Madison, Albert Gallatin, Fisher Ames, Andrew Jackson, John Langdon, Richard Stockton, and John Laurence—gathered there in the nation's infancy to witness the retirement to private life of the most eminent citizen of the Republic, and to participate in the ceremonies of clothing with the power and authority of the Presidential office John Adams, the most distinguished citizen of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Near the Speaker's chair sat Thomas Jefferson, whom Adams had called twenty years before the man with "the masterly pen." In front of the Speaker's chair sat Chief Justice Ellsworth, who was to administer the oath, and with him three other judges of the Supreme Court—Cushing, Wilson, and Iredell. Very soon loud cheering was heard in the streets, and in a few moments Washington entered the Chamber, followed by Adams. The whole audience arose and greeted them with enthusiastic cheers. The historian tells us that when they were seated perfect silence reigned, and Washington arose, with the most commanding dignity and self-control, and proceeded to read in a firm, clear voice a brief valedictory. He wore a full suit of black. Mr. Adams wore a full suit of bright drab, with lash or loose cuffs to his coat, and wrist ruffles. The audience listened to Washington in breathless silence, as if they "desired to hear him breathe and catch his breath in homage of their hearts." While Washington was speaking, Adams covered his face with both hands, the sleeves of his coat being moistened with tears. Washington was composed until the close of the address, but when nervous sobs broke loose and tears covered the faces of the audience, the great man was shaken.

Look at the mighty men grouped together in that single Chamber—Washington, the foremost figure of the human race, his name as imperishable "as if it were written between Orion and the Pleiades;" Jefferson and Adams, "the pen and the tongue, the masterly author and the no less masterly advocate of the Declaration." Besides these were others standing beside them whose fame will be as enduring as our language or our liberties. What a scene for an artist, what a theme for the historian. With what joy would Chatham, who bravely defended the cause of the Colonies, have looked down upon that presence. With what majestic eloquence would Edmund Burke again have thrilled the British House of Commons, as he did twenty years before, when he reminded the ministry that the close affection which grows from kindred blood and from equal privileges and protection "are ties which, though light as air, are as strong as links of iron." A few whose names will survive while our language is spoken and our liberties are preserved were not there. Old Samuel Adams, with hands of iron and nerves of steel, the Martin Luther of the Revolution, was absent. Patrick Henry, whose voice had thrilled the Colonies with its magnetic eloquence—declared by Jefferson to be the greatest orator that ever lived, and by John Randolph to be "Shakespeare and Garrick combined"—offered by Washington the Chief Justiceship of the United States, was not there.

Thus just a century ago closed the official career of our great Washington. He had enjoyed the unbounded confidence of his countrymen. Almighty God had raised him up to lead the armies of the Revolution, and had given him wisdom and courage to meet the dangers and perils that surrounded the Colonies in their struggle for liberty. In peace he had guided the first footsteps of the young nation, and stood a faithful sentinel to guard its life against every peril. Advancing years and his earnest desire to retire to the grateful shades of his own Mount Vernon prompted him to surrender to his countrymen the great trust committed to his care; and in words of affection, of tenderness and love, of deepest solicitude for their welfare and prosperity, and for the maintenance, growth, progress, power, and supremacy of the nation, he left the true impress of his great heart and mind in his last earnest messages of advice and counsel to his countrymen.

With great respect,

JAMES H. EMBRY.

Hon. JOHN B. GORDON,
Senator from Georgia.

PERRINE LAND GRANT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Public Lands in regard to the Perrine land grant in Florida. The committee have patiently investigated this case; in fact, they have had it under advisement in one way and another for the past two years, and during the past two weeks they have had quite a full and thorough investigation. The committee have agreed on this report unanimously with the exception of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and inasmuch as so much attention has been attracted to the case, I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD, and may also be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to address myself briefly to the report which has just been made.

I did not join in the report, but I think the facts related in the report itself justify a resolution to vacate this grant and throw these lands open to settlement.

What are the facts? In 1838 Congress granted to Mr. Perrine one township of land—about 23,000 acres—in southern Florida, for the cultivation of tropical plants. Perrine died. No effort had been made to comply with the grant. The right was then conferred upon his widow and his heirs. No effort has been made for more than forty years to comply with the conditions of the grant, and there is no evidence that previous to that time any compliance had been had. A few years ago several settlers went upon these lands and claimed them under the homestead law. Knowing that for very many years there had been no effort on the part of anyone to comply with the condition of the grant, the settlers had a right to suppose that Congress would open these lands and they would be allowed to file their homestead entries.

Last year a railroad was built into this vicinity. The company looked up the condition of this grant, sought the Perrine heirs, and made a contract with them by which the railroad company, if they could secure a patent from the Government, should have one-half of the land, less the amount it would take to satisfy the settlers. Mark you, Mr. President, these settlers were not upon the land under the conditions of the grant, but were there as homesteaders, hoping to enter the land under the homestead law.

The agents of the railroad company convinced a part of the settlers that the title of the Perrines, if they should go on at this late day and comply with the conditions of the grant, would be perfect, and they would be ousted from their holdings, and thus secured a contract by which each settler, when the Perrine title was perfected, was to receive 40 acres of land upon which were located their improvements. I say part of the settlers made this arrangement.

The railroad company employed attorneys at a town 15 miles away, who proceeded to secure other settlers to go upon this grant This was in June, 1896. They located thirty-five or forty families. They cultivated small tracts of ground. In some instances, although the grant required that there should be a settler on each section, no ground was placed under cultivation. Trees were girdled, underbrush taken out, and a few so-called tropical plants planted. One acre was the extent of the improvement upon each section, except in the case of the old settlers, who were transformed into Perrine settlers by the contract with the railroad company.

What is more, the settlers who were to engage in the actual cultivation and propagation of tropical plants made no planting until the last of October and in November, and the evidence shows that three, at least, of the settlers did not go on the land until November, and in December they made their proof. In December they submitted their proof, and the patent issued.

Mr. President, I propose to show what these settlers had to do to acquire title, if the grant had been complied with:

> That whenever any section of land in said tract shall be really occupied by a bona fide settler actually engaged in the propagation and cultivation of valuable tropical plants, and upon proof thereof being made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent shall issue to the said Henry Perrine and his associates.

It provides that, when occupied by bona fide settlers actually engaged in the cultivation and propagation of valuable tropical plants. Have these conditions been accomplished by the planting among the timber, among a few girdled trees, of a few tropical plants in November, and making the proof in December? Is the putting of these plants in the ground in November, and then making the proof in December, a compliance? Is the putting of these plants in the ground in November, and then coming before the Land Department and swearing that they are engaged in the cultivation of tropical plants, a compliance with the grant? There is not even a semblance of compliance. The fact of the matter is that the proof shows that of these 35 or 40 settlers who were placed upon the land by the railroad company only 8 remain.

The affidavit of Sarah Roberts says:

> After the back settlers made their attempted proof for the railroad company, they left the grant with but a few exceptions.

The affidavit of John W. Roberts says:

> I know that some of them went off after they proved up. * * * I know of a few of them that are trying to sell out their claims, etc.

It appears that the railroad company found that this township of land had been granted to Perrine; that time was not the essence of the contract; that an actual and bona fide compliance before forfeiture on the part of Congress would give a title. What I complain of is that there is no compliance with the grant whatever, and that the Department could not help but know that there was no compliance with it. Is it a cultivation of tropical plants, or is it a determination as to whether they are valuable tropical plants; that they are furnished by the railroad in November, planted by the settler in small tracts in the timber, and abandoned to die and disappear, and proof is made in December, one month afterwards? It seems to me that the proof, the admitted case, is sufficient to justify a forfeiture of this grant.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what is the business before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The Senator from New York rises to a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] having made a report from the Committee on Public Lands, the Senator from South Dakota, from the same committee, is making an oral statement upon the subject.

Mr. PLATT. I do not wish to interfere with the statement of the Senator from South Dakota, but I do think that, under the circumstances, this is not in exact accord with the unanimous consent given by the Senate for the consideration of House bills. I did not suppose it would take any time when the report was presented. I have not felt like objecting or calling for the regular order until the Senator from South Dakota had finished his speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the regular order is the consideration of unobjected House bills upon the Calendar. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me for a moment? I hope that when the Senator from South Dakota concludes his speech the Senator from Idaho will be given an opportunity to speak.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. PLATT. No; we can not do that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall conclude my statement at once.

Mr. BERRY. It is certainly unfair to let the statement of the Senator from South Dakota be made unless an opportunity is given to the Senator from Idaho to reply thereto.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Idaho is not permitted to reply, which seems to be the purpose, then I object to further proceeding with this matter, and ask for the regular order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think we can dispose of this matter very quickly. I have a written statement.

Mr. HILL. How dispose of it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have a written statement on this matter and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HILL. That is all right.

Mr. HOAR rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know about that. What is the paper?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is a statement of the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of the Senate is the consideration of unobjected House bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts on the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. The question of order is that it is not what the Chair has stated, but it is the request for unanimous consent. I rose to object before the Chair announced that unanimous consent was granted. I have the highest desire to do what would be agreeable to the Senator from South Dakota, but the introduction into the Senate and the printing in the RECORD of things not said in debate is a great departure from the precedents, and it will lead to infinite mischief, and I must object. I should yield to that Senator any time of my own for any statement, but I will not consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to object to the insertion in the RECORD of the paper presented by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. HOAR. I rose in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the request of the Senator from South Dakota be granted by unanimous consent?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to state that it is a statement of the views of the minority on this question.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. If it is to be printed as a report, I will not object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, I desire to have the views of the minority read by the Secretary, and I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. It may be printed in the RECORD as a speech.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not desire to print it as a speech, but to print it in the RECORD as the views of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless objection is interposed, the statement will be treated as a minority report of the committee and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. And also as a document. Let it be printed with the other report.

Mr. BERRY. Yes; with the other report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request that it shall also be printed in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. DUBOIS. That is entirely satisfactory. I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate, and I shall not. The action of the Department of the Interior in granting these patents is not and can not fairly be a subject of criticism. If blame attaches to anybody in this transaction, it is to the Congress itself for not annulling the grant long ago. The committee patiently went over this case, and there can be no just criticism whatever of the views of the majority of the committee. The views of all the members of the committee, except the Senator from South Dakota, are to be printed in the RECORD. His answer is to be printed in the RECORD, and that, I think, will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I desire to print as a part of my views a brief with regard to the law on the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BERRY. Unless the Senator makes that a part of his minority report, I shall object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make it a part of the minority report. Now, both reports are to be printed in the RECORD, and that is all I desire.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

The report of the committee is as follows:

Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany Senate resolution No. 302:

RESOLUTION.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by the full committee or by a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, be authorized to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine grant, in the State of Florida, with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

The Committee on Public Lands, having had under consideration the subject-matter referred to in the foregoing resolution, after full investigation of the facts as presented by the record and witnesses examined, and consideration of the law as determined by the United States Supreme Court, reports as follows:

That the patent was issued on proofs submitted to and approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, under the acts of Congress of July 7, 1838, and February 18, 1841, which read as follows:

[Act of July 7, 1838.]

Whereas in obedience to the Treasury circular of the 6th of September, 1827 Dr. Henry Perrine, late American consul at Campeachy, has distinguished himself by his persevering exertions to introduce tropical plants into the United States; and

Whereas he has demonstrated the existence of a tropical climate in southern Florida, and has shown the consequent certainty of the immediate domestication of tropical plants in tropical Florida, and the great probability of their gradual acclimation throughout all our Southern and Southwestern States, especially of such profitable plants as propagate themselves on the poorest soils; and

Whereas if the enterprise should be successful, it will render valuable our hitherto worthless soils, by covering them with a dense population of small cultivators and family manufacturers, and will thus promote the peace, prosperity, and permanency of the Union: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a township of land is hereby granted to Dr. Henry Perrine and his associates, in the southern extremity of the peninsula of east Florida, to be located in one body of 6 miles square, upon any portion of the public lands below 26 degrees north latitude.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said tract of land shall be located within two years from this date, by said Henry Perrine, and shall be surveyed under his direction, by the surveyor of Florida, provided that it shall not embrace any land having sufficient quantities of naval timber to be reserved to the United States, nor any site for maritime ports or cities.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever any section of land in said tract shall be really occupied by a bona fide settler, actually engaged in the propagation or cultivation of valuable tropical plants, and upon proof thereof being made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent shall issue to the said Henry Perrine and his associates.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every section of land in the tract aforesaid which shall not be occupied by an actual settler, positively engaged in the propagation or cultivation of useful tropical plants, within eight years from the location of said tract, or when the said adjacent territory shall be surveyed and offered for sale, shall be forfeited to the United States. (5 Stats., 302.)

[Act of February 18, 1841.]

Whereas, under the provisions of the act to which this act is a supplement, Dr. Henry Perrine made, in the manner thereby required, the location therein authorized, and, while engaged in the necessary measure to carry into effect the object contemplated by said act, was murdered by the Seminole Indians; and

Whereas Mrs. Ann F. Perrine, the widow of the said Doctor Perrine, is anxious to continue the undertaking thus commenced by her late husband, but is prevented from so doing by the continuance of the Indian war in Florida: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That Mrs. Ann F. Perrine, the widow of the said Henry Perrine, and Sarah Ann Perrine, Hester M. S. Perrine, and Henry E. Perrine, his surviving children, are hereby declared to be entitled to all the rights and privileges vested in and granted to the said Dr. Henry Perrine by the act to which this is supplement, and that the time limited by said act, in which every section of said grant should be occupied to prevent the forfeiture of the same to the United States be, and the same is hereby, extended to eight years from and after the time when the present Indian war in Florida shall cease and determine.

From the record it appears that the land selected was officially surveyed in 1847, and then designated on the public maps as "Perrine grant," and that during said year the Perrine heirs caused the settlement on the grant of thirty-six families from the Bahama Islands. These families are said to have been driven away by the Indians in 1848. Thenceforward and until a recent date, said heirs were seeking to secure a confirmation of the title by Congressional action, without having attempted any compliance with the conditions of the grant other than as indicated.

In 1873 application was made by the State of Florida to list the lands embraced within the grant to the State under the swamp-land act of 1850, which application was refused upon the ground that the lands belonged to the Perrine heirs.

In 1889 application of certain parties to use the Perrine land for the propagation of valuable tropical plants was refused by the Secretary of the Interior on the ground that the Perrine heirs still seemed to have an interest in the land. Nothing further appears to have been done in the way of general settlement upon the land until 1896, although the evidence shows that some thirteen squatters have been residing upon the grant for terms varying from two to thirty years.

In December, 1895, a bill was introduced in the Senate, probably at the instance of said squatters, providing for the forfeiture of the entire grant, and in response to inquiries the Secretary of the Interior informed this committee in January, 1896, that the interest of the Perrine heirs in the grant was still recognized by the Department.

Now in regard to the issue of the patent. The record and the testimony show that in the spring of 1896 the Perrine heirs and their associates entered into written contracts with all of the squatters then upon the grant and numerous other persons who were by them induced to become settlers thereon, by the terms of which said contracts said squatters and other persons bargained and agreed to assist said heirs and their associates in complying with the conditions and requirements of said granting acts; and for their services and expenses in the premises it was agreed that each of the contracting settlers should receive portions of the grant, varying from 40 to 80 acres each.

Early in December, 1896, proofs were prepared and filed in the General Land Office, consisting of some 400 affidavits, showing compliance with the terms and conditions of the granting acts. These proofs were considered and examined for over thirty days by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and were, by each of said officers, approved as showing full and complete compliance with the law. These proofs applied to each section, showing that upon each section a settlement had been made and valuable tropical plants placed thereon, which were, at the date of the submission of the proofs, in a growing condition. It further appears from the said affidavits that about 50 settlers, including the squatters, were located upon the grant. Having reached the conclusion that the proofs showed a satisfactory compliance with the grant, said proofs not being controverted as to settlement and improvements, the Department concluded that the grantees were entitled to patent and in pursuance of such conclusion patent was issued in the regular and orderly course of business.

It does not appear from the record or from any testimony presented to the committee that there was any departure from customary procedure in the Land Office or the office of the Secretary of the Interior in connection with the filing of the proofs, the examination thereof, the issuance of the patent, or any other act or circumstance connected therewith.

The Department held, and properly so, as the committee believes, that the grant was one in præsenti and that at any time before a formal declaration of forfeiture by Congress for failure to comply with the conditions subsequent, the grantees had the right to comply with the terms of the grant and to submit proof of such compliance, and that upon the filing of such proof of compliance, in good faith, with the terms and conditions of the grant and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the grantees became entitled to a patent.

From the time of the reference of the aforesaid bill to the committee much difficulty has been encountered in attempting to deal equitably and justly with the conflicting interests, because of disputed questions of fact as to the extent to which the heirs had complied with the conditions of the grant prior to the introduction of the bill. Pending the attempt by the committee to reach a just conclusion, the said Perrine heirs and their associates proceeded to and did comply, technically at least, with the terms of the grant as to each section embraced therein and furnished proof thereof as stated. In the opinion of the committee neither criticism nor blame can be properly attached to the officers of the Government in approving the proofs and issuing the patent. There does not appear either in the record or in the testimony presented to the committee any evidence of either fraud or mistake of fact or law.

During the investigation prosecuted in conformity with the resolution of the Senate, the record and the testimony have shown that the grant had been made by Congress not only in contemplation of services to be rendered, but as recognition of services theretofore rendered by Dr. Perrine in introducing and experimenting with the growth of valuable tropical plants in the United States. During his efforts to comply with the grant, as stated in the act of 1841, Dr. Perrine was killed by the Indians. Again in 1849 the efforts of his heirs to comply with the law were frustrated by the interference of the hostile Seminole Indians. Evidence of the efforts of Dr. Perrine to comply with the law remains throughout southern Florida in the wide distribution of sisal hemp, which seems to have been introduced by him on this grant, and is now growing wild in that section of the country.

All the facts being considered, the case of the heirs of Dr. Perrine, as presented to the committee by the testimony and the record, bears every evidence of merit and good faith. The laches of the heirs in complying with the conditions prescribed in the granting acts seem to have proceeded from inability so to do. The testimony discloses the fact that in 1890, stimulated no doubt by the proposed forfeiture, these heirs were driven to make what appears to be, as disclosed before the committee in the investigation, a hard bargain with the Florida and East Coast Railway Company, whereby said corporation, in consideration of furnishing the means to earn the grant, obtained from the heirs a contract for the conveyance of about 10,000 acres of the land embraced therein. The friction between the heirs and the settlers which resulted in the presentation of the resolution for the investigation of the issuance of patent originated in contention for better terms by about nine out of fifty settlers who insisted that the land agent of the railroad company who contracted with them on behalf of the Perrine heirs and said railroad company, which had become associated with them, orally agreed to have a dike and canal constructed for the improvement of the grant. Some of the settlers insisted that said dike and canal should be constructed before patent was obtained, or in lieu thereof that they should receive a greater quantity of land than called for by their written contracts.

The evidence presented does not controvert the proofs submitted to the Department upon which the patent was issued, the settlement and the improvements on all the sections being shown to be as alleged by the proofs on file in the land office.

The only additional precaution the Department could have taken in the premises would have been to send a special agent to Florida to ascertain if the facts disclosed by an examination of the land as to settlement and improvements sustained the averments in the obviously hastily prepared proofs of compliance with the terms of the grant. The funds and force were at the disposal of the Department for the purpose indicated.

The evidence presented to the committee shows that with the exception of the squatters and the families from the Bahama Islands already mentioned, settlements on the land began only last May, and no tropical plants were set out by the agents or settlers who were acting for the Perrine heirs and the railroad company until October. From the nature of the land, being without roads and much of it under water, it was apparently impossible to build substantial houses, and those erected were not substantial, some of them being only covered with paper and constructed of pine logs. The tropical plants, in most cases, cover only 1 acre, and have been set out among trees in some instances, showing that an effort had been made to comply with the letter rather than the spirit of the law. Affidavits have been filed indicating that already some of these settlers have left their new homes, if that word can be applied to the settlements, and the plants set out in October are in some instances said to be dying or dead for the want of attention. The work of settlement began in May; the tropical plants were set out in October and November; proofs were begun in December and filed with the Department, and the patent issued on the 4th of February. It is thus seen that the Perrines and their associates, the railroad company and the attorneys who worked on a commission, have obtained 23,000 acres of Government land under conditions which in a year's time may materially change.

It can not be supposed that it was the intention of Congress to give away this large body of land upon pretense of complying with the conditions, and owing to the short time since the "so-called" settlements were made and the tropical plants set out, it is impossible to tell at this time whether a fraud has been perpetrated upon the Government or not. The record and proof now sustains the patent. We were assured by those who were authorized to speak that the rights of all squatters, as set forth in their contracts with the railroad company, would be protected and that deeds would be made to them. If this pledge be complied with in good faith, it will be probably to the best interest of all concerned to leave the matter as it is, as, should the grant be forfeited, it would either go to the State of Florida as swamp land or remain undeveloped, it being very evident that it would require considerable capital to open it and protect it from the overflow of the everglades. If the pledge of fair dealing with the squatters and settlers is not redeemed, further action by Congress may be in order.

The views of the minority are as follows:

The evidence shows that not until about May, 1896, over forty years after the termination of the Seminole Indian war, did the heirs or associates of Dr. Henry Perrine ever pretend to perform the conditions named in the acts of Congress of 1841.

That about said time the said Perrine heirs, being without means or facilities, associated with them the Florida East Coast Railway, by one J. E. Ingraham, land commissioner of said company, to assist the said heirs in carrying out the enterprise, agreeing with said company that upon a patent being issued to the said Perrines by the United States the interest in said land was to be divided as follows: The said Perrines to receive one-half, the said railroad company one-half, less the interest to be given to certain settlers, as hereinafter stated.

That in compliance with said agreement and about the month of June, 1896, an alleged agreement was entered into by and between the settlers and the said Ingraham on the part of the railway company, whereby in consideration of said settlers withdrawing all proceedings before the Land Department of the United States antagonistic to the claim of title of the heirs of the Perrines * * * and further to make proof as required, etc., the said company covenanted to deed to said settlers a portion of said Perrine land to the extent of 40 each, etc. The said railway company covenanting "that it will use its good offices to procure from the United States the conformation of the title to the lands known as Perrine grant and the issuance of a patent therefor."

The evidence shows that much of the land on what is termed the back sections of the Perrine grant is separated, a large portion of the year, by surface water from the shore land on Biscayne Bay, which materially depreciates the value of said back sections, but by the construction of proper dikes and canals for drainage purposes, said back sections would be worth four times as much as in the present state. That at the time said agreement was made between the said railroad company and the settlers whereby said settlers should receive 40 acres each it was represented by the railroad company and verbally promised that said company would construct the necessary canals and dikes, which would make each said 40 acres as valuable as 160 acres without the same; and it is strenuously contended by said settlers in their protests and affidavits on file that they were led into making said agreement relying upon said representations, but that said canals and dikes have never been so constructed, and the letter on file and in evidence from Mr. Ingraham discloses the intention of said company not to do so.

That in November, 1896, one E. I. Robinson, holding power of attorney from some of the objecting settlers, addressed a letter to the Interior Department, requesting to be advised of the proper form and mode of presenting protests and petitions protesting against the issuing of said patent to the Perrine heirs, whereupon he received the following letter:

"MR. E. I. ROBINSON, Jacksonville, Fla.

"SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of November 16, 1896, inclosing a letter from James A. Smith, one of the settlers on the Perrine grant, and a paper which appears to be a contract or agreement between Mrs. Annie R. Woodward, one of the settlers on 40 acres of land within said grant, and the Florida East Coast Railroad Company, in which the company agrees, in consideration of settlement, improvement, and cultivation for such time as may be required by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, 'to use its good offices to secure from the United States without delay a confirmation of the title to the heirs of Henry Perrine for the land known as the Perrine grant, and to secure from said heirs a deed of conveyance to said settlers.'

"You ask to be instructed as to the form of petition or protest required to be filed in your (this) office."

"You are advised in reply that the matter of the Perrine grant is pending before Congress, and any petition with regard to the same should be made to Congress. I herewith inclose a copy of Senate bill No. 161 relative to the lands embraced in said grant introduced by Senator CALL, December 3, 1895. I am unable to give you any further information on the subject.

"Very respectfully,

"E. F. BEST."

In compliance with said letter, all protests and petitions which were properly sworn to and executed were transmitted to Congress and never found their way to the Interior Department. While copies of the same were before the Department, yet it was contended by the attorney for the Perrines (see his brief) that they should not be considered, being only copies, as against the sworn proofs and affidavits on file, and as a matter of fact they were not considered.

(Mr. Lionenberger, of the Department, stating before the committee that no affidavits were on file, only copies.)

It was contended by counsel for the Perrines that at the time of the Best letter the proofs were not filed and the matter was not before the Department. (Has not this matter been before the Department for years?) In any event, whether or not the settlers were so advised by the Department with the intention of deceiving them, the facts remain that they were deceived, and their protests not considered, and we contend that if the Department had been one-half as zealous in desiring to protect the interests of the settlers as they were in "railroading" the patent through for the Perrines, that as soon as it discovered its mistake that said application for patent was pending, it would have notified said settlers of the proper place to file their petitions and protests.

The Department certainly had ample opportunity of correcting its mistake, and not doing so, it bears the earmarks of "suppressio veri."

All of the improvements up until about the middle of 1896 that were made upon the Perrine grant were made by squatters and settlers locating upon said grant, not as settlers under the Perrine grant, but by settlers who had a right to expect that said grant would be forfeited by Congress by reason of having so long remained unappropriated by the Perrine heirs, and who in that belief desired and determined to make homes for themselves with a view of perfecting their titles under the land laws of the United States.

See case of Lake Superior Ship Canal Railroad and Iron Company vs. Cunningham (155 U. S., 370-384), wherein it is said:

"If a party entering upon a tract, although he knew it was within the limits of an old railroad grant, did so under the honest belief and expectation that the grant is not technically extinguished by lapse of time, had remained so long unappropriated by any beneficiary that Congress would shortly resume it, and in that belief determined to make for himself a home thereon with a view of perfecting his title under the land laws of the United States, when the forfeiture should be finally decided, it must be held, we think, that he is within the term of this confirmatory act and bona fide claimant of a homestead."

That subsequent to the agreement between the Perrine heirs and the said railroad company, said company, through its agent, caused settlers to be located on all unsettled sections, which so-called settlers we submit the evidence shows were not actual, bona fide settlers.

See affidavit of Sarah Roberts, which says:

"After the back settlers made their attempted proof for the railroad company, they left the grant, with but a few exceptions."

See also affidavit of John W. Roberts:

"I know that some of them went off after they proved up; but now they are coming back. I know of a few of them that are trying to sell out their claims."

Also see affidavit of James A. Smith:

"That he, with Mehring and others, have (been) inspecting these new settlers' places, and find sixteen of these back settlers have apparently deserted; and most of the houses are incomplete, and but few door shutters and but few wells, and some places they have no tools or any evidences that their owner had any further use for them. Most of their trees are dead, and what ain't are dying for want of work and care. There is no grub in their houses, and some have no cooking utensils. Some are trying to sell out their claims." * * *

Also see affidavit of E. W. Sigsbee and George H. Mehring, who swear to the same facts as are set forth in the Smith affidavit; also affidavit of John F. Roberts, who states that the new men, who made proofs on the back sections for the Perrines by girdling a few trees and building pole tents, are away, with the exception of seven or eight.

That when proof was made there were present S. H. Richmond, a specially employed agent of the company; George A. MacDonald, whose evidence discloses the fact that he was employed by the railroad company and who acted in the capacity of a professional witness to a greater number of the proofs, appearing in some cases as a disinterested witness; also Eugene F. McKinley, attorney for said company, specially delegated to superintend the making of said proofs.

Thirteen of said settlers objected to the making of said proofs for the reason that said company refused to comply with its promises to construct said canal. Nine of the thirteen, to wit, J. A. Smith, Ephriam W. Sigsbee, J. W. Roberts, J. F. Roberts, Sarah M. Roberts, George H. Mehring, Robert O. Swindel, E. L. Robinson, and Annie R. Woodward, persisted and continued to refuse to make proof, and have never done so; nevertheless said railroad companies' agent secured other persons, without said objecting settlers' knowledge or consent, to make affidavits of said objecting settlers' occupancy and improvements, as involuntary settlers under the Perrine grant, instead of settlers expecting to become homesteaders.

And said sections were thereby involuntarily metamorphosed from "expectant homesteaders" to Perrine settlers; which act was sanctioned by the Department, as appears from the letter of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office during the investigation before the committee, on file with the committee, in which it is stated:

"I am in receipt of your letter of this date, asking me to furnish you to-day at the Senate a list of all persons claiming to be settlers on the Perrine grant under the Perrine heirs. Following is a list referred to, so far as I see appears on the records of this office."

Then follows a list in the honorable Commissioner's letter, in which is included the names of the above objecting settlers, who have never claimed under the Perrine heirs and who have never signed or made proof and who have strenuously objected to making said proof because the contract they entered into with the railroad company to make said proof was made under duress, coercion, and false and fraudulent representations, as are set forth in their protests, a copy of which protests was filed with the Department, but, as the records of the office show, were not considered because the same were not sworn to.

In the matter of the investigation of the United States patent issued to the heirs of Dr. Henry Perrine to certain lands in Florida, under acts of Congress of 1838 and 1841, pending before the honorable Committee on Public Lands of the United States Senate.

BRIEF IN BEHALF OF THE CONTESTING SETTLERS.

[E. V. Brookshire, counsel for contestants.]

We desire to call your attention to a number of cases arising in Oregon under the Congressional act known as the donation act, which we are convinced have a direct application to the questions of law and fact involved in the Perrine grant.

In the case of Lee vs. Summers (2 Oregon, 200) we find this language:

"Where Congress grants land in words of present grant, the legal title passes to the grantee." (13 Peters, 449; 6 Cranch, 128; 3 L. D., 244; 2 Wheaton, 148; 12 Peters, 554.)

The cases just cited show that the title vests immediately in the donee, not the less because the title vests in him conditionally and subject to be defeated by his failure to comply with the law, nor because the borders are yet to be determined by survey.

The right to resist a patent improperly issued, as we believe the Perrine patent to have been, rests only with the Government and those who stand in an attitude lawfully to claim under the Government.

In the Oregon case cited we find the following language:

"This subject is reviewed by Judge Field in the case of Moore vs. Wilkenson (13 Cal., 427), where it is laid down that a patent can not be set aside except in favor of those whose title was at the time such as to enable them to resist any action of the Government respecting it."

Therefore, we think it clear that the settlers on the Perrine grant, being unable to resist a forfeiture of the grant by the Government, would be unable to attack the patent, which we believe to be improperly issued, consequently their rights can only be saved by the Government asserting its right in the premises because the Perrines have failed to comply with the conditions subsequent within the time prescribed in the act making the grant.

In the case of Blakesly vs. Caywood (4 Oregon, 279; in syllabus) we find this language:

"The donee takes upon conditions subsequent—by operation of the donation act the donee acquires the land in fee, subject to the conditions specified in the act. They are conditions subsequent, and it is in the power of the donee to render the estate absolute by performance of the conditions."

The donation act requires that the citizens should be naturalized before they should be entitled to a patent from the Government, and the Blakesly case holds that these conditions, as well as all others, had to be strictly complied with.

Dolph vs. Barney (5 Oregon; 191 in syllabus):

"The donation act is a grant in presenti of an estate in fee, subject to be defeated by noncompliance with the conditions subsequent therein expressed."

It is decided in this case that after an amendment was made to the donation act in 1854 that the husband and wife, having complied strictly with all the conditions subsequent provided in the act, possessed the power of alienation of the land before the issue of the patent, and the court in the body of its opinion uses this language to explain what kind of title was conveyed to the grantee by the Government when he settled upon the land:

"To views made of the character of the grant as expressed in the opinion referred to we yield our full assent and hold the donation act to be a grant in presenti of an estate in fee, subject to be defeated by noncompliance of the conditions subsequent therein expressed, upon the completion of the residence and cultivation required by the fourth section, the condition of defeasance no longer attached and the estate from a base or qualified fee became a fee simple absolute, which by relation must be held to have had its inception at the date when the donee first entered upon the land with the intention of complying with the requirements of the law."

It will be remembered that under numerous railroad grants it has been held that when the maps of different locations were filed and the Secretary of the Interior had, by Executive order, withdrawn the land from the body of the public domain, that such title as the railroad had in the advance of their performance of the conditions subsequent vested as of the date of the grant; to use the language of the court in the Dolph case, "by relation."

In the case of McKay vs. Freeman, 6 Oregon, 440, it was held that "where a donation claimant had complied with all the conditions of the grant so as to entitle him to a patent, and thereafter conveyed the tract, his wife not joining, and he dying before patent was issued, held that his widow was entitled to dower in the tract."

We cite the above to show that in all these cases there can be no waiver of the conditions subsequent attached to the grant.

The strict performance of the conditions subsequent attached to the grant is the consideration which passes to the Government; in other words, many of the cases use this language in substance:

"The claimant must earn the land by performing the conditions subsequent within the time prescribed in the act making the grant."

The material thing required by the Government is that all the conditions of the grant must be complied with. To illustrate, it was held in Farris vs. Hayes, 7 Oregon 81, "That if the husband had not complied with all the conditions of the grant by residence, cultivation, etc., before his death, his wife took no dower."

The Oregon decisions construing the donation act held that those taking under it from the beginning of their settlements took a base or qualified fee, and that when all the conditions subsequent necessary to entitle them to a patent had been fully performed, that they were possessed of a fee simple absolute, and entitled to a patent.

However, it will be seen that the Supreme Court of the United States, construing the Oregon donation act, reached the same end as did the courts of Oregon, but construed the act differently; that is to say, in the case of Hall vs. Russell (11 Otto, 503), the court used this language:

The opening words of section 4 are: "That there shall be and hereby is granted." This is appropriate language in which to express a present grant, but as was well remarked by Mr. Justice Field for the court in Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company vs. Kansas Pacific Railway Company (97 U. S., 491, xxiv, 1006): "It is always to be borne in mind in construing a Congressional grant that the act by which it is made is a law as well as a conveyance and that such effect must be given to it as will carry out the intent of Congress. There can not be a grant unless there is a grantee, and consequently there can not be a present grant unless there is a present grantee. If, then, the law making the grant indicates a future grantee and not a present one, the grant will take effect in the future and not presently. In all the cases in which we have given these words the effect of an immediate and present transfer, it will be found that the law has designated a grantee qualified to take according to the terms of the law and actually in existence at the time. Thus in Rutherford vs. Greene (2 Wheat., 196), the grantee was Major-General Greene; in Lessieur vs. Price (12 How. 59), the State of Missouri; in U. S. vs. Arredondo (6 Peters, 691), Arredondo and Son; in Fremont vs. U. S., (17 How., 542; 58 U. S., xv. 241), Alvarado; in Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wall. 44; 88 U. S., xxii, 551), the State of Wisconsin; in Railroad Company vs. U. S. (92 U. S., 733; xxiii, 634), the State of Kansas; and without particularizing further it may be said generally that in the swamp land cases and all the internal improvement grant cases, where for the most part the question has arisen of late if a grant has been held to take effect presently, the State or some corporation having all the qualifications specified in the act has been designated as grantee. In other words, when an immediate grant was intended, an immediate grantee having all the requisite qualifications, was named."

You will observe that the Supreme Court decided that the language of the Oregon donation act was such as to indicate a present grant, a grant in presenti, but the court says further in construing a Congressional grant, that such effect must be given to the same as will carry out the intent of Congress. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that a settler under the donation act of Oregon, had to be a qualified donee, that is he had to live upon the land and comply with all the conditions subsequent provided for in the act, before he was qualified to obtain a title in fee simple and to be entitled to a patent; and in the language quoted above they stated that where the Supreme Court has held the grant to take effect presently:

"The State or some corporation having all the qualifications specified in the act has been designated as a grantee."

Further along in the opinion we find this language:

"We conclude that, under section 4, there was no grant of the land to a settler until he had qualified himself to take as a grantee by completing his four years of residence and cultivation and performed such other acts in the meantime as the statute required, in order to protect his claim and keep it alive."

In the light of the above decisions we think it is a matter of little consequence whether we say that the Perrines took a legal estate from the beginning under the grant, as was held in the Oregon cases, or whether they obtained a possessory right only; for both the Territorial courts of Oregon and the Supreme Court of the United States have uniformly held that all the conditions subsequent provided in a Congressional grant must be strictly complied with within the time designated in the act, before the donee can obtain an absolute title in fee simple, and the right to demand a patent.

To show the strictness with which conditions subsequent were enforced under the Oregon donation act, we would cite the case of Maynard vs. Hill (125 U. S., 190).

We understand that the Land Department justifies the issuing of the Perrine patent on the law laid down in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wallace, 44). It was said in this case that the Congressional acts of 1856 and 1864 placed the legal title to the lands designated therein in the State of Wisconsin in trust for the construction of the railroad mentioned; second, that the lands designated have not reverted to the United States, although the road was not constructed within the period described, no judicial proceedings or any act on the part of the Government having been taken to forfeit the grant; third, that the legal title to the lands being in the State it was the owner of the logs cut thereon, and could authorize the defendant (the State's agent) to take possession of them wherever found.

The case made by the Perrines is clearly distinguishable from the above case for the reason that the State of Wisconsin was a qualified donee. The State was not required to perform conditions subsequent in order to be intrusted with the legal title to the land.

The legal title passed to Wisconsin in trust, and therefore the State of Wisconsin had a right of action against all persons trespassing upon the land until the United States saw fit to declare the lands forfeited. Wisconsin did not have to earn the land by the performance of conditions subsequent. Wisconsin was not required, under the Congressional act, to pay for the lands. In fact, the consideration for the granted lands contemplated by Congress was the building of the railroad within the time prescribed in the act.

Another case relied upon by the Land Office to sustain the patent is Rutherford vs. Greene's heirs (2 Wheaton, 196). In May, 1780, before the organization of the Federal Government, North Carolina, through her legislature, granted to General Greene 25,000 acres of land, "as a mark of the high sense this State entertains of the extraordinary services of that brave and gallant officer."

This was a present grant, a grant in presenti. General Greene had to do nothing to earn the land. No conditions subsequent were attached to the grant. He was a qualified grantee when the act passed the North Carolina legislature.

A case was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States a few days ago (February 16, 1897), which is directly in point. It is the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Mingus. The United States being greatly concerned in the suit, due to the precedent to be established, Mr. Joseph H.

Call, a special United States attorney, filed a brief in behalf of the United States, in which we find the following language:

"In all the land-grant cases and other cases involving the construction of the Pacific railroad acts this court has declared again and again that effect must be given to the intent of Congress, and such construction and intent will not be defeated or changed by the happening or not happening of events not then in contemplation. (United States vs. Stanford, 161 United States, 412; Railroad vs. Forsythe, 159 United States, 46; United States vs. Southern Pacific, 146 United States, 570; United States vs. Northern Pacific, 152 United States, 284.)

"This court therefore decided in the Southern Pacific case, as a question of law, that the act of 1871 did not surrender the right of forfeiture for breach of the conditions subsequent.

"The right and power of Congress to forfeit a railroad land grant for breach of the condition in failing to construct the road declared in United States vs. Southern Pacific Company, supra, has been reaffirmed in the following later cases: United States vs. Northern Pacific, 152 United States, 284; Lake Superior Railroad vs. Cunningham, 155 United States, 354; Sioux City Railroad vs. United States, 159 United States, 349.

"It is contended by the plaintiff in error that the effect of this act of April 20, 1871, was to postpone the time within which Congress could forfeit the grant for breach of condition to the time of the foreclosure of the mortgage. * * * It was a condition of the grant that not less than 50 miles of railroad should be completed each year after the second year, and that the whole of the road should be constructed, equipped, and finished by July 4, 1878. (See section 8 of the act)."

In July, 1898, Congress declared those lands forfeited which were not earned in compliance with the terms of the grant. Mingus preempted a small tract on the forfeited portion, and the railroad in this suit was trying to take it from him on the ground that the railroad did not have to earn the land in the time prescribed in the grant; in other words, that the railroad did not have to perform the conditions subsequent within the time limited in the act.

You will observe, however, that the court decided in favor of Mingus, and again reaffirmed the doctrine that conditions subsequent attached to a land grant must be fully performed in the time prescribed in the act.

Now, under the Congressional act of July 7, 1838, to Henry Perrine, and the supplementary and amendatory act of February 16, 1841, certain conditions subsequent were imposed, and the two acts have to be construed together in pari materia. The conditions subsequent were as follows:

First. That the grantee should locate the tract within two years from the date of the grant and that the same should be properly surveyed.

Second. That the grant should not embody lands having sufficient quantity of naval timber to be reserved to the United States nor any site for maritime ports or cities.

Third. That every section of the tract shall be really occupied by a bona fide settler actually engaged in propagating or cultivating valuable tropical plants to prevent forfeiture of the same within eight years from and after the time when the present Indian war in Florida shall cease and determine.

Now, the only condition that seems certainly to have been performed was the one providing that the tract should be located within two years after the approval of the act of 1838. This condition subsequent seems to have been performed by Dr. Henry Perrine, for the supplementary act of 1841 makes mention of its performance, but under the evidence presented in this case it can not be pretended that the Perrine heirs performed the third condition subsequent within the time prescribed in the acts with reference to the propagation and cultivation of valuable tropical plants upon all the sections of said grant within eight years after the cessation of the Indian wars supposed to have been prevalent in Florida in 1841.

In fact it is safe to say that for a period of more than thirty years, perhaps forty years, the United States has had the right to declare a forfeiture of the Perrine grant. History informs us that the last of the Seminole Indians took up their abode beyond the Mississippi River prior to 1858; therefore we think it is certain that for more than thirty years the United States has had the undoubted right to declare a forfeiture of the grant. The Perrines have not performed the conditions subsequent in compliance with the terms of the grant, and they have not earned the lands in contemplation of law; the Government has not received the consideration necessary to pass the title. The consideration to go to the Government in contemplation of Congress was the performance of the conditions subsequent within eight years after the cessation of the Indian war prevailing in Florida in 1841.

It would seem clear, then, that the performance of the conditions subsequent necessary to pass the legal title and to warrant the issuing of the patent has undoubtedly failed. It will be remembered, as was said in Dolph vs. Barnard, supra, that the issuing of the patent is a ministerial act, and that the patent is merely the evidence of title.

In our judgment, the issue of the Perrine patent can only be justified upon the theory that the Land Department of our Government is empowered to waive a condition subsequent in a Congressional grant, and upon this point we will state that we do not believe that a well-considered case can be found in any of the law books to justify such a contention.

Will it be contended that a government can lose any of its rights by laches? Will it be contended that the statute of limitations runs against the Government?

We assert, as a matter of law, that the United States is never barred of its right of action by a statute of limitation except where Congress has provided that the United States shall be barred, and, further, that laches can not be imputed to the United States. To sustain this proposition, we would refer you to the case of The United States vs. Thompson. (8 Otto, 486.)

It will certainly be admitted that for more than thirty years last passed the United States has had a right to declare a forfeiture of the Perrine grant. Therefore we state, as a matter of law, that, this right of forfeiture having accrued in favor of the United States, it can never be lost. It is a right that will continue in the Government of the United States indefinitely.

It is certainly not necessary for me to say in this presence that no one but the grantor can raise the question of a breach of a condition subsequent. We do not think that the Government should permit the patent in question to remain unassailed. The safety of the people lies in the strict enforcement of the law.

The decisions of our courts construing Congressional grants have uniformly been that the conditions of a grant have to be strictly complied with. We think that the patent in question could only have been issued upon the theory that the Land Department of the Government can waive a condition subsequent provided in a Congressional act, and that the Government by laches can lose the right of forfeiture which has once accrued. In short, we are satisfied that the Land Department has acted in the issue of the patent beyond the scope of its proper jurisdiction.

The settlers on the Perrine grant, whom we represent, went upon the land in question believing the same to be subject to forfeiture and believing that the United States would declare a forfeiture. Their belief, we insist, was a reasonable one, and therefore we submit that their entry and occupation was not wrongful. They have rights which the Government should protect, and they can only be protected through action on the part of the United States enforcing its rights in the premises.

For a clear definition of the rights of these settlers, we would cite the case of the Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad and Iron Company vs. Cunningham (155 U. S., 354).

We think that Congress would be justified and should, in fact, suggest to the judiciary the propriety of investigating in a proper equity suit all matters arising under the Perrine grant, with a view of ascertaining whether, in fact, the terms and conditions of the grant have been complied with in accordance with law; and whether or not the Land Department has exceeded its proper jurisdiction in the issuing of the patent.

Mr. DUBOIS subsequently said: I wish to request that an additional brief in the Perrine case be also printed in the RECORD as a part of the majority report.

There being no objection, the additional brief was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Before the Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate. Reply brief of Perrine heirs and their associates in re the Perrine grant.]

An act to encourage the introduction and promote the cultivation of tropical plants in the United States.

Whereas in obedience to the Treasury circular of the 6th of September, 1827, Dr. Henry Perrine, late American consul at Campeachy, has distinguished himself by his persevering exertions to introduce tropical plants into the United States; and whereas he has demonstrated the existence of a tropical climate in southern Florida and has shown the consequent certainty of the immediate domestication of tropical plants in tropical Florida and the great probability of their gradual acclimation throughout all our Southern and Southwestern States, especially of such profitable plants as propagate themselves on the poorest soils; and whereas, if the enterprise should be successful, it will render valuable our hitherto worthless soils by covering them with a dense population of small cultivators and family manufacturers, and will thus promote the peace, prosperity, and permanency of the Union: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a township of land is hereby granted to Dr. Henry Perrine and his associates in the southern extremity of the peninsula of east Florida, to be located in one body of 6 miles square upon any portion of the public lands below 29° north latitude.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said tract of land shall be located within two years from this date by said Henry Perrine, and shall be surveyed under his direction by the surveyor of Florida: Provided, That it shall not embrace any land having sufficient quantities of naval timber to be reserved to the United States nor any sites for maritime ports or cities.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever any section of land in said tract shall be really occupied by a bona fide settler actually engaged in the propagation or cultivation of valuable tropical plants, and upon proof thereof being made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent shall issue to the said Henry Perrine and his associates.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every section of land in the tract aforesaid, which shall not be occupied by an actual settler positively engaged in the propagation or cultivation of useful tropical plants within eight years from the location of said tract, or when the adjacent territory shall be surveyed and offered for sale, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Approved July 7, 1838 (5 Stat., 302).

The grant was located; Dr. Perrine erected his dwelling, and began work with all expedition; was massacred by the Indians, his house burned, effects destroyed, and his wife and children, after a most thrilling and terrible experience, barely escaped with their lives. Work was necessarily postponed.

February 18, 1841, the following act was passed (6 Stat., 819):

"An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to encourage the introduction and promote the cultivation of tropical plants,' approved July 7, 1838.

"Whereas under the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement, Dr. Henry Perrine made, in the manner thereby required, the location therein authorized; and while engaged in the necessary measures to carry into effect the objects contemplated by the said act was murdered by the Seminole Indians; and,

Whereas Mrs. Ann F. Perrine, the widow of the said Dr. Perrine, is anxious to continue the undertaking thus commenced by her late husband, but is prevented from so doing by the continuance of the Indian war in Florida: Therefore,

"Be it enacted, etc., That Mrs. Ann F. Perrine, the widow of the said Henry Perrine, and Sarah Ann Perrine, Hester M. S. Perrine, and Henry E. Perrine, his surviving children, are hereby declared to be entitled to all the rights and privileges vested in and granted to the said Dr. Henry Perrine by the act to which this is a supplement, and that the time limited by the said act in which every section of said grant should be occupied to prevent the forfeiture of the same to the United States be, and the same is hereby, extended to eight years from and after the time when the present Indian war in Florida shall cease and determine."

In 1847 the official survey was made. In same year said heirs brought thirty-six families from the Bahamas to the grant, but they were driven away by the Indians. Various official reports show that many tropical fruits and plants were set all over the grant.

The period limited by the act, "in which every section of said grant should be occupied to prevent the forfeiture of the same to the United States," was "extended to eight years from and after the time when the present (then) Indian war in Florida shall cease and determine."

The said war closed in 1855.

The eight years terminated in 1863.

The country was then in the midst of the civil war. It is a matter of common knowledge, and notorious, that it was several years after the close of that civil war before it was practicable to attempt the settlement of this grant.

Then the heirs were erroneously advised that their grant had been forfeited by its terms, and they sought new legislation, which, of course, could not be had, as the acts then in the statutes were ample. The true construction and force of those acts were not known by the heirs until two years ago.

THE LAW OF THE CASE.

In the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wallace, 44) was involved the construction of a grant like that to the Perrine heirs.

The Supreme Court held, referring to the words in the granting act "That there be, and is hereby, granted," the lands, as follows:

"That the act of Congress of June 3, 1856, passed a present interest in the lands designated there can be no doubt. The language used imports a present grant, and admits of no other meaning;" cited prior decision of that court to same effect, and said:

"Numerous other decisions might be cited to the same purport. They establish the conclusion that, unless there are other clauses in a statute restraining the operation of words of the present grant, these must be taken in their natural sense to import an immediate transfer of title, although subsequent proceedings may be required to give precision to that title and attach it to specific tracts. No individual can call in question the validity of the proceedings by which precision is thus given to the title where the United States are satisfied with them."

That grant (June 3, 1856, 11 Stat., 20) was upon condition that if the road was not completed in ten years "no further sales should be made and the lands unsold should revert to the United States."

The court say:

"If the condition be not enforced, the power to sell continues as before the breach, limited only by the objects of the grant and the manner of sale prescribed in the act.

"And it is settled law that no one can take advantage of the nonperformance of a condition subsequent annexed to an estate in fee but the grantor or his heirs, or the successors of the grantor if the grant proceed from an artificial person; and if they do not see fit to assert their right to enforce a forfeiture on that ground, the title remains unimpaired in the grantee. The authorities on this point, with hardly an exception, are all one way from the Year-Books down. And the same doctrine obtains where the grant upon condition proceeds from the Government; no individual can assail the title it has conveyed on the ground that the grantee has failed to perform the conditions annexed," citing several authorities.

The court then said:

"In what manner the reserved right of the grantor for breach of condition must be asserted so as to restore the estate depends upon the character of the grant. If it be a private grant, that right must be asserted by entry or its equivalent. If the grant be a public one, it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law, the equivalent of an inquest of office at common law, finding the fact of forfeiture and adjudging the restoration of the estate on that ground, or there must be some legislative assertion of ownership of the property for breach of the condition, such as an act directing the possession and appropriation of the property, or that it be offered for sale or settlement. At common law the sovereign could not make an entry in person, and, therefore, an office found was necessary to determine the estate; but, as said by this court in a late case, 'the mode of asserting or of resuming the forfeited grant is subject to the legislative authority of the Government. It may be after judicial investigation, or by taking possession directly under the authority of the Government without these preliminary proceedings.' United States vs. Repentigny (supra); Finch vs. Risely (Poph., 53). In the present case no action has been taken either by legislation or judicial proceedings to enforce a forfeiture of the estate granted by the acts of 1856 and 1864. The title remains, therefore, in the State as completely as it existed on the day when the title by location of the route of said railroad acquired precision and became attached to the adjoining alternate sections.

"The title to the land remaining in the State, the lumber cut upon the land belonged to the State."

This said case was an action brought by agent of the State to recover logs, or their value, cut upon said grant lands, and the court gave relief in the same manner as though the State had absolute title after perfect performance of the condition subsequent, to wit, a construction of the road within the term named in the grant. As a fact, however, no part of the road had been constructed, and the time within which the granting acts (1856 and 1864) prescribed that it should be completed, or the grant would be forfeited and the lands revert to the United States, had long before expired.

In Van Wyck vs. Knevals (106 U. S., 360) the same doctrine was reasserted by the court. It said:

"When the route of the road is 'definitely fixed,' no parties can subsequently acquire a preemption right to any portion of the lands covered by the grant. The right of the State and of the company is thenceforth perfect as against subsequent claimants under the United States.

* * * * * * *

"So far as that portion of the road which was completed and accepted is concerned, the contract of the company was executed, and as to the lands patented, the transaction on the part of the Government was closed and the title of the company perfected. The right of the company to the remaining odd-numbered sections adjoining the road completed and accepted, not reserved, is equally clear. If the whole of the proposed road has not been completed, any forfeiture consequent thereon can be asserted only by the grantor, the United States, through judicial proceedings, or through the action of Congress," citing Schulenberg vs. Harriman, supra. "A third party can not take upon himself to enforce conditions attached to the grant when the Government does not complain of their breach. The holder of an invalid title does not strengthen his position by showing how badly the Government has been treated with respect to the property."

So in the Perrine grant, it was a present grant, passing title out of the United States—"is hereby granted to Dr. Henry Perrine and his associates." Eight years from location or survey was the limit given to occupy it by a settler on each section engaged in the propagation or cultivation of useful tropical plants, and in the supplementary act eight years after the close of the Indian war in Florida was the limit to the heirs.

Until a judicial decree of forfeiture, or until an act of Congress to same effect, the Perrine grant was subject to the performance of said settlement condition subsequent. No individual could gain any right to the land, as the Land Office has always warned all persons who have sought information in respect of it.

When that condition subsequent had once been performed and the proofs thereof made and declared satisfactory by the officer appointed by the statute to do this, the Perrine grant became a vested property right.

The right to a patent is equivalent to a patent issued. (Stark vs. Starrs, 6 Wallace, 402; Barney vs. Dolph, 7 Otto, 652.)

Therefore, after that Congress had no constitutional power to declare a forfeiture, nor to direct the courts to do so, because of nonperformance of the condition subsequent, for the lands had then become the property of the Perrines, and Article V of amendments to the Constitution declares that:

"No person shall be * * * deprived of * * * property without due process of law."

Hence, when the proofs of compliance with the granting act in respect of settlement of each section, and the cultivation of tropical plants, had been made and found sufficient by the Land Department, Congress was shorn of jurisdiction, and a pending bill for forfeiture was absolutely discharged and dead.

The patenting of the grant then became a mere ministerial duty, which, if refused, could have been compelled by mandamus.

I venture the assertion that there can be no lawyer in the United States Senate to-day who will question the soundness and conclusiveness of the foregoing legal propositions.

WHAT PROOFS WERE REQUIRED TO BE MADE?

Section 3 of the granting act:

"And be it further enacted, That whenever any section of land in said tract shall be really occupied by a bona fide settler, actually engaged in the propagation or cultivation of valuable tropical plants, and upon proof thereof being made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent shall issue to the said Henry Perrine and his associates."

That statute did not stipulate that the settler should have been there for any certain period of time, nor that the plants should have attained any certain degree of growth, nor that the intentions of the settlers as to the future should be proven.

No instructions in respect of these or any other points or matters were ever issued by the Land Department.

The statute was so express, plain, and unmistakable that construction was not required.

Yet the proofs made were by several, and not merely two witnesses; the settlers had each built his dwelling house, cleared at least an acre of timber, planted at least an acre in valuable tropical plants, several of which were never before cultivated in Florida, nor, so far as we are aware, anywhere in the United States; some of them had very large and valuable improvements, the aggregate of which is under oath estimated by several witnesses before the committee at from $20,000 to $40,000, and each settler (except those who refused to help make their proofs), swears to his good faith and his intention to continue said cultivation in the future, while the testimony before the Senate committee is that the Perrine agents would accept no one as a settler who would not settle with distinct understanding that he was so to continue the propagation or cultivation of valuable tropical plants after title was acquired as before.

It was an evidence of good faith on the part of the Perrines and their associates that they gave the settlers lands for their permanent homes on the grant, instead of making or suggesting any other arrangement.

In respect of those settlers who refused at the last to help make their proofs—thirteen out of over fifty, and we believe and are informed that all except nine subsequently withdrew from their position as protestants—the record shows the following as illustrative of the fullness and conclusiveness of the proofs as made and acted upon by the Land Department:

Ephraim W. Sigsbee refused to sign his proof until he had a bond for title. There are eleven affidavits to his settlement and improvements, such as the statute requires.

George F. Mehring likewise refused. There are eleven affidavits in proof of his settlement and compliance with law.

James A. Smith refused, and the like facts are proven by ten affidavits.

John F. Roberts refused, and the proofs were made by ten affidavits.

John W. Roberts refused, and nine affidavits established the facts.

Sarah M. Roberts refused, and there are six affidavits to her settlement and the requisite cultivation of plants.

Mr. Sigsbee, above named, has reconsidered, however, far enough to make his selection of his 40 acres and ask the Perrines to execute the deed to his wife, as shown to the honorable committee.

THE PROTESTS OF THESE PARTIES WHO REFUSED AS AFORESAID TO SIGN THEIR PROOFS.

Those protests, in the shape of letters and copies of alleged affidavits, show various reasons assigned for said refusal. One wanted a bond for title, or 80 acres of land as a substitute consideration. Some complained that Ingraham, agent for the Perrines and associates, had orally promised to construct a canal and dikes to drain the land and shut out the inflowing water from the Everglades, and others wrote to the irrepressible Robinson that they would give him 40 acres of land each to get them claims of 160 acres. Four promises of this kind appear.

He denies that he advised those settlers or created the trouble. But it is clearly proven that there was no word of dissatisfaction before he came, when about half the proofs had been taken, and that the trouble ensued immediately after his arrival. He is recognized from the first as the representative of those recalcitrant parties; so announces himself in the correspondence following the first trouble, and has appeared before the committee, testifying under their generous permission to what he believes without knowledge, thinks without observation, and has heard from others not present, and to irrelevant matter throughout. None of all this is evidence, even were it upon material points.

Now, let us examine this revolt (the head and front of which is E. I. Robinson) in the light of the familiar law and a grain of common sense.

The agreements of all the settlers, duly signed and under seal, we have filed with the committee and opened every fact to their scrutiny. Those agreements specify the considerations and mutual promises and undertakings of each settler and of the agent of the Perrines, Ingraham, who was accepted as such agent and associate without question.

There is nothing in those written contracts, not one word, concerning bond for title, dike, or canal.

Does or can any sane man believe that dike and canal, which are referred to in Robinson's testimony as costing, according to some one's estimate, $50,000, would have been left out of every one of those contracts, and not been noticed by a single man, had they been a part of the original agreement?

But they do not go so far as to say why the alleged agreement as to dike and canal was not incorporated into the written contracts.

Mr. Richmond, the Perrine agent on the grant, testifies that Mr. Ingraham told the settlers that said improvements were intended to be made after securing title by patent. Who was correct?

First. A written contract under seal must be held to be the whole contract, and it can not be varied and changed by oral conversations.

Second. Had said promises formed a part of the consideration on which the settler acted, they would, beyond rational doubt, have been demanded to be put into the written contract.

Third. It is quite improbable that agreement to make an improvement which would cost perhaps $50,000 would be made to antedate patent to the land, especially when those improvements were not essential to the issue of patent. Common experience proves that business men do not proceed in that manner. The claim of the other side is simply absurd.

Fourth. There is the direct testimony of Mr. Richmond, who heard what Ingraham said on the point, and is express, and in the line of reason and probabilities.

Fifth. Of the upward of 50 settlers on the grant, about 40 do not contend for bond for title: do not claim that dike or canal was promised before patent, and have fulfilled their written contracts according to their tenor and plain purpose.

Is this branch of the subject worth discussing further? No sane man of fair judgment can believe Robinson's claim. It is utterly improbable and irreconcilable with known facts and conditions.

We have as facts—

1. Written contracts under seal for settlements and cultivation, as required by the statute, and withdrawal of all opposition to patent to the Perrines.

2. A full compliance with law in respect of settlement, cultivation of plants, and permanent provisions and purposes on every section of the grant.

Mr. Robinson himself can not specify a single section on which such compliance was not made, while the facts are shown by voluminous proofs in the record.

3. The refusal at the last moment of about one-fifth of the settlers to sign their proofs; the overwhelming proof by other witnesses that compliance with law was in fact made.

4. The proofs of about four-fifths of all the settlers whose position is in direct antagonism to that of the protesting one-fifth, and in emphatic contradiction of the claim of that small fraction.

5. The proofs in the record, and also before the committee, may be summed up as follows:

Fifty settlers and upward, or about twenty more than was required by the statute.

Fifty acres cleared of timber after the method of that country.

Fifty acres more or less cultivated for garden and home uses.

Fifty acres of valuable tropical plants in cultivation.

All this at a conservative estimated value of from $20,000 to $40,000.

6. The examination of all those proofs by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the officer appointed by the act making the grant to pass upon the proofs and to determine their sufficiency, and to issue patent, resulted in finding them a compliance with the statute, and in the issue of patent, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

In that connection it is pertinent to remark that there was no other judge in the world authorized by law to pass upon the sufficiency of those proofs. He was not only authorized, but it was his imperative duty.

In the absence of fraud, the courts would take the findings of fact under those proofs by the Land Department as conclusive; for there can be no mistake in respect to what the law required, and no misconstruction of a statute so plain and unmistakable in all its provisions and in line with the repeated decisions of our highest court.

There has been no evidence of fraud, gross mistake, or misconstruction of law, and hence it is not a matter which the courts would by any possibility interfere with were the question submitted to litigation.

To bring to mind what the Supreme Court of the United States has held with regard to this matter, I subjoin excerpts from a few of its many like decisions.

In United States vs. Maxwell Land Grant Company, 121 U. S., 325 (syllabus):

"While courts of equity have the power to set aside, cancel, or correct patents or other evidences of title obtained from the United States by fraud or mistake, and to correct under proper circumstances such mistakes, this can only be done on specific averments of the mistake or the fraud, supported by clear and satisfactory proof.

"5. The general doctrine on this subject is that, when in a court of equity it is proposed to set aside, to annul, or correct a written instrument, for fraud or mistake in the execution of the instrument itself, the testimony on which this is done must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing, and it can not be done upon a bare preponderance of evidence which leaves the issue in doubt.

"6. Where the purpose is to annul a patent, a grant, or other formal evidence of title from the United States, the respect due to such an instrument, the presumption that all the preceding steps required by law had been observed, the importance and necessity of the stability of titles dependent on these official instruments demand that the effort to set them aside should be successful only when the allegations on which this attempt is made are clearly stated and fully proved.

"7. In this case the evidence produces no conviction in the judicial mind of the mistakes or frauds alleged in the bill, and the decree of the circuit court dismissing it is affirmed."

Same doctrine was reasserted in United States vs. San Jacinto Tin Company. (125 U. S., 273.)

In Heath vs. Wallace (138 U. S., 573) the court says:

"Moreover, if the question be considered in a somewhat different light, viz, as the contemporaneous construction of a statute by those officers of the Government whose duty it is to administer it, then the case would seem to be brought within the rule announced at a very early day in this court and reiterated in a very large number of cases, that the construction given to a statute by those charged with the execution of it, is always entitled to the most respectful consideration, and ought not to be overruled without cogent reasons." * * * "It is settled by an unbroken line of decisions of this court in land jurisprudence that the decisions of that department upon matters of fact within its jurisdiction are, in the absence of fraud or imposition, conclusive and binding on the courts of the country," citing cases.

Decisions of the Land Department are conclusive in the absence of fraud or mistake. (Lee vs. Johnson, 116 U. S., 48.)

"Fraud is not presumed, either as a matter of law or fact, unless under circumstances not fairly susceptible of any other interpretation." (Tucker vs. Moreland, 10 Peters, 58.)

But it is really unnecessary to discuss this plain law, declared a thousand times, for there is no fraud charged.

And right here is the marvelous part of this whole investigation. The construction of the granting act is too clear to be questioned. We can not interpolate, and we can not take from the language of the law. The grant by its own preamble was made in part because Dr. Perrine had merited it by previous personal exertions. The Treasury had sent out a circular asking its consuls to interest themselves in the matter of tropical plants, and yet no money was furnished for the necessary expenses. Dr. Perrine gave great time and most valuable attention to it, and actually spent most of his little fortune in the enterprise. Congress sought to reward him in a measure, and also hoped for additional results, and what has now been done promises ascertainments which in the nature of the experiments must be of national value.

The grant was to Dr. Perrine and his associates, and the grant to the heirs conferred upon them the rights theretofore given to their ancestor.

There is no mistake or misconstruction of law alleged, and no one has either alleged or testified to any fraud whatever.

Mr. Robinson and others sought to have the Land Department send down a special agent to look over the grant. But their statements were none of them by original affidavit, and most of them were by letters, which bound nobody. They filed nothing in the Department, under which they could be made responsible for perjury or misrepresentation. They came as men discredited by being self-confessed violators of their solemn written contracts. While not attaching serious blame to the real settlers, because they were undoubtedly misled, yet they filed no affidavits which, if true, would show that the law had not been complied with.

The Perrine agents understood this trouble to result from Mr. Robinson, and circumstances corroborate, and he has been before this committee delivering a long tirade on matters alleged to be between Mr. Ingraham, agent, and the settlers.

Now, as between the Perrines, or their agent, Ingraham, and the settlers, neither the Land Department nor Congress is the proper tribunal to resort to. The Department never did, and probably never will, order investigations asked for by men on the grounds relied upon by Robinson et al., and presented by men whose integrity and reliability were measured by self-confessed violation of written contracts, and upon outside allegations which were practically denied by four-fifths of all the settlers on the grant.

That the statute had been complied with was evident, and the matters between Robinson et al. and the Perrine agent were for the courts, and not within the jurisdiction of either the Land Department or Congress.

Robinson's testimony is of no earthly value before Congress or the Department; yet he speaks to prejudice. He refers to Mr. Parrott, vice-president of the Florida East Coast Railway Company, and to what he alleges Parrott said in respect to the large promises of Mr. Ingraham. We have only to ask that the letter of Mr. Parrott to Robinson, which was put there by Robinson himself, or by some one he sent it to, be read, for Mr. Parrott distinctly says that what has been promised will be done; and he mildly suggests to Mr. Robinson that possibly it might be a good thing for him to observe his contract, for Robinson is a self-confessed violator of it.

The estimates of value of the lands on this grant made by Robinson show a desire to prejudice and an insincerity. He is a swift witness and commits himself to palpable errors in consequence. He says 1 acre on the front of the grant is worth as much as 160 acres in the back, and yet says some land in the front is worth $200 an acre and the land back $10 to $20 per acre, or 160 acres would be worth from $1,600 to $3,200. Also he admits that he knows the price of no land less than 8 to 10 miles from the front of this grant, or less than 5 miles from the rear, and it is in evidence that land there, and improved land, can be had for from about $5 to $15 per acre.

He glibly testifies to threats, and yet can not state an instance. He heard that some wife objected to her husband taking a sea trip until he made his proofs for fear he would otherwise lose his land, and that some one was told he would lose his land if proofs were not made. This is simply silly, and I name it only to show the absurdity of this attack.

He even sought to make an impression that Assistant Commissioner Best, of the General Land Office, had misled him by giving him no satisfaction, except telling him the matter was in the hands of Congress, while at the same time action was taken in the General Land Office.

An examination of the Assistant Commissioner's letter shows that it was written in 1895, when the matter was in Congress, and not before the Land Office.

He speaks of the poverty of the settlers, and of the injustice of the giving of 80 acres to each of three front settlers, and 40 acres only to those back from the front.

The said three settlers had been there many years and had large improvements, which clearly justified the arrangements made with them. The back settlers voluntarily agreed to take 40 acres, and that area, as most men know, is beyond doubt more than they can ever cultivate to the fruits and plants and vegetables which are produced there. It is testified to by Mr. Richmond, from his personal knowledge, that this arrangement for 40 acres to the back settlers was pursuant to their own demand.

But what has their poverty, or the back lands, or front lands got to do with the matter before the Senate committee?

What is before this committee, anyway?

There is no evidence or indication that either Robinson or his attorneys asked that question, or sought to direct their testimony to it.

The question is outlined by the resolution for investigation, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by the full committee or by a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, be authorized to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine grant, in the State of Florida, with power to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths."

We have cited the law; the proofs came to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; he found them satisfactory as to a compliance with law; he was the judge appointed by Congress to reach that conclusion or any other on the proofs; when he reached it, his duty resulted to issue patent; Congress then had no jurisdiction to act; it was supposed that everybody in and out of this committee was cognizant of that law, and the patent was issued because of said proofs, said compliance with the statute, and said duty.

There is no evidence of the slightest irregularity in respect of it; as a matter of fact, there was none; the proofs underwent the most careful and thorough examination, and all questions were most carefully studied and considered for over a month after the proofs reached the Department before patent issued.

I am certain that no discourtesy was entertained toward this committee. In the opening days of the session I had entered my appearance here for the heirs in a letter, in which I advised the committee, as I recollect, that the proofs were then being taken; that if satisfactory, no forfeiture could be declared, and asking that action on Senate bill 161 be deferred, etc.

The law was so well established in like cases that no thought was entertained by anyone that discourtesy could be inferred from the Department's acting upon a matter after the jurisdiction of Congress had been ousted, and when the near termination of the Administration and of this Congress, as is always the case, made it desirable to close out cases fully considered in the former and to pass into law matters fully considered by the latter.

There is no propriety or justice in seeking to put into the courts a matter like this, when the facts are absolutely wanting which those courts have a thousand times declared were essential to such action. Peace of title is best for all communities, and where compliance with law is clear and fraud is absent there is no justification for any Congressional action which would suspend all use of property for years and put to expense and great trouble a community of persons like those interested in this case.

It should also be not forgotten that in addition to an absence of all material showing, in addition to a total want of evidence that the law has not been fully complied with, in addition to the fact that the case has been brought in aggravated form to Senators, whose anxiety and purpose are always to be sure that their duty is fully performed, and thus caused this investigation, a moment's reflection will convince anyone that the controversy related to points and matters of which neither the Land Department nor Congress had jurisdiction, and that it was palpable imposition to crowd their consideration upon either of said tribunals.

Perhaps I should say, in conclusion, that the Perrine heirs and their associates are so thoroughly convinced that the few recalcitrant settlers who made settlement and improvement, as required by their contracts, were acting under misleading advice when they assumed their present position; that they will give them, each one, his deed for the stipulated 40 acres, in precisely the same manner as though they had made no difficulty, and this was determined immediately after patent, and before any investigation was suggested or thought of.

In respect of a railroad being interested, it need not be discussed, because the heirs had a clear right to associate whom they pleased with them in the matter. As a matter of fact, however, the heirs were compelled by want of means to get help as they could; and while said company is interested in having the country settled, and has done wonderful service to said State by its immense improvements on the east coast, it is yet an open question whether the company will lose or gain by its engagements in this matter, and so far as the law and the proprieties of all legitimate investigation are concerned, it is a matter entirely unimportant. The improvements it has promised will certainly improve its own interests, and likewise benefit the actual settlers on the grant lands.

Respectfully submitted.

C. W. HOLCOMB,
Attorney for the Perrine Heirs and their Associates.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1897.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask leave to prepare and have printed a formal minority report, more full than the one already submitted, not to be printed in the RECORD, but to be filed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota

asks leave to submit a minority report hereafter. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

SUBMARINE CABLE SYSTEMS IN THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next case on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 9149) to regulate the establishment of submarine telegraph cable lines or systems in the United States was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. Let that go over.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill go over.

WILLIAM F. SONGER.

Mr. SEWELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4193) to correct the military record of William F. Songer, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may now be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion standing against William F. Songer, late a private of Company B, Forty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the records of the War Department, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 834) to require patents to be issued to land actually settled under the act entitled "An act to provide for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of Florida," approved August 4, 1842; and

A bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficial associations in the District of Columbia.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the Indian appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 16, and 18.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 13, 15, 19, and 20, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$250,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the amount now received by companies performing said service; and the Postmaster-General shall report to Congress at its next regular session the prices paid for such services."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following: "400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said Senate amendment and amend as follows: Strike out in line 9, page 11, of the bill the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
R. F. PETTIGREW,
J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. F. LOUD,
J. C. KYLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLATT. This is the final report?

Mr. ALLISON. This is the final report upon the Post-Office appropriation bill. If Senators desire any explanation, I shall be glad to give it. There is no material change in the bill as passed by the Senate except that we have receded from some legislation inserted by the House on pages 10, 11, and 12 of the bill, which adds to the convenience of the Post-Office Department in its administration. If there are any special points concerning which any Senator desires an explanation, I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. VILAS. It is the final report?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the final report.

The report was concurred in.

AMENDMENT OF THE PATENT LAWS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the regular order.

The bill (H. R. 3014) revising and amending the statutes relating to patents was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 26, section 3, after the word "country," to strike out the following words:

This section, as hereby amended, shall not apply to any patent in this country granted prior to the passage of this act, nor to any applications for a patent in this country then pending, nor to any patent granted on such a pending application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, line 4, after the word "words," to strike out "six months," and by adding at the end of the paragraph the following sentence: "And upon failure to complete the case for final action within eighteen months after the filing of the application the Commissioner of Patents may require the applicant to show cause why final action should not be taken thereon; and if upon such hearing the Commissioner determines that the application has not been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, he shall make an order requiring the applicant to complete his case for final action within six months thereafter, and upon the expiration of said six months final action shall be taken thereon. In cases where interference has been declared, three years additional time may be allowed for the prosecution of the interference, which time may be extended by the Commissioner of Patents, upon its being shown to his satisfaction that due diligence has been shown in prosecution of such action," and insert "one year;" in line 23, after the word "within," to strike out "six months" and insert "one year;" in line 26, after the word "within," to strike out "six months" and insert "one year;" and in line 30, after the word "unavoidable," to strike out "and upon failure to complete the case for final action within eighteen months after the filing of the application the Commissioner of Patents may require the applicant to show cause why final action should not be taken thereon; and if upon such hearing the Commissioner determines that the application has not been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, he shall make an order requiring the applicant to complete his case for final action within six months thereafter, and upon the expiration of said six months final action shall be taken thereon. In cases where interference has been declared, three years additional time may be allowed for the prosecution of the interference, which time may be extended by the Commissioner of Patents, upon its being shown to his satisfaction that due diligence has been shown in prosecution of such action;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That section 4894 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out the words "two years" in every place where they occur and substituting in lieu thereof the words "one year;" so that the section so amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 4894. All applications for patents shall be completed and prepared for examination within one year after the filing of the application, and in default thereof, or upon failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within one year after any action therein, of which notice shall have been given to the applicant, they shall be regarded as abandoned by the parties thereto, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Patents that such delay was unavoidable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, to add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect January 1, 1898, and sections 1, 2, 3, and 4, amending sections 4886, 4920, 4887, and 4894 of the Revised Statutes, shall not apply to any patent granted prior to said date, nor to any application filed prior to said date, nor to any patent granted on such an application.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to have a brief explanation of the bill from some one. It is a very long bill. I am not disposed to object to it, but I should like to know in brief what it is in substance.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to have one more amendment made? On page 4, in order to conform to the amendment on page 5, certain lines should be stricken out which are exactly similar in words. After "country," in line 12, on page 4, I move to strike out down to and including the word "application," in line 17. These words have already been taken out in another part of the bill, but were left in at that point by an oversight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "country," in line 12, page 4, strike out all down to and including the word "application," in line 17, in the following words:

This section, as hereby amended, shall not apply to any patent in this country granted prior to the passage of this act, nor to any applications for a patent in this country then pending, nor to any patent granted for such a pending application.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. This bill at the time it was first reported to the Senate excited considerable opposition, but the parties opposing it were heard, and I believe that everyone is satisfied now with the bill, with its amendments. I do not think there is objection in any part of the country or from any person. I can take up the time of the Senate with a little summary of the bill, if the Senator from Texas desires it.

Mr. CHILTON. If it will not take too long, I shall be glad to know something about what the bill is.

Mr. PLATT. The first amendment of the law adds to the conditions of obtaining a patent that the invention shall not have been published more than two years prior to its application. I think that is right. The second incorporates that as one of the defenses which may be made. The third matter is one which excited a good deal of objection. As proposed, it limited the right of a party to proceed in his application for a patent, once having been rejected, to six months. The law as it now stands is two years. The Commissioner of Patents changed the rule and made it six months. That excited the hostility of the patent attorneys. We have compromised the matter and made it one year. I think that is entirely satisfactory to everyone.

The rest of the measure relates to foreign patents. It provides that a patent obtained in a foreign country before it is obtained here shall not limit the term of the patent in this country, but gives seven months within which to make the application here after it has been made in a foreign country. Patents that run here seventeen years have been limited to two years and three years and five years and all sorts of terms by reason of the fact that they were first taken out in foreign countries where, by the operation of the laws, the term was limited.

I do not think there is anything in the bill but what is right.

Mr. BACON. I ask that there may be an amendment added to the bill in the nature of a new section, to come in at the end, to be numbered accordingly.

Mr. PLATT. It had better be put before section 7.

Mr. BACON. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as a new section before section 7:

That in case where the head of any Department of the Government shall request the Commissioner of Patents to expedite the consideration of an application for a patent, it shall be the duty of such head of Department to be represented before the Commissioner in order to prevent the improper issue of a patent.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I desire simply to state that it is in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. After the statement of the Senator from Connecticut, I have no disposition to obstruct the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report on the Indian appropriation bill will be read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The report was read yesterday and is found in the RECORD, except such changes as have been made by the conferees since the report was rejected.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will explain the items that have now been agreed to, and state whether there are any left that have not been agreed upon.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me that it is not necessary to read the whole report, and I will state the items that have not been agreed to.

In the first place, on amendment numbered 9, payment of Creek Indians, we were unable to reach an agreement.

We were also unable to reach an agreement upon amendment numbered 30, which relates to contract schools.

The conferees also failed to agree upon amendments numbered 59, 60, 61, and 62, which relate to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Also amendment 83, relating to the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation; also amendment 87, relative to the reimbursement for Indian school in Nevada; also amendments 88 and 90, in relation to the Colville Indian Reservation; also amendments 92 and 93, in relation to the claims of attorneys upon the fund of the Old Settler Cherokees; also amendment 95, in relation to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians; also amendment 99, in relation to mixed-blood Indians; also amendment 103, which repeals certain provisions in the act of last year in relation to two reservations in the State of Montana.

This conference report differs from the one which was submitted to the Senate last night and rejected by the Senate, in that we have stricken from the report the provision for negotiating with the Seneca Indians in New York, and the provision in regard to the Kaw scrip, which was objected to by the Senate as being purely legislation; and the Senate has receded from its amendment with regard to the Osage Indians.

The Senate amendment placed the country occupied by the Osage Indians in the Indian Territory. The House refused to agree to that, and rejected it upon a vote, and therefore we now recede from that amendment. I think in every other respect the report is the same as that submitted yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the necessity of organizing the Osage Nation for judicial purposes and requiring that there may be a court held at Pawhuska, the capital of that nation.

I should like to ask the Senator if it is not within the province of the conference committee to so modify the amendment which I submitted as to authorize and direct the holding of one or more terms of court at Pawhuska during the year?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I admit the necessity of something being done in relation to the courts in that country, but the House of Representatives refused to agree to the Senate amendment, and refused to agree to it even modified as the Senator suggests.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate at this late hour further than to make a brief statement showing the necessity for organizing this territory for judicial purposes.

The Osage Nation embraces a great many thousand acres of land. It is in the northeastern corner of what is now known as Oklahoma. It is bounded on the west and separated from Oklahoma Territory proper by the Arkansas River, which is only bridged at one or two points, and which is very difficult to ford. There is not a judge, a justice of the peace, or a court commissioner in the Osage Nation. The nearest point at which the people of that Territory can reach a court of record is at Perry, in Oklahoma, some 60 miles southwest of the extreme southern boundary of the Osage Nation, making it 125 or 130 miles from the northeast portion of the Osage Nation, which is very heavily settled along the border.

Mr. President, west of the Arkansas River the justices of the peace send their process clear across this Territory suing Indians, entering judgments against them, and issuing executions; and the Indian's property, his houses, his fences, everything of that kind is put up at sale, and sold at ruinously low figures, and there is no restraint whatever.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator speaks very positively as to the practice of suing Indians in the Oklahoma courts, but it seems to me that there must be some mistake about that; that the Senator must be misinformed. Those Indians are not citizens, as I understand, and so they can not be sued. I can not suppose that an Oklahoma justice of the peace would allow a suit against an Indian in his court. I can not understand it; I think there must be some mistake about it, and that the persons sued were not Indians.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator says they can not do it; but it is a good deal like the man who said, "They can not put me in jail," when he was in jail. These Indians are sued. The justices of the peace along the border of the Osage Nation and west of the Arkansas River are in the constant habit of issuing process, bringing the Indians into court, trying small causes against them, issuing executions, sending their constables over the Osage Nation to levy upon their property; and I will say, for the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, that the courts of record of that Territory have upheld the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace over the Indian Territory, and have upheld the exercise of jurisdiction over the persons of Indians, and enforced those judgments. Now, what is to be done under these circumstances?

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to the transfer of that business to the Indian Territory, as I said last night.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator having this bill in charge that that country should be detached for judicial purposes and placed in the northern district of the Indian Territory, so that something may be done in the way of giving the Osage Nation a judiciary of its own, requiring, for instance, the district judge closest to or adjoining this Territory to hold one or more terms of court at Pawhusky, the capital, and exclude the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Oklahoma Territory as respects its exercise over the citizens or property of the Osage Nation. I can say to the Senator from Connecticut that there is a well-authenticated case——

Mr. PLATT. I have not the slightest objection to the suggestion of the Senator, and if it could be reached in conference I should be very glad to have it done.

Mr. ALLEN. There is a well-authenticated case which cost an Indian over $1,200. A justice of the peace in Oklahoma Territory rendered a judgment against that Indian, a constable went upon the Osage Nation and levied upon the house—it was a little bit singular to levy upon real estate or portions of real estate on the execution of a justice of the peace—put up the property, and sold it, I think, for something like $30, and sold some 10 or 12 miles of barbed-wire fence for something like twenty-two or twenty-three dollars, and then the property was taken from the territory and over to Oklahoma and sold.

Those abuses ought to be stopped. If, in the judgment of Congress, those Indians should be left without any remedy whatever before the courts; if they are to be raided by a class of lawless justices of the peace west of the Arkansas River, and are to be upheld by the judiciary of record in that Territory, I do not know that it is any particular individual concern of mine; but in view of the fact that the Indians are wards of the nation, that they are pillaged on every conceivable occasion, that they are robbed and despoiled of their rights and of their territory, it stands this great Government in hand to protect them from this kind of predatory work, both in their property and in their persons.

I hope that the conference report will be rejected on that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 14, 20, 21, 28, 40, 41, 43, 70, 74, 84, 96, and 97.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 71, 72, 73, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 85, 86, 89, 91, 98, 100, 101, 104, and 105, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "Territory," in said amendment, the following: "Or adjoining State or Territory;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$22,418.25;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"That the allottees of land within the limits of the Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, are hereby authorized to lease their lands or any part thereof for a term not exceeding three years, for farming or grazing purposes, or ten years for mining or business purposes. And said allottees and their lessees and tenants shall have the right to employ such assistants, laborers, and help from time to time as they may deem necessary: Provided, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age or disability any such allottee can not improve or manage his allotment properly and with benefit to himself, the same may be leased, in the discretion of the Secretary, upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by him. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this are hereby repealed.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"That the adult allottees of land in the Peoria and Miami Indian Reservation in the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., who have each received allotments of 200 acres or more, may sell 100 acres thereof under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment, after the word "sum," the words "or so much thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "so much;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment after the word "purposes," in line 4 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out after the word "purchase," in line 1 of said amendment, down to and including the word "Dakota," in line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the words "of land;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For extension and completion of steam plant, $6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$62,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in lines 8 and 9 of said amendment, the words "for steam-heating plant, $15,000:" and strike out, in line 9, the word "eighty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "That," in line 1 of the said amendment, the word "hereafter;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of said amendment, the words "to be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is made;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For resurvey of the lands of the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., $141,300, to be immediately available: Provided, That such resurveys shall be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey by such persons as may be employed by or under him for that purpose; and such surveys shall be executed under instructions to be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and subdivisional surveys shall be executed under the rectangular system, as now provided by law: Provided further, That when any surveys shall have been so made and plats and field notes thereof prepared they shall be approved and certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and two copies of the field notes shall be returned, one for filing in the Indian Office and one in the General Land Office, and twenty photolithographic copies of the plats shall be returned, one for filing in the Office of Indian Affairs and one in the General Land Office, which shall be certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and the others filed in the General Land Office, with the fac-simile of the signature of the Director of the Geological Survey, and the same provision shall also extend to the plats to be filed of the surveys already made or to be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey within the Indian Territory, and such surveys, field notes, and plats shall have the same legal force and effect as heretofore given to the acts of surveyors-general: Provided further, That all laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby declared to be inoperative as respects such surveys, and in making the resurvey the former land survey is to be disregarded, the latter now being declared null and void: Provided further, That hereafter in the public-land surveys of the Indian Territory iron or stone posts shall be erected at each township corner, upon which shall be recorded the usual marks required to be placed on township corners by the laws and regulations governing public-land surveys."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Rosebud Indians and with the Lower Brule Indians in South Dakota for the settlement of all differences between said Indians; and with the Rosebud Indians and the Lower Brule Indians, the Cheyenne River Indians in South Dakota, and with the Standing Rock Indians in North and South Dakota for a cession of a portion of their respective reservations and for a modification of existing treaties as to the requirement of the consent of three-fourths of the male adult Indians to any treaty disposing of their lands; all agreements to be submitted to Congress for its approval."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Except when otherwise specifically provided by law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the claim of the Fond du Lac Band of Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior for compensation arising from the alleged difference in area of the reservation as actually set apart to them and that provided to be set apart under the fourth subdivision of article 2 of the treaty between the United States and the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, made and concluded at Lapointe, in the state of Wisconsin, on the 30th day of September, in the year 1854, proclaimed January 29, 1855, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear and determine the difference, if any, between the area of the reservation actually set apart to said Indians and that provided to be set apart in said treaty, if any, the said action to be brought by the said Fond du Lac Band of Chippewa Indians against the United States by petition, verified under oath by any duly authorized attorney for said Indians, within thirty days from the passage of this act; and in hearing and determining the said matter the court shall take into consideration and determine whether since the date of said treaty there has been any equitable adjustment made to said Indians in whole or in part for the alleged difference in area. The Attorney-General shall appear and answer said petition within thirty days from the filing thereof, unless the time for pleading be extended by the court for cause shown; and said action shall have precedence in said court, and when completed the court shall make a full report to Congress.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a discreet person as a commissioner, who shall visit the Chippewa and Christian Indian Reservation, in Franklin County, Kans., and make a thorough investigation and full report of the title of the individual members of said bands in and to the several tracts of land therein which have been allotted to said members, for which certificates have been issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided in the first article of the treaty of July 16, 1859, with the Swan Creek and Black River Chippewas, and the Munsee or Christian Indians of Kansas.

"That said commissioner shall take a census of said Indians, the enrollment to be made upon separate lists; the first to include all of said bands who hold title to land, either by original allotment and certificate, by purchase and approved conveyance, or by inheritance, with a description of the land so held or owned by each, and where any tract is claimed by tenants in common, either as heirs of a deceased allottee or otherwise, the interest of each claimant in such tract to be clearly and distinctly stated, the ownership of lands of deceased allottees to be determined under the laws of Kansas relating to descent; and the second list to embrace all of said bands who have not received an allotment of land, but would, if there were sufficient land, be entitled thereto under the treaty.

"That upon the approval of said census and the report of said commissioner by the Secretary of the Interior patents in fee shall issue in favor of those persons found by the Secretary of the Interior to be entitled to the land held by them.

"That where there are several heirs, and the partition of land is practicable, the partition shall be made by said commissioner, but if not practicable, said land may be appraised and sold as hereinafter directed, and the net proceeds paid to said heirs according to the respective title or share each may have in said land.

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent in fee to the Moravian Church, or its constituted authorities, for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12, of township 17 south, of range 18 east, in Kansas.

"That the residue of their lands shall be appraised by a commission consisting of said commissioner, the Indian agent, and a person to be selected by the Indians in open council, who shall report the same to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; that said commission shall place a valuation for purposes hereinafter named on all tracts of land now owned or held by inheritance, and make a separate report thereof.

"That upon the approval of said appraisement by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall offer said residue of lands at the proper land office in Kansas, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem advisable, except that the time for full and complete payment shall not exceed one year, with clause of absolute forfeiture in case of default: And provided, That the same shall be sold to the highest bidder, and at a price not less than the appraised value.

"That where an allottee has died leaving no heirs, or has abandoned his or her allotment, and has not resided thereon or lived within the said reservation for three consecutive years, the lands and improvements of such allottee shall be appraised and sold in like manner as other lands herein described, as provided herein.

"That the net proceeds derived from the sale of the lands herein authorized to be sold, after payment of the expenses of appraisal and sale thereof, shall be placed in the Treasury for the benefit of those members of said bands of Indians who have not received any land by allotment, and shall be paid per capita to those entitled to share therein who are of age, and to others as they shall arrive at the age of 21 years, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, or shall be expended for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interest.

"That when a purchaser shall have made full payment for a tract of land, as herein provided, patent shall be issued as in case of public lands under the homestead and preemption laws.

"That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum shall be reimbursed as follows: All expenses of appraisal and sale out of the proceeds of such sale, and all other expenses out of the funds of said Chippewa and Munsee, or Christian Indians, not held for them by the United States, said sum being on the 1st day of January, 1896, $42,560.36.

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay over to the said Chippewa and Munsee, or Christian Indians, per capita, the remainder of said funds, of $42,560.36, trust funds now to their credit on the books of the Treasury Department, after deducting the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this section.

"That no proceedings shall be taken under this section until the said bands of Indians shall file with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs their consent thereto, expressed in open council."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 9, 30, 59, 60, 61, 62, 83, 87, 88, 90, 92, 93, 95, 99, and 103, the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEO. C. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

SALE OF LIQUORS IN CAPITOL BUILDING.

The bill (H. R. 7083) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am informed that while I was absent from the Senate, unfortunately, a few minutes ago there was a report made from the Joint Committee on the Library. What Senator made that report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] made the report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask that Senator if there is anything in that report in regard to the subject of who were the architects of the Library building? However, I see the Senator is not present.

I want to make this statement, Mr. President, and I will state why I make it. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], as we all know, has been for years the prime mover in building a new Library. His term of service expires to-day, and I want to make this statement while he is a member of the Senate, in order that he may affirm or deny my statement. I think he will affirm it with very great pleasure.

I was very much surprised a few days ago to see in the report of a public lecture delivered by Col. or Maj. Bernard Green, whom we have made superintendent of the new Library, the statement that that edifice was not built upon the plans and specifications furnished by Smithmeyer & Pelz, the architects selected for that purpose and who have received pay from the Government of the United States for that duty. Upon a silver plate in the Library building to-day is an inscription furnished by General Casey, now dead, and who was for a number of years superintendent of the Library building, stating that the architects were Smithmeyer, Pelz, and Casey, the son of General Casey, a young man who was employed as assistant in the Library building in 1892. General Casey wrote that inscription himself, and so informed me. He testified before the Joint Library Committee that the plans and specifications of this Library building were made by Smithmeyer & Pelz. In the lecture to which I refer, Major or Colonel Green states that the building was not constructed upon those plans; that the outlines were furnished by Smithmeyer & Pelz, but that he, Major or Colonel Green, and General Casey, in 1888, remodeled or reformed those plans and specifications, and that the real plans were those which they then made.

This is an astounding statement, Mr. President, and, in my judgment, does the grossest injustice to Smithmeyer & Pelz. In his testimony before the Joint Library Committee, Colonel or Major Green said that, while Smithmeyer & Pelz had been employed originally, it was found necessary to abandon in the main their plans and specifications in 1888, when the new plans and specifications were furnished by himself and General Casey. How it is possible that General Casey could have made that plate, placed that inscription upon it, and put it up in this Library building, conveying to the public the information that Smithmeyer & Pelz and his son were the architects, when he knew, according to Major or Colonel Green, that in 1888 those plans and specifications of Smithmeyer & Pelz had been abandoned, is beyond my understanding; and, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] suggests to me, at that time Major or Colonel Green was the superintendent of the building.

Mr. President, if his statement be true that these plans and specifications of Smithmeyer & Pelz were abandoned in 1888, and new plans and specifications made by himself and General Casey adopted, how is it possible that General Casey, the father of this young architect, could himself have put that plate in that building, when his son was even not employed as assistant architect or engineer until 1892?

This building is a dream of beauty. There is nothing in Europe equal to it. Even the magnificent cathedral at Cologne does not approximate in architectural perfection this magnificent building that we have erected here for our posterity; and it is a serious matter to take the credit of designing that structure from Smithmeyer & Pelz, who for thirteen years were engaged upon this work, who went all over Europe and inspected every public building before they furnished these plans and specifications; who had twelve plans and one hundred specifications made out and put in the possession of the architect of the Library building, and I understand now they can not be found. There were the plans and specifications of forty-one competitors before the Library Commission, and after mature investigation the commission deliberately selected those of Smithmeyer & Pelz, and I do not propose as a Senator to allow that statement of Colonel or Major Green to go unchallenged. It is the grossest injustice to these citizens of the United States, who have been paid by Congress for this work, who have carried their professional skill to the highest degree in making the plans and specifications for this building; and I embrace this, my last opportunity before the Senator from Indiana leaves the Senate, to make this statement, in order that he may either affirm it or give us the real facts.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word in reference to the observations of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALL. Only a single word.

Mr. President, I know Mr. Green, the superintendent of that building, very well. I knew General Casey; and while I do not undertake to measure the degree of reputation and applause which should come to these different architects for the part they have performed, it is certainly true that every detail of the construction of that building has been under the immediate observation and direction of General Casey and of Mr. Green. It is certainly true that there is no man of more eminent fitness and skill and knowledge in architecture than Mr. Green. I have no doubt that he has not intended in anything he may have said to disparage in the slightest degree the part that any other architect had in the origination of the designs for this building.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator to state that Major or Colonel Green is an architect?

Mr. CALL. I do.

Mr. VEST. He is an engineer only, and so was General Casey.

Mr. CALL. He is not only an engineer officer, but he is a most accomplished architect.

Mr. VEST. General Casey, testifying before the Joint Committee on the Library, in reply to a question of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], when asked if he was an architect—and I quote his exact language—said: "I am no more an architect than you are."

Mr. CALL. It is certainly true that every detail of that building has been under the immediate direction and observation of General Casey, be he architect or engineer, and that Mr. Green has been the principal factor and agent in its performance, and if that building is a dream of beauty, if it is the most beautiful building in the world, it is due in the larger part to Mr. Green.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 1888) to further amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1893, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HILL. That bill will lead to some debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator from New York to object to the bill?

Mr. HILL. Several Senators have spoken to me, and said they desired to discuss it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very sorry. It should have been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill being objected to, it will be passed over.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 9752) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin," was announced as next in order.

Mr. VILAS. That bill can not be disposed of at this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and I have agreed that this subject shall not be disposed of at this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

OLEOMARGARINE AND OTHER IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The bill (H. R. 1221) to make oleomargarine and all other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHILTON. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill being objected to, it will be passed over.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 9607) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tram roads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think that that bill has been referred to any committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that this bill came from the House of Representatives, and was put on the Calendar in place of a Senate bill which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN. I am willing that the bill shall be read through, but I reserve the right to object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. That bill has not been considered by any committee, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated that it is a House bill substituted for a bill reported from the Senate Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN. It ought to go to the Senate committee anyway, notwithstanding the fact that it is a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

GOVERNMENT USE OF PATENTED DEVICES.

A bill (H. R. 4178) providing for the use by the United States of devices covered by letters patent, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, being objected to, goes over.

REMOVAL OF STREET RAILWAY ABANDONED TRACKS.

The bill (H. R. 10121) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLEN. That is rather a remarkable bill. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia if it is proposed to forfeit the easement of the railroad companies for a failure to operate the railroad for three months?

Mr. McMILLAN. There are a great many tracks in the city which are not used by any company.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that this bill does not forfeit their right of easement; that, according to the terms of the bill, there is no reason why they may not go back at any other time and lay down their tracks if they desire to do so.

Then I want to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to another very significant part of this bill, and that is the portion which punishes the president of the railroad company by fining him $10 for every day he fails to have the tracks removed. Suppose the board of directors of that company refuse to permit him to have the tracks removed, suppose he uses every reasonable effort a human being can to secure their removal, and can not do so, is he still to be fined according to this bill for failing to remove the tracks?

It occurs to me that this bill ought to go back to a committee and ought to be placed in the hands of somebody to be redrafted.

Mr. McMILLAN. This seems to be a very simple bill. It is recommended by the Commissioners as one which it is quite proper to pass. There are a number of street railway tracks that are not in use at all, and this simply compels the company to take up their tracks and put the streets in good condition. If they do not do it, the president of the company is to be fined.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Michigan——

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not care to press the bill if there is to be discussion.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Michigan must not understand that I am opposing the bill particularly. I agree with him that abandoned tracks should be removed within a reasonable time. But if they are removed, the removal ought to be under such circumstances as would not permit the company to come back and relay the tracks, and the penalty should not be inflicted upon the president of the company unless he has it in his power to remove the tracks.

I move to strike out that portion of the bill which inflicts a penalty upon the president for a failure to remove the tracks.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does the Senator simply desire to strike out that part in relation to the president being fined?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; I do not want to see the president fined unless he is guilty of something wrong.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator from Nebraska think there ought to be a fine imposed upon the corporation?

Mr. ALLEN. That would be all right.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me there ought to be in the bill a penalty in some form or other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "the," in line 10, it is proposed to strike out "president of;" so as to read:

The said company shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the first part of the bill read again.

The Secretary read as follows:

That whenever the track or tracks or any part thereof of any street railway company in the District of Columbia shall not have been used for railway purposes for a period of three months the Commissioners of said District may thereupon notify such company to remove said unused tracks and to place the street in good condition.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to add "and the company's easement over the street shall terminate."

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "condition," in line 8, it is proposed to insert:

And the company's easement over the street shall terminate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest another amendment. Where the word "three" occurs, speaking of three months, I suggest that it be stricken out and the word "six" inserted.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "six;" so as to read "six months."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. PROCTOR and Mr. WETMORE were appointed.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: The bill (H. R. 10121) to compel the street railway companies of the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes, passed the Senate. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I wish to enter it for a moment, so that I may look at the bill while it is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Maryland to reconsider will be entered.

ADULTERATION OF FOODS AND DRUGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 9842) relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HILL. Let the bill be read. I have sent for a copy of it. I have no objection that I know of, but I want to know what it is.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. This appears to be a very important bill, and if it is subject to objection, I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, being objected to, will go over without prejudice.

SALE OF POISONS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 10038) to regulate the sale of poisons in the District was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being interposed, the bill will go over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. NORTHWAY, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

CANALS AND RESERVOIRS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PERKINS. While temporarily absent from the Chamber the bill (H. R. 9607) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tram roads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, was objected to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], I think, under a misapprehension. Therefore, if there is no objection to the bill I should like to have it considered at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw any objection I had to the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. GEAR. I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. GEAR. I think not.

Mr. PERKINS. It simply changes the existing law, which allows water to be taken from public lands for irrigation and mining and reservoir purposes, by adding to it "for domestic purposes." It has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, reported favorably, and I think my friend is certainly laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 9023) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment of the committee was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "plague," to insert "and," and in line 6, after the word "glanders," to strike out "diphtheria and scarlet fever;" so as to read:

That for the purposes of this act the term "contagious disease" shall be held to mean Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, smallpox (including varioloid), leprosy, the plague, and glanders, or any of these diseases by whatsoever name it may be designated.

Mr. HAWLEY. Why is diphtheria stricken out?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that these two diseases, diphtheria and scarlet fever, are provided for in another act; they are taken care of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, at the top of page 2, to strike out the words in parenthesis "in the case of diphtheria, including the symptoms of membranous croup;" so as to read:

The presence of the ordinary clinical symptoms of any contagious disease shall be prima facie evidence that such case is or was such a disease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 26, before the word "glanders," to insert "and;" and in the same line, after the word "days," to strike out "diphtheria, ten days; and scarlet fever, fourteen days;" so as to read:

Said placards or warning signs shall be displayed as aforesaid until such premises and the contents thereof are disinfected to the satisfaction of said health officer, as certified by him, and for such time thereafter as may be necessary to demonstrate the freedom of occupants of said premises from contagious disease, namely, in the case of cholera and yellow fever, five days; typhus fever, twenty-one days; smallpox, sixteen days; the plague, fourteen days; and glanders, twenty-one days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 21, before the word "or," to strike out "fermaldehyde" and insert "formaldehyde;" so as to read:

Or (d) exposed to the vapor of formaldehyde or other germicidal agent for such time and in such strength as may be specified by said health officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, line 4, after the word "transit," to strike out:

No body of a person who has died of diphtheria or scarlet fever shall be carried into or out of said District unless said body be (a) wrapped in a sheet saturated with a 5 per cent aqueous solution of carbolic acid or other germicidal solution, as provided in section 8, and (b) incased in a coffin or casket lined with zinc, tin, copper, or lead so as to be air-tight, or in an hermetically sealed metal casket, and (c) all inclosed in a strong, tight, wooden box.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That no body of any person who has died of Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, smallpox, including varioloid, the plague, leprosy, or glanders, shall be carried into or out of the District of Columbia except in transit: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the transportation of bodies in hearses or undertakers' wagons for burial in adjoining States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, line 14, after the word "the," to strike out "neighborhood" and insert "vicinity;" so as to read:

Said health officer may cause such persons in the vicinity to be removed as are in danger of contracting the disease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, line 3, after the word "with," to insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "contagious," to strike out "diseases" and insert "disease aforesaid, or any other disease ordinarily recognized as contagious;" in line 14, after the word "with," to strike out "a" and insert "any;" in line 15, after the word "disease," to insert "mentioned in section 1 of this act;" in line 16, after the word "persons," to strike out "so;" and in the same line, after the word "infected," to insert "with any contagious disease aforesaid, or any other disease ordinarily recognized as contagious;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 22. That in every hospital and dispensary in said District there shall be provided and maintained a suitable room or rooms for the isolation of persons infected with any contagious disease aforesaid, or any other disease ordinarily recognized as contagious; such persons shall, immediately upon the discovery of the nature of their sickness, be separated from the other persons and other patients at such dispensary or hospital. It shall be the duty of the physician or physicians, of the officers, managers, and of everyone in charge of a hospital or dispensary, and of everyone who has any duty or office in respect to patients in course of treatment, or persons who apply for treatment or care at a dispensary or hospital, to see that a report is immediately made to said health officer of every person so applying, infected with any contagious disease mentioned in section 1 of this act, who comes to their knowledge, and that such person or persons infected with any contagious disease aforesaid, or any other disease ordinarily recognized as contagious, are properly isolated and kept separated from other persons and other patients.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 25, line 8, after the word "with," to strike out:

Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, smallpox (including varioloid), glanders, the plague, or leprosy, and whenever diphtheria or scarlet fever exists in said District in epidemic form.

And insert "any contagious disease;" so as to read:

That the Commissioners of said District be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered, whenever said District is, in their judgment, threatened or afflicted with any contagious disease, to cause house-to-house inspections to be made, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 31, line 6, after the word "aforesaid," to insert "or any other disease ordinarily recognized as contagious;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 31. That any person arrested in the District of Columbia for alleged violation of law, whose detention in a police station, workhouse, or jail would, in the opinion of the health officer of said District, expose the occupants of any such police station, workhouse, or jail to infection by any contagious disease aforesaid, or any other disease ordinarily recognized as contagious, may be confined in any hospital in which are treated patients suffering from such contagious disease as that by which said person is believed to be infected, or in such other place as may be designated by the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 32, line 2, after the word "repealed," to strike out:

And any appropriation or balance thereof available at the time of the passage of this act, for the enforcement of the provision of "An act to prevent the spread of scarlet fever and diphtheria in the District of Columbia," approved December 20, 1890, is hereby made available for the enforcement of the provisions of this act so far as they relate to scarlet fever and diphtheria

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 32. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing be and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, our only medical officer, who is familiar with this question, whether any progress has been made toward establishing a hospital for contagious diseases?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, in reply to that question, that in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the present year—and I understand the conferees on the part of the House have agreed to it—we have made provision for two isolated buildings in connection with two of the established hospitals, and have appropriated $30,000 for that purpose. I think that will answer the requirements of the District of Columbia for some time to come.

Mr. HAWLEY. One of the existing hospitals has consented to set aside a ward for contagious diseases?

Mr. GALLINGER. And there will be no trouble in getting the consent of another hospital.

Mr. HAWLEY. I must have imperfectly heard that part of the bill read. I thought I heard that it was provided that no person afflicted with one of these contagious diseases should be carried through the streets or anywhere.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; only it shall be under restrictions provided by the health officers. There is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am very glad, indeed, to know that such a hospital is to be provided. Its absence so far has been a species of barbarity.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred it.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BACON, and Mr. PROCTOR were appointed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request for a further conference made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

CEMETERIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 9099) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 6, line 27, after the word "burial," to insert "disinterment or disposal;" so as to read:

It shall be the duty of every such superintendent or other person who shall receive any such permit aforesaid to indorse thereon the date of interment, disinterment, or disposal, and to preserve, sign, and return the same to the health officer of said District before 6 o'clock p. m. of the Saturday following the day of burial, disinterment, or disposal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 8, after the word "bodies," to strike out "of persons who have not" and insert "aforesaid, except such as have;" and in line 11, after the word "District," to insert "or carried through the same in transit;" so as to read:

Provided, That bodies or parts of dead bodies aforesaid, except such as have died of Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, smallpox (including varioloid), leprosy, the plague, diphtheria, or scarlet fever, may be brought into said District, or carried through the same in transit, upon a permit of the proper municipal, county, or State authorities of the place at which such person died

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 16, after the word "person," to strike out "exhibit to the public" and insert "publicly exhibit;" so as to read:

Nor shall any person publicly exhibit in said District, for pay or otherwise, any dead body of any human being, or any part of such body, without a permit from the health officer of said District so to do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 8, after the word "Washington," to insert "in the District of Columbia;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no cemetery shall hereafter be established within one mile and a half of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 2, after the word "opened," to insert "except for the purpose of disinterment;" so as to read:

That no grave in said District shall be reopened, except for the purpose of disinterment, within ten years after the burial of a person above 12 years of age, or within eight years after the burial of a child under 12 years of age.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an amendment to offer. In section 1, line 8, before the word "cemetery," where it occurs the first time, I move to insert the word "new;" so as to read "lay out any new cemetery," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. MCMILLAN were appointed.

ADMINISTRATOR OF GEORGE M'ALPIN, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 1353) for the relief of the administrator of George McAlpin, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that George McAlpin was the sutler of the Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, and was during those years required by the United States, at the United States custom-house at Baltimore, Md., to pay 3 per cent on the value of all of the supplies shipped to him within the lines of the Army; and he was thus unlawfully and unjustly required to pay to the United States $6,903.18, being 3 per cent on $230,203.29, to the United States, as appears by the books of the custom-house at Baltimore, Md.

The bill proposes to pay to the administrator of George McAlpin, deceased, $2,250.18.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 4038) to set apart a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST. From what committee did the bill come?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. VEST. I do not care to object to the bill, but there are provisions in it that I do not think ought to be there. If we are to have another national park, we ought not to have any railroads in it. That is in a timber country, and if the railroads are permitted to run through it they will have forest fires that will destroy thousands of acres of valuable timber. I have fought here for nearly twenty years against the putting of railroads into the Yellowstone National Park. All sorts of schemes have been offered here to run railroads in to make money out of that park. Here is another national park to be established, and the bill provides expressly for tramways and railways. If you are going to have a park and preserve the natural scenery, you do not want a railroad in it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the bill segregates a part of the park for this purpose and not for park purposes.

Mr. VEST. It is all called a park, if I heard the bill correctly.

Mr. ALLEN. I know.

Mr. VEST. It is to be a national park under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, as is the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. ALLEN. But, if the Senator will permit me, it takes off a part of the land which is now in the park for this purpose.

Mr. VEST. Why do you provide for a railroad to go into it if you want a park?

Mr. ALLEN. Why not?

Mr. VEST. Because it will simply start forest fires. It is unavoidable in that part of the country, where they have drought for months in the year, and where the undergrowth and the grass being inflammable, a spark will start an immense fire.

Mr. HOAR. Dead leaves.

Mr. VEST. Dead leaves and no moisture. To have a railroad running through there would be a source of incalculable damage.

Mr. STEWART. I think I shall have to object to the bill.

Mr. VEST. I will not object. I do not care about stopping the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. It is possibly so late that the bill will not receive the signature of the President. Possibly, if the Senator had examined it more carefully and investigated the danger of sparks igniting the timber and as to the great drought that he supposes exists in western Washington, he would have been quite satisfied with the measure. He would find that the largest annual rainfall is in Puget Sound—108 inches.

Mr. VEST. I know: but that is nowhere near this park.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly. It is only a dozen miles to the reserve where Mount Ranier stands. To make the reserve, it is laid off square, and through the portion that is not desirable it is proposed to give an opportunity to go up Paradise Valley by rail. It is now impossible to reach it except through the valley, and if anybody wants to go there on a train, he ought to have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, I do not want to stop any citizen of Washington or of any other State from reaching heaven if he can get there through Paradise Valley.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the bill will be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE COPYRIGHT LAW.

The bill (H. R. 10223) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights, was announced as the next House bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to make a short statement with regard to that bill, in order that any objection or proposed objection may be removed in advance. I presume almost every Senator has received a telegram from some newspaper in the United States asking him to object to the passage of this bill. Those telegrams have been sent under an entire misapprehension. They have referred to Senate bill 3631, which has not been reported by the Committee on Patents. This bill does not in any way affect newspapers, and the telegrams which have been received here have been sent under a mistake which is now understood, so that there is no objection to the passage of the bill anywhere, I believe.

Mr. MILLS. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments, in line 14 of section 1, after the word "lithograph," to insert "or other article," and at the end of the section to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to any importation of or sale of such goods or articles brought into the United States prior to the passage hereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4963 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4963. Every person who shall insert or impress such notice, or words of the same purport, in or upon any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, print, cut, engraving or photograph, or other article, whether such article be subject to copyright or otherwise, for which he has not obtained a copyright, or shall knowingly issue or sell any article bearing a notice of United States copyright which has not been copyrighted in this country; or shall import any book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph or other article bearing such notice of copyright or words of the same purport, which is not copyrighted in this country, shall be liable to a penalty of $100, recoverable one-half for the person who shall sue for such penalty and one-half to the use of the United States; and the importation into the United States of any book, chromo, lithograph, or photograph, or other article bearing such notice of copyright, when there is no existing copyright thereon in the United States, is prohibited; and the circuit courts of the United States sitting in equity are hereby authorized to enjoin the issuing, publishing, or selling of any article marked or imported in violation of the United States copyright laws, at the suit of any person complaining of such violation: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any importation of or sale of such goods or articles brought into the United States prior to the passage hereof."

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing provision be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill seems to be entirely fair upon its face. I do not know anything about it. I received a telegram this morning about it.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me? I presume almost every Senator has received telegrams from newspapers in the country. They were sent under a misapprehension that it was Senate bill 3631 which had been reported, which does apply to and may affect newspapers. It was a misapprehension. The House bill does not affect newspapers at all.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Connecticut explain the provisions of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. There is a law now, section 4963, against putting upon an article for which a copyright has not been obtained a copyright notice. The bill extends that section and provides that if there is a false notice of copyright issued, if a notice of copyright is put on an article which has not been copyrighted, and any person shall knowingly sell it, he shall be liable to the penalty; and the importation of articles which bear a false notice of copyright purporting that they had been copyrighted in the United States has been prohibited. There has been a large business of that kind done. This proviso is that the proposed act shall not apply to any importation of or sale of such goods or articles brought into the United States prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. BUTLER. Have we no law now preventing the putting on of a notice of copyright when no copyright has been issued?

Mr. PLATT. We have, but we have no law against the selling of such articles knowingly.

Mr. BUTLER. This applies to those who sell them as well as to those who import them?

Mr. PLATT. It applies to importers. There is no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. QUAY subsequently said: I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 10223) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights, to which I intended to object, but which I failed to object to because I was at the time engaged in a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

TRANSCRIPTS OF DISTRICT HEALTH RECORDS.

The bill (H. R. 9821) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to charge a fee for the issuance of transcripts from the records of the health department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 1, line 5, after the word "taxes," to insert "and by him to be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to collect a fee of 50 cents, to be paid to the collector of taxes, and by him to be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, for each transcript from the records of births, deaths, and marriages in the health department of said district: Provided, That no one transcript shall be made so as to apply to more than one birth, death, or marriage: And provided further, That no fee shall be charged for transcripts furnished the various departments of the United States Government for official purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE POSTAL LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 4566) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

FUNDING OF TERRITORIAL INDEBTEDNESS.

The bill (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM LOCK AND JAMES H. TINSLEY.

The bill (H. R. 2815) for the relief of William Lock and James H. Tinsley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 12, after the words "payment of," to strike out "the costs of the suit expended in the obtension of said judgment" and insert "$1,102.20, the amount of actual loss sustained by the Government on account of the failure of said contract;" and in line 16, before the words "as aforesaid," to strike out "the costs" and insert "amount;" so as to read:

That the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the judgment of the United States obtained March 4, 1886, in the United States district court at Louisville, Ky., against William Lock and James H. Tinsley, for $1,238.40, as the sureties of Glass & Gevelin, failing mail contractors on mail route No. 12121, upon the payment of $1,102.20, the amount of actual loss sustained by the Government on account of the failure of said contract; and upon payment of amount as aforesaid they, the said Lock and Tinsley, shall be forever released and discharged from the payment of said judgment.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following:

And all pay that may have been heretofore withheld from J. H. Tinsley, of Barboursville, Ky., by the United States, on account of services rendered by him as United States commissioner, to be applied by the United States in payment of said judgment, in excess of the actual loss sustained by the Government, the same excess being $236.66, is hereby released and directed to be paid to said Tinsley upon payment of amount of actual loss to the Government, as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. This is a House bill which proposes to relieve two mail contractors in Kentucky. They bid $135 on a contract when they meant to bid $1,350. This was occasioned by a clerical error. They were forced to fail to carry out the contract. The Government sued on the bond and collected from them. One of the Representatives of Kentucky passed a bill through the House to refund to them the amount. The bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The committee communicated with the Post-Office Department, and that Department sent a letter to the committee which I have in my desk, stating that the loss to the Government was not as much as they had collected from them. The contract was again let, and the loss to the Government was about $1,100. Then the committee recommended an amendment to the bill to simply charge them with the difference between what was collected out of their bond and what the Government actually lost. It is simply a matter of equity.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND GLEN ECHO RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 9704) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in line 13, after the word "point," to strike out "on a line across the Columbia boulevard, thence on private property;" in line 14, after the word "point," to strike out "in" and insert "on the west line of;" and at the end of line 19 to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no fares shall be charged or collected within the District of Columbia: And provided further, That unless the extension herein provided for shall be completed within six months from the date of the approval of this act, then this act shall be null and void.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maryland and operating a street railway in said State, the eastern terminus being at or near the northern boundary of the District of Columbia in Chevy Chase, be, and said corporation is hereby, authorized and empowered to obtain a right of way and construct its road and lay double tracks thereon into the District of Columbia a distance of 600 feet, and no farther, from the point in the boundary line of the District where said railway extended crosses the boundary line of the District and from said point to a point on the west line of Connecticut avenue extended, on a route to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, said corporation to have full power and authority to operate cars upon said road for the purpose of its traffic; said corporation to use electric motive power in propelling its cars: Provided, That no fares shall be charged or collected within the District of Columbia: And provided further, That unless the extension herein provided for shall be completed within six months from the date of the approval of this act, then this act shall be null and void.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INFRINGEMENT OF LETTERS PATENT.

The bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLEN. I think that bill needs some explanation.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, corporations in these days that are using patented inventions go into various States and obtain charters or acts of incorporation and then do business in other States. Now, to sue for an infringement of patent it is necessary that suit be brought in the State where the act of incorporation is obtained. In some of the States there is no provision for service upon anyone, and the corporations thus have an opportunity to infringe upon patents and almost escape any responsibility for it by reason of the difficulty of finding them in order to sue them, for it is very inconvenient to travel across the continent to sue them when they are infringing in a business established near the plaintiff or the owner of a patent.

All there is about this bill is that it authorizes suit to be brought against an infringer in the place where the business is carried on and service to be made upon an agent in the case of a corporation. The bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. LACEY, and was fully considered there. I think it is right, and that there is no objection to it.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I present the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 14, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$216,785;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
JOHN W. ROBINSON,
AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall be glad if the Senator in charge of the bill will very briefly state the important matters from which the Senate has receded.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, upon all of the general items in the naval appropriation bill where the Senate made amendments there has been an agreement, the House of Representatives in nearly every case yielding to the amendments passed by the Senate. Upon the controverted matters in the bill in relation to the increase of the Navy, the provision for the torpedo boats, and the provision regarding the price of armor, the conference was unable to come to an accord, and the committee has reported a disagreement upon all of those items—the new boats, the amount to be paid for armor, and the limitation which the Senate fixed at $300 per ton.

There is nothing that the Senate can do, of course, because its conferees have insisted upon the view that was established by this body on a yea-and-nay vote, until the whole question can be presented to the House of Representatives. That body has not yet had an opportunity to pass upon the Senate amendments, and the report of the conferees gives to the House of Representatives the opportunity of voting upon the amendments passed by the Senate, the chiefly significant one, of course, being that fixing the price of armor at $300 per ton. So, if this report is adopted by the Senate, all the rights of the Senate are maintained and the bill goes to the other House for the action of that body upon the Senate amendments. That, of course, is all that could be done in this report.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I regret that the House of Representatives was not willing to accept the price fixed by the Senate of $300 a ton for armor. I confess that I have been negligent in my duty in not ascertaining more facts about the offer of the Illinois Steel Company—I desire the attention of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I was listening to the Senator, but was called off by a suggestion by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I am now, as I always have done for about three-quarters of my life, giving my undivided attention to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. It requires the Senator's undivided attention to understand what I say, no doubt.

I said I had not been able to ascertain the full facts about the proposed offer of the Illinois Steel Company. I believe there was a bill introduced into the other House to make armor for, I think, $250 per ton; and I want to ask the Senator from Maine whether that bill or any facts in relation to the offer of the Illinois Steel Company were before the committee of conference?

Mr. HALE. The proposition or suggestion made by the Chicago company was not in any formal way before the conference, but it was considered and referred to, and was the one thing that was at the bottom of the attitude of the Senate conferees, and that was to insist, at any rate for the present, upon the proposition established by the vote of the Senate of $300 per ton. In considering that and in considering whether it is practicable to get this work done for $300 per ton—of which I personally have some doubt—the attitude of the Chicago company is a fair subject to be considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I want to tell the Senator that I have learned an additional fact. I made inquiry yesterday of one of the representatives of the Illinois Steel Company (and one of the contractors for one of the three battle ships was present) as to the time within which it would be necessary for the builders of the ships to have the first armor plate, and the builder replied, "At the end of about eight months," and Mr. Gates thought that none of the armor would be required within that time.

Mr. HALE. Eight months from now?

Mr. CHANDLER. Eight months from the present time. I have been led to believe that a new armor plant could be established within eight months; that a hydraulic press and the machinery could be either made in this country or obtained from abroad at least within nine months. So, with a very slight delay in the time for furnishing the armor, I am inclined to think there might be competition for it outside of the combined Bethlehem and Carnegie companies.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think it would be practicable for a new plant to be created and set to work that would begin turning out armor within something like eight months?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think so; but I am rather inclined to state, although I do not know personally about the subject, that the completion of the hulls could be delayed without much expense to the Government, without much cost for six months longer; and if the contracts with the builders of the three battle ships could be extended without injury for six months, I have no doubt that the Illinois Steel Company could find a plant and machinery, and begin to manufacture the armor in season for the ships.

Mr. HALE. Of course the introduction of the Illinois Company is a new thing before the public, and I should be very glad if somebody who knows about this company would give to the Senate some information about the extent of its business and whether it is so established that it would be able to carry out any proposition that it might make to the Government.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not feel myself well enough informed to state to the Senate and the Senator the full extent of the business operations of that great establishment; but I do know enough to say, in relation to it, that it is one of the largest and most thoroughly equipped establishments in the country of its kind and probably as well supported financially as any other. While at first, when this subject was talked about in connection with the Illinois Steel Company, or, as it is called, the Consolidated Steel and Iron Company, I did not know that there was any serious proposition or suggestion made by that company in reference to the manufacture of armor plate. Since that, however, I have conversed with the president of the company, who is in this city to-day, and who is a thorough business man, and who represents that great establishment. He informs me that he feels sure that armor plate can be made for the price fixed by the Senate in this bill; and I have become quite interested in the subject, because if we can make armor plate at $300 a ton, and save $100 a ton by the operation, I think it would certainly be a wise thing to do, even if it were necessary to extend the time a little within which these ships should be completed. I think it would be a wise thing to do in case the amount of money could be saved to the Government which is indicated by the difference in price.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire what is the proposition of the Steel Company of Chicago?

Mr. CULLOM. There is no formal proposition, I understand, made to anybody.

Mr. STEWART. What is the suggestion, then?

Mr. CULLOM. The suggestion has been made to me by the president of the company that armor plate can be manufactured for $300 per ton. I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has talked with the president of the company on the question of time, and he thinks he could be ready to make such armor within the period of eight months.

Mr. STEWART. If we could do it within a year, it would be a great thing.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; if we could do it within a year, it would be doing a great thing for the country.

I only desired to make this statement, because I think there is enough in it to seriously consider whether we ought not to adopt whatever policy is necessary to save the amount of money which it is claimed can be saved.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the provision might be left out entirely, as there will be over eight months intervening before we are required to make an appropriation or to make an arrangement.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will take at least nine months to establish a new plant.

Mr. STEWART. I know; but if you try to make this arrangement with the Chicago company, and they should refuse, it can be remedied very soon in the extra session.

Mr. QUAY. I merely desire to ask the Senator from Illinois whether the Illinois Steel Company has ever manufactured any armor plate or has ever been engaged in the process of its manufacture?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think that company have been manufacturing armor plate, but they have the very best men in the country already engaged for the manufacture, in case they get an opportunity of going into it.

Mr. QUAY. Then it is very remarkable that they do not proceed to make a bid or some sort of proposition if they have already engaged the very best men in the country to proceed with the work. I do not understand that, and it occurs to me that what I intimated the other night was the truth, that the rumors of some great demand on the part of the Illinois Steel Company to enter into the manufacture of armor resulted from the dissolution of the steel-rail pool, and is merely a device of my friend the president of that company, for whom I have the highest esteem, to annoy the manufacturers of armor plate.

Mr. CULLOM. Whatever may have prompted the gentlemen who represent the Consolidated Steel and Iron Company of Chicago to make suggestions about this matter, I do not know, but if there has been a dissolution of pools which has resulted in cheaper steel, that is a pretty good thing so far as it has gone.

Mr. QUAY. The pool merely existed as to steel rails, and not as to anything else.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand what the pool was. Probably the representative of the Chicago Steel and Iron Company, referred to, who is here in the city, has had his attention called to this subject within the last week or two, and has been engaged in looking up the best men who are to be found in the United States for the manufacture of armor plate in case he went into this enterprise.

Mr. QUAY. I understand, and I think the Senator from Illinois does, that the officer of the company referred to has been engaged in looking up men for another purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I shall be curious to see presented in writing, and with a due offer of security, the proposition for the guaranty of a contract that a plant can be put up and armor turned out within nine months at $250 a ton. I venture to say that no proposition of that kind, or anything in any respect resembling it, has ever been made by any arms-making or any armor-making firm in the world.

I have absolute, entire, and complete incredulity; and if I were a betting man, I would bet any odds and challenge those men to present a contract under which they would or could perform this promise.

I never heard of a plant being produced in less than about two years, and it is usually three or four years. I suppose these Illinois gentlemen are men of great ability and excellent character, and since Chicago so distinguished herself——

Mr. HALE. She produced a Presidential candidate.

Mr. HAWLEY. She produced a Presidential candidate, as the Senator says, but since she performed such magnificent work in connection with the exhibition, I am disposed to have great faith in her, but not to the extent of believing that she will beat three to one all workers in iron in the universe.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not undertake to fathom the disbelief of the Senator from Connecticut on anything. I have no doubt that it is unlimited in this direction. The facts of this case are very simple. The Senator from Connecticut is not posted, and he is wrong.

It is true that it took the Bethlehem Company some time to prepare. It took much less time for the Carnegie Company to prepare; and I have been credibly informed that a press can be obtained from Europe, and the machinery for shaping armor, within nine months from the time the order is given.

The Secretary of the Navy reports that that press and the machinery will cost between five hundred and seven hundred thousand dollars, and the land and the buildings and the completion of the plant perhaps $700,000 more, making between $1,400,000 and $1,500,000 for the establishment of the plant.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether there is not now a prohibition, by a law on the statute books of the United States, which will prevent our importing or buying abroad anything connected with the making of armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. If we should establish a Government armor plant——

Mr. GRAY. I ask whether there is now such a prohibition?

Mr. CHANDLER. If we were to establish a Government armor plant to-day, I think there is no reason why we could not import machinery from abroad for Government use without paying duty.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator again, if he will indulge me, whether there is not a provision which prevents the United States from buying steel armor abroad in any amount for any purpose?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a general provision.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a provision that all the ships shall be of domestic material, as the Senator knows very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. Specific acts have contained that prohibition, but there has never been a general law passed.

Mr. HALE. Yes; a general law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not.

Mr. GRAY. I have been informed that there is a general law which prohibits the purchase of steel armor abroad.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GRAY. That would have to be repealed.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is certainly no such prohibition on private parties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. There certainly can be no prohibition against private parties importing machinery and paying the duty for the purpose of erecting steel plants of any kind.

Mr. GRAY. The duty amounts to a prohibition in that regard.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether, in his opinion, in conducting our side of the bargain in this matter—and there are difficulties in the Senate of the United States or in the Congress of the United States in conducting the Government's side of the bargain with the contractor's on the other—it would not be important to repeal all such prohibitions now, so that whether or not this world-wide combination which has been alluded to exists now, the Secretary would be able to take advantage, at any time in the future, of any break in that combination, and thus control somewhat in our favor the market here?

Mr. CHANDLER. The time in this country and in Europe when there will be competition in armor is a long way off. It is about as far off as the time when the Senator's free-trade notions will be realized.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think this has anything to do with free trade or protection. I am merely asking for information. I am somewhat in favor——

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought that was the Senator's point.

Mr. GRAY. I am somewhat in line with the Senator's proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. Excuse me.

Mr. GRAY. And so far as it has been accomplished I sympathize with it; but if we are to delay the building of these ships until we can make a bargain with the armor makers of the United States, had we not better throw down the barrier that now exists by law which prevents our dealing with foreign armor-plate makers?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me for a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a fair inquiry, and I desire to answer it, and then I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island. It is a fair inquiry, and it might be advisable, if the Bethlehem Company and the Carnegie Company will not lower their rates, to go abroad and buy the armor. But the same combination exists over there, and we have the report of Secretary Herbert, the quotation from which was made by the Senator from South Carolina night before last, in which he says that there is strong reason to believe that foreign armor manufacturers and American armor manufacturers are in one combination.

What we want to do now, I will say to the Senator, is to get the armor for these three ships, the hulls of which are already contracted for, and the question of breaking up the combination or getting free trade is, as I respectfully repeat, a long way off.

Mr. GRAY. I am not talking about getting free trade or any principle of economics that applies to that great principle which has been before the American people so long, but I am speaking now of dealing on the part of the Government with this condition of things which is so disadvantageous to the United States and whether it would not be prudent and wise in conducting the bargain on our side to throw down this barrier, and if we have to wait some time, present that temptation to European armor makers to break the combination.

Mr. CHANDLER. What good would it do? Does the Senator think merely allowing this amount of armor to be imported free of duty would break the combination?

Mr. GRAY. I think it would. I do not think a world-wide combination can be maintained, if there is such a one now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think we ought to wait. I think we ought to do as the Committee on Naval Affairs recommends, either get this armor for $300 a ton or establish a plant to do it. There is no great harm in buying a $500,000 hydraulic press abroad, whether we pay duty or whether we do not pay duty. If we pay duty on it, the money goes into the Treasury; if we do not pay duty, it does not go out of the appropriation.

Now, I want to go on with my argument, unless the Senator from Rhode Island desires to ask a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to make a statement about the point raised by the Senator from Delaware. If I am not misinformed, and I think I am not, the main parts of the machinery in the plants of both the Bethlehem Company and the Carnegie Company were imported from abroad. There certainly is no prohibition in our law against the importation of machinery of any kind for any purpose, and I have yet to believe, notwithstanding the assertion of the Senator from Maine, that we have a law upon our statute books that prevents the United States from importing armor plate or the machinery for making armor plate. It is a very singular condition of affairs if we have any such prohibition on our own action.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is correct. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me the solution of this question is very easy and simple, and but for the fact that some of the Republicans who voted the other night to reduce the price of armor to $300 a ton turned around and voted against the establishment of a Government plant in the event that we do not get the armor at that price, the matter would not now be before the Senate except to have the report concurred in. If the Senate will reconsider its action voting down the amendment of the committee which authorized the establishment of an armor plant by the Government itself in the event that we do not buy the armor at $300 a ton, we will have no more trouble about the matter, and then we can move without having regard to the question of importing armor plate or machinery, or establishing armor factories, or of the proposition of the Illinois Steel Company, or of giving any guaranties or anything else.

We are in no great hurry in this matter. These three battle ships which are to be constructed or are now under construction are not so necessary to the welfare of this country that we need to be in double-quick time here to give these monopolies a high price. Let us be reasonable, and at the same time let us take care of the interests of the country and the taxpayers, and let us establish a plant in the event that these people will not come to reasonable terms, as the committee and the Secretary of the Navy have declared what are reasonable terms.

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to say a word?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. All of this discussion is interesting, but it does not bear upon the question before the Senate, which is simply the adoption of the report. That does not take into account or present the question of an armor plant. That has already been settled.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me for a moment, that I may get some information?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it now in order to reconsider the vote by which the Senate the other night refused to authorize the establishment of a plant?

Mr. HALE. No; it is not, because it has gone beyond that stage. The whole matter is up on the conference report, and the conference report——

Mr. TILLMAN. Could the committee, following the example of some others, agree in conference on a provision to establish a plant and bring such a provision back?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it could not.

Mr. TILLMAN. It could not?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it could not.

Mr. TILLMAN. How can we get at the question of establishing a plant?

Mr. HALE. The Senate got at it the other night and voted down the proposition.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have seen the Senate turn around the next morning in its cooler moments and undo some foolish things done the night before.

Mr. HALE. It can do what the Senator suggests when the matter is properly before the body, but the armor-plant proposition is not before Congress. It is neither in the House nor in the Senate provision. It was voted out in the Senate, and it was not originally in the House provision. Therefore the conference has nothing to do with it. All that the conferees have to deal with is the proposition for $300 per ton, and they insisted that the vote of the Senate was an instruction to the conferees.

Mr. TILLMAN. One more question.

Mr. HALE. Although every member of the committee voted against the decision of the Senate, the conferees consider themselves bound by the action of the Senate. The whole thing is presented in this report, and I do not think the Senator will advance the matter by introducing extraneous matter now which is not before us.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to facilitate and expedite the passage of the bill, but I desire also to see that these people do not get any more than $300 a ton for the armor.

Mr. HALE. The proposition that goes to the House is for $300.

Mr. TILLMAN. And the House refuses to agree?

Mr. HALE. The House has not yet had a chance to refuse. What I am asking is that the report shall be adopted, so that it will go to the House. The longer we delay——

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, the question of the price of armor will be left open, and we will discuss it after we adopt the report and you come back and make your report?

Mr. HALE. Precisely.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I will have nothing more to say now. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. HALE. I supposed the Senator would do that when he understood it. That is all there is to do now—to adopt the report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to contribute to the stock of information on hand. I have been informed two or three times that the bid of the Chicago company, if made at all, would be upon the condition that they should make all the armor for the United States for twenty years; perhaps more. That would be a great advantage, of course. They ought to have a long contract. If they do all these things at this price, I should be perfectly willing to let them have a ten years' clear swing. People can not keep these things on their shelves and deliver at five minutes' notice.

Mr. CHANDLER. In answer to that I will state that, as I understand the facts, the Illinois Steel Company procured a bill to be introduced in the other House authorizing a contract for large quantities of armor at $260 a ton. That had no reference to these three ships.

Since that time, learning of these three ships, they have made inquiry as to whether there will be time enough for them to establish a plant and furnish the armor for these three particular ships, and they have notified the Secretary of the Navy that they stand ready, if there is time enough, which is a fact to be ascertained, to bid for the armor for these three ships.

Mr. GORMAN. In reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, I wish to state that under the law as it stands now, no matter what Congress may fix as the limit, whether $300 or $350 or $400 a ton, the Secretary of the Navy will ask for bids to furnish the armor, and he will designate the time within which it is to be delivered. So, no matter what Congress may do as to the amount, it is perfectly open to that company or any other company to bid to furnish armor if it is in condition to do it. There is no prohibition.

Mr. TILLMAN. The time would be an essential element for the reason——

Mr. GORMAN. That is absolutely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. The pending bill does not deal with the question of time, let me inform the Senator from South Carolina. The Secretary of the Navy in this case, if he performs his whole duty, would give sufficient time, unless the public service would be sacrificed——

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Secretary of the Navy authority, without Congressional action, to change the contracts already existing as to the time within which those ships are to be built and completed?

Mr. GORMAN. A year ago I stood here for four hours and tried to induce the Senate not to authorize the contracts for the ships until the price for the armor should be determined. Congress thought otherwise, and gave the Secretary of the Navy discretion, and, I think, very unwisely, to enter into a contract for the construction of the hulls of the vessels when he was prohibited from making any contract whatever for armor.

Now, the result will be that the ships will remain on the ways for a year or two years, at his discretion; but it is entirely in his discretion. He can give sufficient time to enable the Chicago concern, if it is ready to do it, to put up its plant; and that is not involved in the pending bill in any shape or manner.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question? Suppose the Secretary of the Navy has agreed to begin to furnish the armor for the hulls of those ships nine months from now?

Mr. GORMAN. That is not the fact.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. Permit me to answer the Senator from New Hampshire. In the bill which passed here one year ago, when the House sent a proposition for four battle ships and those of us on the committee tried to reduce it to two, and finally a compromise was made for three ships, no provision whatever was made for armor. On the contrary, Congress said the Secretary should not make a contract for armor until the price was determined by his report and the action of Congress at this session.

Now, in the contract for the construction of the hulls, as I understand it, and I think I have read the contract, no agreement whatever was made with the shipbuilders as to the time in which the armor should be furnished. So it is open to the Department.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I have seen various bills and propositions before this body looking to the payment of large sums of money to these contractors because of damages occasioned by delays caused by the Government, so they charge. I wish to know if we are to get into another box like that and have a large damage fund to make good to the contractors because of not having furnished the armor in time?

Mr. GORMAN. I have no doubt that will occur. That is what I tried to impress upon the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, that goes back to last spring, when we were all drunk with politics. We are coming down to a question of business now.

Mr. GORMAN. We were not all drunk with politics; at least I deny that I was. I dealt with that question in the face of a Presidential election precisely as I deal with it now. I dealt with it precisely under Mr. Cleveland's Administration as I did under General Harrison's Administration, applying, so far as I could, business principles to it, and for twelve years we have had no politics in the discussion of matters pertaining to the Navy. We have never, from the day Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated in March, 1885, until within the last six months, had any political discussions in regard to the Navy. It was one of the subjects that was raised entirely out of politics, and we have given great discretion——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that the exigencies of the situation required that these three large shipbuilding establishments should be kept at work, that thereby they might be induced, all of them being Republicans, I believe, to contribute handsomely to the campaign fund?

Mr. GORMAN. I did not think——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am only shooting in the air. I have no facts. It is mere guesswork, you know, as to what is practical and what has been done.

Mr. GORMAN. I only know that I stood here and fought all day Sunday and Sunday night until 12 o'clock to prevent more than one ship being built.

Mr. TILLMAN. I fought what little I could, and I had my say about it.

Mr. GORMAN. But the division in the body was not on the aisle that divides the Chamber. Our friends on this side of the Chamber, I am sorry to say, or a majority of them, agreed with the other side that in the interest of the Government we had better build three of these great vessels. I regret that action. That has gone, but we are dealing with what the result is.

Now, the Senator asks me a question, if damage cases will come up here. I have no doubt they will, and that is what I had in mind and stated at the time. In the construction of vessels under earlier contracts, it was required that the armor should be delivered at a certain and fixed time, and the failure to deliver it enabled the ship builders to bring in here bills for damages occasioned by the delay. I have no doubt that will occur in this case, although as I understand the contract—I have not read it for six or eight months—the Secretary of the Navy provided so far as he could against such claims being made for the three ships on the ways by not specifying any time within which the armor should be delivered. But after a time, as the Senator and I both know, these bills of damages will come in. I have no doubt of it—none whatever. That is all past. We can not control it except as to the amount to be appropriated hereafter. We will deal with that question when it comes.

But I desire the Senate and the country distinctly to understand that at no time within the past four years were the Illinois Steel Company prohibited from bidding for armor. My belief is that they were in a combine all over the world, and while the Illinois concern and the balance of them who are now talking about bidding for it were not manufacturing iron fitted for the naval vessels, the same scale of prices ran all the way through. Happily, I think we are reaching the time in the case of the combination of the steel manufacturers, when that seed which is placed in every combine and will grow and destroy it has developed in this case, because it has all been overdone, the prices are open, and in the war which they are making among themselves the public will have the benefit of it temporarily, but not to the extent to which it has gone now.

I do not propose by any vote of mine to exclude these gentlemen. On the contrary, I welcome them into the fold as competitors with these two great concerns which have been manufacturing the armor for the Government. I should like to see them do it. Two of them at least have control of all that great deposit of ore in the Northwest which has amazed the world and which has enabled them to manufacture steel cheaper probably than it is being manufactured anywhere else in the world. They have the coal deposits, and I am glad to see that the combination has been broken up and that there is to be competition among them.

Now, all that I have contended for in this bill is that the Government shall keep its hands free from the manufacture of armor. I disagree with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and the members of the committee that it is wise for the Government to enter upon the manufacture of steel.

Mr. HALE. That is not presented by this report.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that. I do not propose, however, to be interrupted in that way by the Senator from Maine. It has been referred to in the Senate, as the Senator knows perfectly well. I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate unnecessarily, but it has been brought up here.

Mr. HALE. My intimation was not to cut off the Senator. I know he would agree with me that the conference report does not present that subject-matter at all.

Mr. GORMAN. No; I understand that. It has been disposed of by the Senate. But it has been brought into the discussion, and it makes its impression upon the country, because it is presented as a line of action which would enable the Government to protect itself.

The armor to be ordered in this case and the armor that will be ordered probably in the next five years, if it were undertaken by spending a million and a half dollars for a Government plant, would cost the Government $1,200 a ton instead of $400 a ton, and if you continued the manufacture of it, it would be precisely as every other manufacturing establishment which the Government has. It would cost 100 per cent more than you could buy the article for from these people. No Government on earth, none of the great powers, where they have the ability to manage such work better than we have because of the different system, by boards and not by appropriations by Congress, has ever undertaken it, for the reason that no Government can do it.

I trust that the report will be adopted, and, as the Senator from Maine has said, the conferees on the part of the Senate regard the vote of the Senate as to the price to be paid as their instruction. We have to deal with another branch which fixed the price at $400 in effect by fixing the amount for the whole gross amount of armor to be ordered by the bill on that basis, and with them we have to deal. But the conferees understand the vote of the Senate, and they will stand by that vote and properly represent this body and let the House of Representatives determine the question as to what they will do.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to remark in a few words that it is evident that the Senate will stand by the position it has taken, $300 a ton, and I was about to suggest, although it may not be entirely pertinent to the case now, that I believe if the Secretary of the Navy were authorized to make a contract for five or ten years with any party who would furnish good armor according to specifications at $240 a ton we would get it at that price in the future. I believe that would be better than to establish Government works. If we could determine what we are willing to pay for a period of ten years, say, and make a contract of that kind (it probably could not be done in time to apply to these ships) to apply to future ships, I believe we would save a vast amount of money, more than we would by undertaking to build works by the Government, and more than we would by letting it run on and be at the mercy of this world-wide combination. If this breaks up, others will be formed. I have no doubt that an economical contract can be made to get the armor at a reasonable price if you will make a contract for a term of years, so as to give them an opportunity to get a reasonable profit on the construction of their works.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I merely desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that the Government at this time is building its own cannon. We have created a plant to make artillery to arm these very battle ships, and to arm the forts which are erected, and harbor defenses, and all that sort of thing. I deny the proposition that the Government can not conduct a business just as economically as private parties do, if you will keep politics out of it. You can not do it, in one sense of the word, because there is a disposition to have red-tape here by the roll. You will not let the Navy Department go forward, like business men, and do this, that, and the other for the benefit of the Navy, without having restriction upon top of restriction, which prohibits them from economizing. You interfere with the hours of labor, you interfere in every possible way, so as to give private manufacturers the advantage.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator allow me? He is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee. We have a Government factory for the Navy at Washington to finish and assemble these guns after the tubes have been formed. So we have one for the Army at Watervliet. Then in addition to that we provided that certain of the battle ships should be built in the navy-yard to compete with private parties.

There has been no interference, so far as I know, but the broadest liberality has prevailed in the management of these concerns; and yet it is a matter of demonstration that the ships that were built in the Navy cost twice as much as those built by private contractors where the hours of labor are precisely the same, for the law provides that eight hours shall apply to workmen in the Government yards and to all Government contractors.

It is a matter of broader business than that. The shipbuilders who contracted with the Government not only have the Government work to do, but they have the work to do for private enterprises. They keep their establishments going. They have their skilled men brought there and they keep them. It is not possible for the Government to do that, because the work of the Government would not last long enough to keep skilled men in its employment all the time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Have we not got navy-yards all up and down the coast, equipped at a cost of millions and millions of dollars, and the machinery lying there rusting and mechanics employed there? Instead of giving them employment in Government works at the reasonable price which other parties pay, for political reasons you increase the pay, you reduce the hours of labor, and tie them up with restrictions as to roll calls and in every imaginable way by which time is lost; and they, of course, have their purpose in giving work to private contract.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question? The Senate has taken its ground at $300 as a limit. The report embodies that. If Senators believe that that is a good limitation and that it ought to be fixed, the sooner we get this report to the House of Representatives the better.

Mr. TILLMAN. My dear sir, if the Senator had not brought up the question of the Government building its own plant, which I had introduced, and went on to argue about it, I would not have presumed to have delayed the Senate by saying a word; but I did not care to have the impression go out that I was not desirous and willing to defend the proposition that, if you keep the rottenness of politics out of it, the Government can conduct business just as cheaply as anybody else.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly that is the view the Senator has. That is not involved in the report made here.

Mr. TILLMAN. I give way, and I hope the report will be adopted immediately.

Mr. HALE. Anyone who is in favor of this reduction ought to see that the sooner we get the report to the House, so that the House may act upon it, the better.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is of course the better if the bill is to be passed at this session. I feel that we should at some appropriate time discuss this matter in the interest of economy, and for the reason that we shall have an extra session, I believe, in ten days or so there is no need of the whip and spur to get this through.

Mr. HALE. But there would be no limitation whatever, and the whole thing would be left open, as it is now, which the Senator does not desire, if this bill did not pass.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it is not my intention to take up any of the time of the Senate in discussing this question. I voted for the limitation of $300 a ton. I also at the last session introduced a bill limiting the amount of money to be paid for armor plate and providing for the erection of an armor-plate factory. I did so after careful consideration and after giving the matter a very large share of my time during the last session of Congress.

I seldom disagree with the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] on questions of this character, but I must say that it does not make any difference to my mind what the Senate passes or what instructions we may give to the Senators composing the committee in regard to our wishes or views on the price we want to pay for armor plate; my judgment is simply, as we are well aware of the fact, that the combination of armor-plate manufacturers which exists in this country and extends to Europe is so strong that it makes little difference what we may do here or instruct our committee to do; it will not compel the manufacturers to accede to our wishes.

We have evidence now that the Illinois Steel Company are willing to erect an armor-plate factory in conjunction with their steel works. This has only been brought about by a temporary break-up of the great steel trust of this country, which has reduced the price of steel rails from $22 a ton to about $14 a ton. Every business man knows that this result will only be temporary, and that the trust will be again reorganized on a stronger basis, and with that will come stronger ties in the armor trust that now exists.

It has been stated and proven that the Government has paid the money for the armor-plate works now controlled by those known as the armor trust—we paying the money, they owning the works. The question is simply this: If we can afford to buy and pay for plants for private corporations to the extent of six or eight millions of dollars, what reason can be given that we should not expend one and a half million dollars to own our own, when we know and have evidence satisfactory to any business man that armor plate does not cost to exceed $200 a ton, and that we are confronted with this trust, no matter what amount is put in the bill.

In my judgment, the result of all this will be that when you come to ask these gentlemen to accept either $300 or $400 a ton they will notify the Secretary of the Navy that their price is $600 a ton, about what we are now paying them, and that if we want the armor plate they are ready to supply it at that figure. And when the Secretary of the Navy comes forward at a future session of Congress, as he no doubt will, and presents that statement of facts to this body and tells us that the hulls of the ships are completed and ready for the armor and the time of the contract has expired, and the Naval Committee or some of its members, no doubt, will tell us how great the expense to the Government will be in case the contract is not awarded, we will be called on then and no doubt will vote to pay these men whatever price they ask.

I say, with all due respect to my honored friend the Senator from Maryland, that I believe if the Senate honestly intends or expects to procure armor for the Government at a fair price, there is but one business way of securing it, and that is by authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase or erect an armor plant. Without that, to my mind, all the labor that has been expended on this matter will be fruitless, and when we vote not to spend this money for the erection of an armor-plate factory, we shall practically indirectly vote to say to these men, "You can charge us whatever you please; you can continue your trust, and while we should like to have you supply armor for less money, we have no desire to interfere with what your business judgment may be."

Mr. President, after the Government has spent millions of dollars, giving it away practically, as a subsidy, with an understanding that fair prices should be maintained, after we have paid for these plants, I see no other course open to us but to erect our own plant. It matters little whether we insist upon $300 a ton or whether we embody any amount to go to the House. Practical results in this whole question can only be reached by the expenditure of a million and a half dollars, and by the Government owning its own armor-plate works, which, in my judgment, it should do.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I had the honor to be a member of the original commission in relation to guns and armor, and to have visited England—at my own expense, I may say—visiting Woolwich, Chatham, and Shoeburyness, and to have participated in the report made by that commission on the subject. Therefore I have taken an interest in it from that time to this. We visited every portion of the United States where there was any plant that was capable of the construction of armor or guns. The honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the chairman of the committee, made the report which was the origin of the basis for all future operations in relation to guns and armor. The price established under the contracts with the Secretary of the Navy, under the acts which were passed by Congress, ran up to a very high figure by reason of the establishment of plants costing from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, which were experimental to a great extent, as the owners of the plants could not foresee how long the necessities of the Government would continue in relation to the supply of armor.

The recent developments in connection with steel companies, the reduction of steel rails from $28 a ton to $21 a ton, one-third or over, has established in my mind as a business man, as one accustomed to go into calculations of this kind, that the price of armor in all probability ought to be reduced in the same proportion. At the same time the demand for armor is not like that for steel rails. The only customer is the Government. The Congress of the United States may to-day give an order for 3,000 tons which may cease in three years, and the plant, which cost from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 to put in operation, may be left entirely idle. So the proportion of profit to be allowed to the manufacturers of armor in the United States reasonably, from a business standpoint, ought to be more than that derived from the manufacture of steel rails, which are in demand every year and at all times by all the great corporations which have been furnishing so many miles of railroad to the United States.

I was in favor of limiting the price to $400 a ton on the general business principle that the cost of the production of steel in every shape has been reduced to an equivalent of that amount. I am not in favor of the rate of $300 a ton. I think we may make that mistake by reason of the offers that I have heard of as governing the minds of Senators. Still the offer has never been presented to my mind in a clear, outspoken way. I ask the Senator from Illinois if there is a proposition from the Illinois Steel Company to furnish the armor at a less price to-day? What is the proposition of the Illinois Steel Company?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know of any specific proposition having been made in writing. There has been a bill introduced in the other branch of Congress proposing to make armor plate, on certain conditions, for $260 a ton.

Mr. SEWELL. What are the conditions?

Mr. CULLOM. That we should make a contract for a term of twenty years. I am not insisting upon any particular course of action by this body; but I think there has been enough said by the president of the Illinois Steel and Iron Company in the direction of making armor plate for $300 a ton to put upon the Senate the duty of looking into the matter more carefully and taking such steps as would enable the Government to get the benefit of such a proposition, if it is made in all seriousness.

Mr. SEWELL. I agree fully with the conclusions of the Senator from Illinois. The Illinois Steel Company is a great corporation, managed by a live American.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SEWELL. He is a man who has got vim in him and capital back of him. If Mr. Gates would come here and propose to furnish armor for $240 a ton, I am for him or any other man who has a responsibility that will hold it up; but I am not for him with the idea of a contract for twenty years. We all know that there is nothing in that.

Mr. President, I am against the idea of the Congress of the United States endeavoring to take advantage of our own great industrial establishments. There was a time a few years ago when we had to send a committee to all these people and beg them to establish a plant. Congress would not take the risk to have the Government go into the manufacture of it. These great and enlightened merchants of this country invested their capital in it, and they invested it to a very much greater extent than they would do to-day. I am against any idea of the Congress of the United States endeavoring to ruin commercial establishments. Make your advertisements, get your armor at the cheapest price possible, but do not accompany it with a threat that unless you can get it you will establish your own plant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 2d instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana;

An act (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site in Colorado and to restore the land contained in the same to entry;

An act (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company;

An act (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.;

An act (S. 3721) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River;

An act (S. 3725) to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea; and

The joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the following bills and joint resolutions:

An act (S. 153) authorizing the persons herein named to accept certain decorations and testimonials from the late Hawaiian Government;

An act (S. 1676) authorizing Rear-Admiral W. A. Kirkland to accept a gold box presented to him by the Emperor of Germany;

An act (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress, approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company;

An act (S. 3307) declaring the Potomac Flats a public park under the name of the Potomac Park;

An act (S. 3340) authorizing Herbert H. D. Pierce to accept a medal from the Russian Government;

An act (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called, and to enable the President to otherwise promote an international agreement;

A joint resolution (S. R. 76) authorizing Lieut. William McCarty Little to accept a decoration from the King of Spain;

A joint resolution (S. R. 107) to authorize Prof. Simon Newcomb, United States Navy, and Prof. Asaph Hall, United States Navy, to accept decorations from the Government of the Republic of France; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 205) to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

The message further announced that the bill (S. 2037) to provide times and places for holding terms of the United States courts in Utah having been presented to the President on the 18th day of February, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.

INFRINGEMENT OF LETTERS PATENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10203) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent.

Mr. PLATT. The bill has been read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT WATER-MAIN TAXES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next House bill on the Calendar will be reported.

The bill (H. R. 10331) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 1, line 25, after the word "lot," to strike out "of" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have a little explanation as to how the bill changes existing law.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not know that I can in a moment fully explain that. I will state that it is an exact copy of a bill which passed both branches last May, with the exception of slight changes of phraseology in section 2, to avoid the danger of litigation owing to misconstruction. The bill passed both bodies and was sent to the President, and then the Commissioners recommended these slight verbal changes and the Senate passed a joint resolution changing section 2 in those particulars, but the House deeming the bill, and very properly, I think, the wiser form, did not adopt that joint resolution, but sent us this bill. Both bodies have therefore acted on the measure precisely as it is here, but in different forms. This brings their action together on a bill, instead of one acting on the joint resolution and the other on the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FRANCISCO PERNA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of House bills on the Calendar will be resumed.

The bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Francisco Perna was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all the real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to Francisco Perna, of Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, prior to the passage of this act be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizenship, approved March 3, 1887, and remits all forfeitures incurred by force of that act in respect of such real estate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10367) to revive and reenact a law to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been heretofore read as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEX TO GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 211) providing for a comprehensive index to Government publications from 1881 to 1893 was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the joint resolution, in line 10, by striking out "1893" and inserting "1897." I should like to have that index brought up nearer to date. It is a very valuable work.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that this is a House joint resolution, and any amendment of it may cause its defeat.

Mr. STEWART. If an amendment would delay it, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that since 1893 the index has been prepared by the Government. This is to close the gap between the report prepared down to 1881 by the late Maj. Ben: Perley Poore and the Government index beginning in 1893.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALES IN SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6352) to simplify the system of making sales in the Subsistence Department to officers and enlisted men of the Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 11, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert "and such sales paid for within the calendar month in which made shall be regarded as cash sales;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1299 and 1300 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and that section 1144 of those statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1144. The officers of the Subsistence Department shall procure and keep for sale to officers and enlisted men, at cost prices for cash, such articles as may from time to time be designated by the Secretary of War and such sales paid for within the calendar month in which made shall be regarded as cash sales: Provided, That sales of such stores on credit shall be made only to officers and enlisted men who have not been regularly paid, or who are in the field where it is impracticable to procure funds, and to recruits during their first month of enlistment, the amounts due therefor to be charged on the pay accounts of officers and on the muster and pay rolls of enlisted men next after the date of purchase and deducted from the payments made upon such pay accounts or muster and pay rolls by the pay department."

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest a mere verbal amendment. In line 12, after the word "which," I move to insert the words "they were;" so as to read:

And such sales paid for within the calendar month in which they were made shall be regarded, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought of moving for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, but perhaps that may not be necessary. I think the House will simply concur in the amendment, as it is so obviously right.

CORYDON WINKLER.

The bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the War Department the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls and records against Corydon Winkler, late a private of the Eighth Company, First Battalion, Ohio Sharpshooters, and issue to him an honorable discharge, to date the 1st of May, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under the order of the Senate, I take it that unobjected pension bills will be included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one other House bill yet remaining on the Calendar, which has not been disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am aware of that, but before that bill is acted upon I want to have an understanding. As I say, I take it that under the order of the Senate, unobjected bills on the pension Calendar, which are five in number, will be considered as included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands the order of the Senate. The pension bills are as much a part of the Calendar as any other portion of the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

THOMAS ROSBRUGH.

The bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Thomas Rosbrugh was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Commissioner of the General Land Office to permit Thomas Rosbrugh, of St. Clair County, Mo., to enter 160 acres of public land, subject to entry under the homestead or settlement laws, not mineral, nor in the actual occupation of any settler, in lieu of the southeast quarter of section 24, in township 38, of range 27 west, in St. Clair County, Mo., which land was entered by said Thomas Rosbrugh on December 21, 1869, under the homestead laws, the entry being reported to be without conflict by instruction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the date of January 22, 1870, the title to half of which land failed because of a prior disposition, which did not then appear upon the records of the Land Office, and the entry of said Rosbrugh was canceled; provided that he shall not have made any other entry of land of the United States under the homestead laws, and that a final certificate and patent shall issue to him or his legal heirs or representatives, upon such entry as he may make hereunder, without proof of residence or cultivation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT MORGAN MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, there is one more House bill which I wish considered, but, having been reported to-day, it is not on the printed Calendar. It is within the rule agreed upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to say the bill was reported to-day.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it would require unanimous consent to act upon it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the request, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill referred to by the Senator from Connecticut will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10304) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and such is the order of the Senate.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9571) authorizing the Galveston and Great Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota reports from the Committee on Indian Affairs a substitute for a pending Senate bill, and asks unanimons consent that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the substitute alone be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will be difficult to understand the nature of the bill unless both the bill and the substitute be read. The bill being a House bill, we can not tell very well what it means unless both bills be read. I ask that the House bill be read first, and then the Senate substitute, so that we may know about what the action of the committee is.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that is unnecessary. We are not going to act upon the original House bill; we are going to act upon the bill as reported by the committee, if we pass either.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition of the Senator from South Dakota is to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I report a substitute for the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. ALLEN. We ought to have the House bill read, so that we may know what it is, and what is to be substituted for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator demand the reading of the House bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any difficulty about reading the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Dakota that the clerks have not the House bill at the desk. The matter had better be passed over until the House bill is brought.

Mr. HOAR. I merely want to suggest to my honorable friend from Rhode Island that his objections are very much like the rain, which falls upon the just and the unjust alike.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know to which class the Senator from Massachusetts belongs. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to state for the information of the Senate that this bill was reported as a substitute from the committee because the House bill did not conform to the rule the committee has laid down with regard to these right-of-way bills in the Indian Territory. The changes were so great that the committee decided to report a full substitute. It seems to me that it is unnecessary to read anything but the substitute.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the rule to which the Senator refers?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The rule relative to guarding the rights of the Indians, and so forth. We must have these bills conform to the rule. The House bill does not conform to that form, and so we have reported a substitute for it. It seems to me the Senator from Rhode Island ought not to desire the House bill to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska insist upon the reading of the House bill?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the substitute reported from the committee may be considered instead of the original bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the substitute be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Galveston and Great Northern Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company along the south line of the county of Harper, State of Kansas, and running thence in a south and southeasterly direction, over the most practicable route, through the Indian Territory and the Territory of Oklahoma, to a point at or near Denison, State of Texas, thence to the city of Galveston, said State, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, and sidings as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway and telegraph and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through the said Territories for the said Galveston and Great Northern Railway Company, the same to be 50 feet on either side of the track of said railway from the center thereof, and, in addition to the above right of way, to take and use a strip of land 100 feet in width, with a length of 2,000 feet, for stations at such points as the said railway company may deem to their interest to erect, with the right to use such additional grounds, where there are heavy cuts or fills, as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed and track, not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of the said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians, or individual Indians, from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway and telegraph and telephone line shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants, according to the laws, usages, and custom of any of the Indian tribes or nations through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway and telegraph and telephone line. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of disinterested referees, to be appointed, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the principal chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railway company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a judge or clerk of a United States court or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof, and upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the judge of the United States court for the central district of the Indian Territory upon the application of the other party. A majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member after due notice. The chairman of such board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings, provided the hearings shall be within the county where the property is situated, for which compensation is being assessed for the taking thereof or damages thereto, and at a place as convenient as may be for said occupant, unless the said occupant and said railway company agree to have the hearing at another place. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day he is engaged in assessing compensation, with mileage of 5 cents per mile for each mile necessarily traveled in the discharge of their duties. Said board of referees shall have power to call for and examine witnesses under oath, and said witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed witnesses by the laws of the Territory or nation to which they belong. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award and be paid by the said railway company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award.

SEC. 4. That either party being dissatisfied with the findings and award of the referees shall have the right, within sixty days after the filing of the award, as hereinbefore provided, and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the United States district court for the central district of the Indian Territory, sitting at the place nearest and most convenient to the land and property which is sought to be condemned, and said court shall then proceed for determining the damage done to the property, in the same and like manner as other civil actions in the said court. The said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition, and the same shall be heard and determined by said court in accordance with the laws now in force, or hereafter enacted for the government of said court, and the measure of damages in condemning property authorized by this act shall be that prescribed by the laws of the State of Arkansas, in so far as the same are not inconsistent with the laws now in force or hereafter enacted for the government of the United States courts in said Territories in such cases. If the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the costs of the litigation shall be adjudged against the railway company, and if the judgment of the court shall be for the same as the award of the referees, then the cost shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings shall have been commenced in court, the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then shall have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad and telegraph and telephone line. If such appeal is not taken as hereinbefore set forth, the award shall be conclusive and final, and shall have the same force and effect as a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 5. That said railway company is authorized, and hereby given the right, to connect or cross with its tracks the tracks and railroad of any other company or person owning or operating a railway in the said Territories. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any such corporation or person for such crossing, such compensation shall be determined in the same manner as hereinbefore provided for determining the compensation for land and other property taken and damaged.

SEC. 6. That said railway company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territories a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Arkansas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territories within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits of said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 7. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the particular nation or tribes through whose lands said line may be located the sum of $50, in addition to the compensation provided for in this act, for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territories, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location, as hereinafter set forth, dissent from the allowance hereinbefore provided for, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to said nations or tribes under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territories are owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said nation. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be disbursed by him in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force with said nations or tribes: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nations or tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railway as it may deem just and proper for the benefit of said nations or tribes; and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 8. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located lines through said Territories to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located; after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void; and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before the construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 9. That the officers, servants, and employees of said company necessary to the construction and management of said railroad shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 10. That said railway company shall build at least 75 miles of its railway in said Nation within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all roads and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 11. That the said Galveston and Great Northern Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Nation or tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 12. That all mortgages, deeds of trust, and other conveyances executed by said railway company, conveying any portion of its railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Territories shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 13. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 14. That the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from South Dakota will kindly explain the difference between these two propositions, and state whether they are substantially the same or essentially different.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am always pleased to furnish information to the Senator from New Hampshire, and he very often needs it.

The measure is a simple right-of-way bill through the Indian Territory. The provisions of the bill as it came from the House, in the case of damage or injury to the improvements of Indi ns or others, placed the jurisdiction in the courts of Kansas, for instance. The Senate substitute places the jurisdiction over matters of condemnation and right of way in the courts of the Indian Territory. I think that is the main proposition. That necessitated so many changes that the committee concluded to report a substitute.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Indian Affairs in dealing with these bills for rights of way through the Indian Territory and the Territory of Oklahoma have adopted a form for the bills, and they try to make them all conform to the provisions as adopted by the committee and by the Senate. The pending bill as it came from the other House differed therefrom in some respects, and the committee thought it ought to be so changed that it would agree with the form of bills which heretofore have been recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was a controversy at one time in reference to the location of stations in the Indian Territory, and I should like to ask the Senator within what distance there may be stations upon the proposed line of road. What are the provisions of the bill in that respect?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It grants an additional width of 100 feet right of way wherever a station is located, and it leaves it to the road to determine that question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any provision in the bill that there shall be a station every so many miles?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Ought there not to be?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 7864) entitled "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States," with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate upon which the committee were unable to agree; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate upon which the committee were unable to agree; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 9023) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 9704) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 4193) to correct the military record of William F. Souger; and

A bill (H. R. 9607) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, and 8; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out in line 4 of said amendment the word "twenty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$400,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
EUGENE HALE,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
J. A. HEMENWAY,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MARY FORWARD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next case on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 4930) granting a pension to Mary Forward was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary Forward, formerly the widow of Charles Branch, late of Company C, Third Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH M. SPYKER.

The bill (H. R. 6634) granting a pension to Sarah M. Spyker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension, at $8 per month, Sarah M. Spyker, widow of L. P. Spyker, ensign, Capt. W. A. Goodwin's company of Alabama Volunteers, Indian war, 1836.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the report in this case be read.

The report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER February 26, 1897, was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6634) granting a pension to Sarah M. Spyker, have examined the same, and report:

The report of the Committee on Pensions of the House of Representatives heretofore appended is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6634) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Sarah M. Spyker," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment.

The claimant is the widow of Leonidas P. Spyker, who served as an ensign in Capt. W. A. Goodwin's company of Alabama Volunteers, Creek Indian war of 1836.

The records of the Second Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, show that the soldier enlisted May 11, 1836, and was discharged June 7, 1836. Nothing was allowed in fixing the period of service for time spent in going to the place of rendezvous and from place of discharge to his home, and on the record as thus reported, showing a service two days short of the time required by the Indian war act of July 27, 1892, to give title to a pension, the widow's claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau.

Mrs. Spyker is 80 years old, and the testimony on file fully establishes her relationship to the soldier, his death, and all other facts necessary to the establishment of her legal widowhood.

There are several precedents for the allowance of pensions in these old Indian war cases where the record of service shows but a very few days short of the time required to give title under the general laws, and your committee believe that this case is in the line of precedents.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1897.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to hear the message of the President of the United States read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the message will have to be read at length, unless unanimous consent is given to dispense with the reading.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think when the veto message is read there should be a quorum present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire having suggested the absence of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Allen,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Bacon,	Davis,	McBride,	Shoup,
Bate,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Smith,
Berry,	Elkins,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Blanchard,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Teller,
Brice,	Frye,	Mills,	Thurston,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Butler,	Gear,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Nelson,	Vest,
Cannon,	Gordon,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Carter,	Hale,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Chilton,	Hill,	Platt,
Clark,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Secretary will read the message from the President of the United States.

The Secretary read the message of the President of the United States.

[See House proceedings.]

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Immigration, which is the usual course, and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, such will be the order. The bill and message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in reply to the resolution of the Senate of January 23, 1897, a report from the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of the correspondence therein requested, relating to the Nicaraguan Canal or the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, since 1887.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 3, 1897.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged motion. There have been presented to the Senate the credentials of Mr. Heitfeld, elected a Senator from the State of Idaho, and they were put on the files of the Senate or laid on the table. I move that the credentials be referred, as has been the case with certain memorials that have come in here, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. STEWART. I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I make the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would hold that until the execution of the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate, no motion can intervene of that character.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood that the unanimous-consent agreement reserved all privileged questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that a motion to refer is a privileged question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Chair kindly have read the agreement that was entered into?

Mr. ALLEN. What is before the Senate now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has made a motion to refer the credentials of the Senator-elect from Idaho to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ALLEN. That is a violation of the unanimous-consent order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is just having the unanimous agreement read, so that the Senate can see.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that proceeds, I desire to state to the Senate that the business of the Appropriations Committee will justify an extension of the recess until 9 o'clock, if that is the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. To 9 instead of 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent agreement to take a recess from 6 to 8 o'clock be changed so as to have the recess taken from 6 until 9. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I think it is very serious, indeed, under any circumstances, to set the precedent of revoking a unanimous-consent agreement by other unanimous-consent agreements. But the same thing can be accomplished by the Senator stating that the business of his committee will not be ready to proceed before 9 o'clock. Undoubtedly there will be a quorum here to-night.

Mr. ALDRICH. We can agree to take a recess from 8 to 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know what the request is.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator to make a slight modification of his request, which is that it be now ordered that we take a recess from 8 to 9.

Mr. ALLEN. From 6 to 9?

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that I shall at 8 o'clock ask to have the recess further extended.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to make an inquiry. I understand that on the motion of the Senator from Iowa we agreed to take a recess at 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening. Now, what is the proposition of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. To extend it to 9.

Mr. HOAR. And then take a further recess from 8 to 9.

Mr. CULLOM. I have been anxious to call up what is known as the antiscalping bill for the consideration of the Senate, and I have been waiting until the Calendar of unobjected cases should have been disposed of and the conference reports as they came in. We have about come to that time, as I understand it.

I should like very much to call up that bill in good faith for consideration, and if it turns out that the Senate is unwilling to consider it, I want the Senate to say so. I do not care to be bandying words about it; I do not care to be sitting here always with no prospect of getting a consideration of the bill. But it is a bill that, in my judgment, ought to be passed, and it is a bill that is called for by thousands and hundreds of thousands of people, and whether right or wrong is for the Senate to determine. If the Senate thinks the bill ought not to pass, and will say so, I shall be content; but I should be very glad indeed to get an expression from the Senate on the question whether it is willing to consider the bill at this session of Congress. If it is not, let it say so. I think the bill is entitled to that much consideration at the hands of the Senate of the United States.

The bill has been before the Senate for some time; it passed the House of Representatives by a very large majority, and it seems to me that it ought to be considered by the Senate before we adjourn. Bills are taken up by the hundred and passed that are not, in my judgment, of one-tenth part the importance to the people of the United States that this bill is. I do not care to argue the question, and I have not the right to do so, perhaps, on this motion, but I want to know whether there is to be an opportunity to consider the bill before we adjourn to-morrow. I have been waiting here for the time to come when the unobjected bills should be disposed of, determining that when that time came, and it would be in order, I should move to take up this bill.

I should prefer that there should not be a recess from 6 until 9 o'clock; but, of course, I am willing that the recess from 6 to 8 shall stand, because that is the order of the Senate, and such a recess is necessary, to give Senators an opportunity to rest and get something to eat; but I want to make the motion, if I am not at liberty to do so before 6 o'clock—if conference reports do not come in the way—to take up the bill known as the anti-scalping bill, which is House bill No. 10090.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the modified request of the Senator from Iowa, which is that when the Senate meet at 8 o'clock, it then take a recess until 9 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that we shall not do that, but that we shall come back at 8 o'clock and proceed to business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. CHANDLER. With reference to the remarks of the Senator from Illinois in relation to what is known as the anti-scalping bill, which he says he has been waiting here to move to take up, I will say that he has not only waited here to take up the bill, but he has kept a dozen of us here also waiting for him to take it up, in order that we may move amendments thereto and fully discuss the bill. What my action would be upon that bill, upon the question of its final passage, I am not prepared to say, but, as the bill stands, it is a bill that certainly requires discussion, and Senators who are here in this Chamber will be very careful how they make it a penitentiary offense for a man to sell a part of a railroad ticket which he has bought and paid for with his own money and which he has not used.

Mr. President, it may be that it will appear after discussion on that bill that there are public reasons why it should pass, but certainly I know it can not pass until there has been full discussion of it. Moreover, it can not pass, in my judgment, without full amendments. There have been bills pending for two or three years in the Senate and House of Representatives proposing to make changes in the interstate-commerce act. The interstate-commerce act is full of defects—not defects as I understand them to have existed when the law was passed, but full of defects which have been discovered by the judges of the courts in one place and another over the United States—and attempts have been made to remedy those defects covering points wherein the law has been impaired by judicial decisions.

Those bills have been pending for two or three years. They are pending before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the Senator from Illinois is the able and honored chairman; they are pending in the House of Representatives. They do not get consideration in the committee; they do not get reported to the Senate; they do not get consideration in the Senate, and the friends of those amendments, or the Senators who wish to strengthen the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission quite as much as they wish to make it a crime for a man to sell a railroad ticket that is his and that he has come by honestly, will insist upon having the amendments which embody those changes and improvements in the interstate commerce law discussed by the Senate, and will insist upon having those amendments proposed to the anti-scalping bill.

The Senator from Illinois knows very well that there is not a ghost of a chance at this late hour to obtain a fair consideration of that bill. With the amendment that I intend to propose to the bill, and which, if adopted, I think, as it contains so much good in it, would make me willing to vote for the Senator's bill; but it would take half an hour to read the amendment I have here, and a great many hours for its discussion, unless the Senator from Illinois will say that he is entirely prepared to accept it.

If he will say that he will accept that amendment, and the Senate is willing to accept it, I am willing to have the amendment voted on the bill, and the bill passed with the amendment within half an hour. But the Senator knows very well that this bill, standing by itself, making it a crime for a man to sell a railroad ticket he owns, can not go through this body, with no remedy whatever proposed by the committee or submitted to Congress for the defects which have been discovered from time to time in the last half dozen years in the interstate-commerce law, not one of which we have been able to have remedied by the legislation of Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator, in that connection, that he have his amendment read now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I tried to get it read the other day, but some Senator objected. I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be now read.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no bill before the Senate now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, what has the Senator been speaking about?

Mr. CULLOM. I was talking about the recess. When I make a motion to take up the bill, the Senator can offer his amendment for consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator was speaking of a recess——

Mr. HOAR. I object to debate.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to think that the Senator's bill would not be discussed very long before Senators would find that it was a bill utterly unworthy of being passed by this body.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nearly everything in this bill the Senator from Illinois has approved, and he has committed himself to its provisions. He has been trying for years to get through this bill, but the railroads would not allow him to get them through.

Mr. ALDRICH. What has become of the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think I can be taken off the floor in this way. It is the custom of this body for a Senator to get up without any question being pending and to talk just as long as he pleases; and this afternoon the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] got on the floor and talked about the question of who was the architect of the new Congressional Library, and described the building with great power, vividness, beauty, and eloquence, as he does everything that he depicts in language, and he eulogized the architect when there was not any question whatever before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. There was a report from the Committee on the Library before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The report of the committee had been disposed of half an hour before.

Mr. VEST. But I was out of the Chamber at the time it was made, and came in and said that I was absent when the report of the committee was made, and asked to be heard.

Mr. CHANDLER. But there was nothing then before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will deliver his lecture to somebody else.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was praising the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in order for two Senators to address the Senate at the same time when there is no question pending? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is perfectly satisfied that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CHANDLER. I would rather the Senator from South Carolina would allow me to go on. If I can not speak, as did the Senator from Missouri, with nothing before the Senate, I want to speak to the same question the Senator from Illinois spoke to, if the Chair will kindly state what that was. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire knows that no one in this body loves to hear him more than I do, but I want to give the Senate some business to do. I have been waiting here anxiously for three weeks to get an important matter before the Senate, but have given way to the appropriation bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. The trouble is that since the Senator has come in here with us he has become too amiable. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I have never before been charged with such a thing. I suppose that my association with my gentle friend has improved my manners. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has sheathed his sword and his other weapons of offense, and has become so gentle that he gets no chance for his bills. [Laughter.]

I think I have a right to move to refer the credentials of the Senator from Idaho to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I make that motion.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what effect that will have upon the Senator-elect from Idaho being sworn in on to-morrow when other new Senators are sworn in?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know what other Senators may have to say on that subject. I have not read the memorial that was presented a day or two ago nor the telegraphic memorial that came in to-day; but, so far as I am concerned, I have no intention of objecting to the swearing in of the Senator from Idaho to-morrow.

Mr. GRAY. But if his credentials are referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections they will not be here in order to justify the Presiding Officer in swearing him in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is wrong about that. The credentials have been received by the Senate; they have been read, and I suppose they are in the record, and now they go with these memorials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GRAY. But if the credentials go out of the possession of the Senate into the possession of one of its committees, it seems to me that when this gentleman presents himself to be sworn in, if any question should be made by a Senator or by the Presiding Officer, there would be no warrant for the proceedings. I think that would be a bad precedent. There is a prima facie case, a regular certificate from the governor, and the credentials are in proper form.

Mr. ALDRICH. We have made that precedent.

Mr. GRAY. We have not made that precedent yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell me why the credentials of a Senator are presented before he is sworn in?

Mr. GRAY. In order that there may be warrant for swearing him in.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very good. Then, when the credentials are presented and read and in the record they are in the power of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. They are ordered to be filed.

Mr. CHANDLER. They are evidence of the Senator's right to be sworn in upon his prima facie case, whether in the hands of a committee or not.

Mr. GRAY. But if they are taken off the files of the Senate and referred to a committee, they are not in a situation to serve as a warrant, it seems to me.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the Delaware case, only a few days ago, the credentials were in the hands of the committee when the Senator's colleague was sworn in.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, no; they were never in the hands of the committee. I want to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that he is mistaken about that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I am not.

Mr. GRAY. Those credentials were never in the hands of the committee.

Mr. DANIEL. How could we say that the credentials were in proper form for a Senator to be sworn in unless they were here?

Mr. GRAY. That is true; we could not see them.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GRAY. I do.

Mr. HILL. There is no question, as I understand it, about the regularity of the credentials of the Senator from Idaho. There is plenty of time for the consideration of that matter, and they can be referred to-morrow or they can be referred the next day. There is no question about that.

I rise to the point of order that we are now executing a unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate, which was that pension bills on the Calendar should be disposed of, and until that order is executed I raise the point of order that no motion to refer anybody's credentials is admissible.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to suggest another point—that this Senate has no jurisdiction over whom shall be members of the incoming Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state, in reference to the point of order raised by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], that the Chair has not sought to enforce unanimous-consent agreements entered into by members of the Senate. That is a matter that is left to the honor of Senators.

The Chair will decide, on the point of order made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], that it has been decided, as the Chair understands, by the Senate that the credentials must be referred to the Congress to which the Senator is elected.

Mr. STEWART. That is the point of order I raised, that this Senate has nothing to do as to who shall be a member of the next Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Chair hold that when the Senate has made an order of business, either by unanimous consent or by vote and it is lawfully made, that the Chair can not enforce that order? We have established a special order for this day in regard to taking up pension cases, just as we say by general order that during the routine business of the morning hour certain motions shall be in order. The Chair enforces that, and this certainly has equal rights with that. It is not on a question of unanimous consent as to debate or anything of that kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the point suggested by him is a matter of rule, and the Chair has a right to enforce the rules. The former Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, who was President pro tempore of the Senate when the present occupant of the chair came to this body, so ruled, and it has been the universal ruling of the Chair that the Chair can not enforce a unanimous-consent agreement, but that it must rest with the honor of Senators themselves.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the Chair propose to enforce the unanimous-consent agreement about taking a recess at 6 o'clock until 8, if a Senator objects?

Mr. CULLOM. That was an order.

Mr. HOAR. So is this an order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that unless overruled by a majority of the Senate——

Mr. HILL. I decline to concur in the view expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire. The unanimous-consent agreement can be enforced and must be enforced.

The credentials have been presented. The presentation of credentials is a matter of privilege. They have been presented and placed on file. That ends it. No motion can be made in regard to those credentials except at the time when such a motion can be made. We are now out of that order of business, and a motion can not be made now, although I do insist that the point of order is well taken, and in executing the order under a unanimous-consent agreement no Senator can rise and object. But the credentials——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is right, unless privileged questions were reserved, and I asked the Chair some fifteen minutes ago to be kind enough to have the consent order under which we are acting read.

Mr. HILL. It is always held that the presentation of credentials is privileged, but a Senator can not rise at any other time when the matter has not been brought before the Senate and make some motion in regard to a man's credentials.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to argue——

Mr. STEWART. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will suspend. The Senator from Nevada rises to a point of order.

Mr. STEWART. The point of order is that it is not in order to refer the credentials of a Senator-elect who will not become a Senator until after the 4th of March. We have a rule that they may be filed with the clerks, so that they can be identified and considered when the time for consideration comes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let us hear that rule read.

Mr. STEWART. We have a custom to that effect. They are filed.

Mr. MILLS. Will my friend, the Senator from Nevada, permit me to help him out?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. The credentials accredit this Senator to the Fifty-fifth Congress. This is the Fifty-fourth Congress. We have no jurisdiction over the matter. The Constitution makes each House the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. We have nothing on the face of the earth to do with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have an opportunity to demonstrate the error of the statement of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled upon the point of order fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. CHANDLER. On which point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The one made by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HILL. The Senate has agreed to take a recess at 6 o'clock. Will one objection, without a motion, prevent that being done? Think of the absurdity of that, with all due respect to the Chair. I insist upon my point of order. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire; I appeal in behalf of these few pension bills which we ought to dispose of—it is now or never with them—and I know when I make an appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire on the question of pensions he will yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. In affection for and not in fear of the Senator from New York, I will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be proceeded with.

RACHEL PATTON—VETO MESSAGE.

The bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension, at $20 per month, Rachel Patton, of Paris, Edgar County, Ill., formerly the widow of John H. Patton, late captain of Company C, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the report in this case be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill now before the Senate was vetoed by the President of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed over the veto in the House of Representatives and sent to this body for its action. If there is no objection, the Chair will have the three vetoed pension bills passed over, and will have the next two pension bills laid before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we can vote upon the pending bill without taking much time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust action will be taken upon this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a worthy case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the question is voted upon, I suggest that the report ought to be read. I have already made that suggestion two or three times.

Mr. CULLOM. The veto message should be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PALMER on the 1st instant as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton, with a report thereon, together with the veto message of the President of the United States, returning without his approval the said bill, having carefully and fully considered the same, respectfully adopt the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, and earnestly recommend the passage of the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

HOUSE REPORT.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the veto message of the President of the foregoing bill, have carefully considered the same and report:

The facts are substantially set forth in the message. Rachel Patton was the wife of the soldier during the period of his service. He was a captain in the Seventy-ninth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers. He was killed in battle. His record was honorable. His widow, the proposed beneficiary in this bill, was pensioned at $30 per month until her remarriage in 1876. Her second husband basely deserted her, refusing to provide for her support. A court of equity severed the bonds of matrimony that bound her to this worthless person and at the same time restored to her the honored name of her dead husband. She is now his widow. Her age is 63 years, her health poor, and she is unable to labor. The little income she has is insufficient for her support.

Whether she should now be restored to the pension roll is simply a matter of policy—a question to be decided by the law-making power of the Government in whose service her husband lost his life.

The committee, or at least the writer of this report, do not regard private acts of a similar kind as evidences of the policy of the nation. The fact that the Executive has heretofore approved, or has allowed to become laws without his approval, bills of a like character does not necessarily, in the judgment of the committee, establish any precedent for this case. The only result of enumerating such instances would be to show former inconsistent action by the President with his present position. By so doing the House could get no light to aid it in the discharge of present duty.

One private act is neither in law nor reason a precedent or a justification for another. Much less should private laws be regarded as indicating a policy in legislation. The policy of the Government should be sought in its public laws, not in its private enactments.

The committee have therefore made some examination of the public statutes of the United States to ascertain whether there has been any general legislation that justifies the passage of this bill.

By the act of July 4, 1836, approved by President Andrew Jackson, five years' half pay was granted to the widows of certain soldiers who died during their service or since from wounds received during such service. By the third section of the act certain pensions were granted to the widows of Revolutionary soldiers whose marriage to them took place before the last period of their service. The pension provided by this section, while not continuing longer than during widowhood, recognized a class of widows as entitled to especial recognition in the matter of pensions—those whose marriage to soldiers "took place before the last period of service."

On the last day of his term of office, March 3, 1837, President Jackson gave his approval to another act, which declared that no widow should be deprived of the benefits of the act of July 4, 1836, by reason of her having married since the death of her husband. The only limitation made was that she should be a widow at the time of the passage of the act.

These general laws are precedents in the true sense of the word. They are "authoritative examples." They declared a policy. It was to the effect that the widow who was the soldier's wife during his service should be especially recognized, and also that she might still be upon the pension roll notwithstanding her subsequent marriage.

Other acts might be cited, notably that approved by President John Tyler, August 23, 1842, which provided that the marriage of a widow after her husband's death should not be a bar to her claim under the act of July 7, 1838.

By the joint resolution of July 1, 1848, approved by President Polk, in the case of soldiers of the Revolution "any widow or woman who may have been the widow of such soldier" was placed upon the pension roll "upon proof by her that she was married to said soldier and that she is a widow."

The committee therefore feel justified in saying that it is not against either precedent or policy to restore to the roll a woman who was the wife of a gallant soldier during his service, and who is now a widow, notwithstanding she may have married since the soldier's death.

The time for the exercise of this policy, either in any individual case or in any class of cases, is properly in the will and discretion of the Congress.

In the present case there is the record of the gallant and meritorious service of the soldier, John Patton, his death on the field of battle, and the age, feebleness, and need of his widow.

By her remarriage there was saved to the United States $4,800. A court of conscience has given her back her former name. The committee believe the Government ought to be as generous as a court of chancery has been just to the widow of so gallant an officer. There is no suggestion by the President that the act is unconstitutional. In view of the passage of so many similar acts in the past, it can not be said to be hasty or inconsiderate legislation. It is neither opposed to precedent nor to the policy of the Government.

The people, through their chosen representatives, have seen fit to grant this pension, and the committee recommend that this manifest will of the people be made effective by passing this bill over the objections of the President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the veto message of the President read.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the roll be called before 6 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist upon that. It was read once. Let us vote.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; let us vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we ought to vote with the objections of the President fresh in our minds. It seems to me it is not fair treatment of the Executive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to call for the reading of the message.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] reported the bill, and I notice that he did not incorporate the veto message in his report. In the case of two similar bills which I reported, I think it will be found that I did incorporate the veto messages in my reports. I presume it will take a little time to get the message.

But I will say that the President of the United States has vetoed this bill, as he vetoed three or four others in the present Congress. They were remarriage cases. I will state that the Committee on Pensions does not hold exactly the same views that the President does on this question. For instance, in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-third Congresses we passed fourteen of these bills, and the President signed thirteen. We have held in committee that when the widow had been the wife of a soldier during his army service and had remarried and the Government had been saved the pension for a number of years, as in this case to the amount of $4,800, if the wife became old and indigent and unable to work and appealed to Congress for relief, we would restore her to the pension rolls. The husband in this case was killed on the battlefield.

It is not a new thing. This policy commenced way back in the early history of the Government, in the days of Daniel Webster, and we have had a few instances of pensions of this class from time to time. I believe myself it is a just bill, and I think we ought to act upon it.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the chairman of the committee think that the President, who was represented in such a distinguished and gallant manner by a proxy in the late war, ought to have some deference paid to his opinions on military matters in the Senate of the United States?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that so far as I am concerned, while serving as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, I have never made unkind reference or criticism of the President of the United States. He had the right to veto this bill. He has the right, I take it, to veto any bill that does not meet with his approval. I differ with him, and heretofore Congress has differed with him, but I think we ought not to criticise the President because of the exercise of his constitutional right in this case.

I have heretofore said that in my judgment these pension vetoes are frivolous and inconsequential. I will repeat those words today; but it is the President's constitutional right to do it, and I should be the last man in the Congress of the United States to criticise him unkindly or harshly because of the exercise of his constitutional right.

Mr. ALLEN. But, if the Senator will permit me, it is the constitutional right of a Senator to criticise the President of the United States or any other man——

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLEN. And it is not only his constitutional right to do it, but it is his duty to do so as a public officer whenever he believes the utterances of the President of the United States conflict in the slightest degree with the true interests of legislation and the true interests of individuals. I can not forget the fact that Grover Cleveland on one or more occasions has referred in his veto messages of pension bills to the soldiers, and especially the private soldiers of the late war, as coffee-coolers, and in a way that no man having a clear conception of his duty would do.

The honorable chairman of the Committee on Pensions is going too far when he expects the soldiers of the late war, upon either side of the great controversy, to submit to insolence and impudence and unkind treatment, notwithstanding it comes from the Chief Executive of this nation.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, he will remember that during Mr. Cleveland's first term this matter was fought over, and it was fought before the people of the United States. Mr. Cleveland was severely criticised because of these very utterances, and I think I joined with other members of the Republican party in making severe animadversions upon him for that course. But I would a good deal rather pass this bill, if we can get the requisite number of votes, and give this poor old woman a pension than to discuss the action of the President. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will allow a vote to be taken.

Mr. STEWART. Vote!

Mr. CHANDLER. I would not make an objection on the mere form of requiring the President's veto message to be read, but it does not seem to me to be a mere question of form. The Constitution says:

> If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law.

The Constitution evidently contemplates that the objections of the President, which are to be entered at large upon the Journal of the House in which the bill originates, shall also be entered at large upon the Journal of the other House, which in this case is the Senate. It is not a mere form. Rather, if it is a matter of form, it is a matter of very important form, that we should not pass the bill over the veto of the President without the veto message being present at the time the act of passing the bill over the veto is performed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the constitutional provision has been complied with. The veto message is at the desk ready to be read.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the junior Senator from New Hampshire whether this is a case where a woman, after her remarriage, became a widow. There is one such case, I understand. Or is it the other case, where she became divorced? Which is it?

Mr. GALLINGER. In this case the soldier was killed on the battlefield, and this woman became his widow, and after a time she married and obtained a divorce because of ill treatment.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recognize the fact that there are two cases, one case where the woman's second husband died and this case where she was divorced.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without any fault of her own.

Mr. BACON. I did not know which it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message of the President will be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my call for the message to be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the message be printed in the RECORD, and call the roll.

Mr. BATE. Let us hear it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 1185, entitled "An act granting a pension to Rachel Patton."

John H. Patton, the husband of the beneficiary, was a captain in an Illinois regiment, and was killed in action June 25, 1863.

In December, 1863, the beneficiary was pensioned as his widow at the rate of $20 a month.

She received the pension for thirteen years and until 1876, when she married one William G. Culbertson. Thereupon, because of such marriage, her name was dropped from the pension roll pursuant to law. In 1889, thirteen years after her remarriage and the termination of her pension, she procured a decree of divorce against her second husband on the ground of desertion.

She has a small income, but it does not appear that alimony was allowed her in the divorce proceedings.

It is proposed by this bill to pension her at the same rate which was allowed her while she remained the widow of the deceased soldier.

It can not be denied that the remarriage of this beneficiary terminated her pensionable relation to the Government as completely as if it never existed. The statute which so provides simply declares what is approved by a fair and sensible consideration of pension principles. As a legal proposition the pensionable status of a soldier's widow, lost by her remarriage, can not be recovered by the dissolution of the second marriage. Waiving, however, the application of strictly legal principles to the subject, there does not appear to be any sentiment which should restore to the pension roll, as the widow of a deceased soldier, a divorced wife who has relinquished the title of soldier's widow to again become a wife, and who, to secure the expected advantages and comforts of a second marriage, has been quite willing to forego the provision which was made for her by the Government solely on the ground of her soldier widowhood.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 21, 1896.

Mr. MILLS. It is now nearly 6 o'clock, and as by unanimous consent we agreed to take a recess at 6 o'clock until 9, I suggest that we vote on the bill when we reassemble at 9.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator means at 8 o'clock instead of 9.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that we can take the vote now.

Mr. CULLOM. The order was to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. I understood that it was afterwards changed to 9.

Mr. CULLOM. It was not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the recess be extended five minutes, and that we take the vote before the recess.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. MILLS. It can not be done in that time.

Mr. STEWART. Then I ask that the time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether it has been contemplated to pass any general law upon this subject?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say in reply to the Senator that that has been discussed more or less by the committee. As the Senator will notice by the report, it seems that on two occasions (I do not know when they were repealed) general laws have been passed upon this subject, or covering cases somewhat similar; but it was away back somewhere in the early history of the Government. The Committee on Pensions has given this matter some attention, and they have it in contemplation to determine either upon the passage of a general law, or else to determine not to consider any of these cases at all in the next Congress.

Mr. HILL. The general rule, of course, is that if a widow remarries, no matter whom, she may marry a pauper——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. She may marry a man who can not support her; she may have to work out, yet the rule is arbitrary that she loses her pension——

Mr. GALLINGER. The law operates of course.

Mr. HILL. Because the law operates; and of course we have to pass special laws to evade or to change that provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. Except in these individual pension cases.

Mr. HILL. Except that there is now presented a new class of cases where the husband dies or the widow is divorced, and then comes a mass of these new special cases. In my judgment, one difficulty about the administration of the pension laws by Congress is the multiplicity of special legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 6 o'clock p. m.). The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, under the order of the Senate a recess will be taken until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

RACHEL PATTON.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the pending question. The question is, Shall the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. PLATT. We ought to have a quorum if we are going to pass this bill, or any bill. I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll.

After some delay,

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. PLATT. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. QUAY. We shall have a quorum in a few minutes. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], just before the Senate took a recess, indicated that at 8 o'clock he would ask for a recess until 9 o'clock. At 9 a quorum will be here.

Mr. BATE. I think Senators left the Chamber with that idea, and they are absent for that reason. They will be here directly.

Mr. ALLEN. I knew that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] desired to proceed with a bill, and I supposed we could get a full Senate to proceed.

After some further delay, the following Senators had answered to their names:

Allen,	Clark,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Allison,	Cockrell,	Mantle,	Quay,
Baker,	Cullom,	Martin,	Sherman,
Bate,	Daniel,	Mills,	Shoup,
Berry,	Dubois,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Blanchard,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Teller,
Call,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Tillman,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Vest,
Cannon,	Hill,	Perkins,	Walthall,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	White.
Chilton,	Kyle,	Platt

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senate was dividing upon the question, Shall the pending bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CALL. What is the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] reported that bill from the Committee on Pensions and recommended its passage, notwithstanding the veto. If there is any doubt about the bill passing, I should like to have my colleague here when the question is submitted.

Mr. STEWART. There is no question about it.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a bill in which I take a good deal of interest myself, and I hope the Senate will vote to pass the bill, notwithstanding the veto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. PEFFER (when Mr. GEAR'S name was called). I am requested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] to announce that he is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. He not being present, I decline to vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McBRIDE. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I am paired with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I can state that the Senator from Nebraska would vote in favor of this bill, if present, and if the Senator feels like voting that way, I should be glad if he would do so to make a quorum.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand that a quorum has not voted. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], but I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. CAFFERY], and vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I reserved, however, the privilege of voting to make a quorum, and, as I understand that there is no quorum present, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and his colleague [Mr. McBRIDE] has a pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. We have arranged to transfer those pairs so that we can both vote, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] stands paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I vote "nay."

Mr. McBRIDE. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], but I take the liberty, upon advice, of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is not able to be here on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allen,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Wis.	Roach,
Baker,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Sewell,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Sherman,
Call,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Shoup,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,	Stewart,
Carter,	Kyle,	Perkins,	White,
Chandler,	McBride,	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Clark,	Mantle,	Platt,
Cullom,	Martin,	Pugh,
Faulkner,	Mills,	Quay,

NAYS—10.

Bate,	Chilton,	Hill,	Vilas.
Berry,	Gibson,	Lindsay,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Vest,

NOT VOTING—43.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Squire,
Allison,	Dubois,	Kenney,	Teller,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Thurston,
Blackburn,	Frye,	McMillan,	Tillman,
Brice,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Turpie,
Brown,	George,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Burrows,	Gordon,	Murphy,	Walthall.
Caffery,	Hale,	Pasco,	Warren,
Cameron,	Harris,	Pritchard,	Wetmore,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Irby,	Smith,

So the bill was passed, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2063) to amend the laws relating to navigation.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals; further insists upon its amendment to the bill disagreed to by the Senate; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. WASHINGTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Thomas Rosbrugh;

A bill (H. R. 1353) for the relief of the administrator of George McAlpin, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 2815) for the relief of William Lock and James H. Tinsley;

A bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private, Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters;

A bill (H. R. 3014) revising and amending the statutes relating to patents;

A bill (H. R. 4058) to set apart a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park;

A bill (H. R. 4930) granting a pension to Mary Forward;

A bill (H. R. 6634) granting a pension to Sarah M. Spyker;

A bill (H. R. 9023) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 9704) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet;

A bill (H. R. 9821) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to charge a fee for the issuance of certain transcripts from the records of the health department;

A bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Francisco Perna;

A bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for infringement of patents;

A bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder;

A bill (H. R. 10304) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant a right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile, and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10367) to revive and reenact a law authorizing the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 211) providing for a comprehensive index to Government publications from 1881 to 1893.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. HOAR and Mr. WALTHALL members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., under the requirements of section 1327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. LINDSAY and Mr. CARTER members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., under the requirements of the act of February 14, 1879.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. ALLEN presented the credentials of JAMES H. KYLE, chosen by the legislature of the State of South Dakota a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Charles Steere, of Boston, Mass., and of Fred. W. Rawskolb, of Medford, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 52 citizens of South Braintree, Mass., praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter, and also for the passage of Senate bill No. 1675, to prohibit the interstate transportation of matter by an agency; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CALL. I present the petition of Mr. James Seldon Cowdon, of Vienna, Va., praying for the printing of papers contained therein relating to ærial navigation. The papers are brief, and there must be no reason why the request should not be granted. I ask that they be printed as a miscellaneous document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator withdraw that motion for a moment in order that a bill which has just been received from the House of Representatives may be laid before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield for that purpose?

Mr. CANNON. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference and further insisting upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3538), to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HILL, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. CLARK were appointed.

Mr. CANNON. At the request of several Senators, I ask leave to withdraw the motion for an executive session at the present time, but give notice that I shall renew it at the first opportunity at a later hour in the evening.

TICKET BROKERAGE.

Mr. CULLOM. I gave notice during an earlier hour of the day that at the first opportunity I would call up House bill 10090, known as the anticalping bill, or rather the bill to regulate commerce, and ask for its consideration.

I desire to state, however, that after having a consultation with members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and after discovering that it would probably be impossible to pass the bill to-night, as there are quite a number of Senators who desire to discuss it, the committee has determined that it would be unwise and that we should not undertake to do so. Members of the Senate have been kept here day after day and night after night, and it is perfectly obvious that we would be kept here all night upon this question if the bill were taken up. I am unwilling myself, in view of the apparent certainty that we can not pass the bill at the present session, to insist upon its present consideration.

I do this very reluctantly. I have believed very earnestly that the bill ought to pass. It is not a bill of great length, its provisions are simple, and it has seemed to me all the time that the Senate ought to pass it, it having been passed in the other House by a very considerable majority. But I am told by a number of Senators that it can not pass without very considerable discussion, which would result in its failure for the present session. I yield to this situation a little more willingly than I would otherwise in view of the fact that in all probability a called session of Congress will be held in a few weeks, when we shall have time to consider bills of this nature and perfect them so that every Senator may feel satisfied at least that he has had a fair opportunity to give expression to his views.

I give notice that I will not call up the bill for consideration to-night.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I note with great satisfaction the remarks of the Senator from Illinois. I have heard that after the expiration of the next legislative day no matters of general legislation would be permitted to be considered elsewhere. I regard the statement of the Senator from Illinois as a refutation of that proposition, and I know that no ukase issued from any other tribunal will interfere with the consideration of general legislation after the induction into office of the agent of prosperity.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce who are now present in the Chamber—and I think a majority of the committee are present—are of the opinion that the bill can not be disposed of at the present session. Among the number are Senators who are in favor of the bill as well as Senators who are against the bill. The bill itself as it has come from the House of Representatives would need alteration. Amendments would be proposed to the text of the bill as it has come from the House; discussion would ensue upon those amendments, and even if no additions to the bill were to be made, it would, in my judgment, be impossible to pass it, judging from the knowledge I have as to the intention of Senators now upon the floor to speak upon the bill.

In addition, I repeat what I said before the recess was taken, that it would be impossible, in my judgment, either now or at any other time, to pass this bill, which the railroads very much desire and which they believe will be very helpful to them, without having affixed to it the amendment I hold in my hand, which makes some twenty or more important and desirable alterations in the interstate-commerce law—amendments which the railroads do not desire, but which ought to be passed in the interest of the people for the purpose of strengthening the Commission and enabling it to perform the duties imposed upon it by the act of Congress.

I am quite sure that at this time the bill can not pass. I venture the prediction that at no time will it pass until a bill is prepared that travels over the whole ground of the interstate-commerce act and furnishes the improvements to that statute which for several years have been under discussion in Congress, but no one of which has been enacted into a law.

Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Illinois has consented to be advised by a majority of his committee, by all the members of the committee who are upon the floor, that it is not expedient at this stage in the session to press the passage of the bill.

WILLIAM H. HUGO.

Mr. PALMER. I think this will be the last request I shall make of the Senate before I retire from office. I ask that the bill (S. 588) for the relief of William H. Hugo be taken up by unanimous consent and disposed of. I hope it will be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to be very courteous to the Senator from Illinois, but in his absence two hours ago I took charge of a vetoed pension bill that he reported, and the next bill in the regular order is a vetoed pension bill in which I am very much interested, the beneficiary living in my own State. I think we ought to execute the order of the Senate, which embraces only a few more bills. Then I shall be glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. QUAY. Before we proceed we ought to make certain a quorum is present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dubois,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Smith,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Stewart,
Bate,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Wis.	Tillman,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Brown,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Butler,	Hill,	Peffer,	Warren,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Perkins,	White,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Clark,	Kyle,	Pugh,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Daniel,	McBride,	Sherman,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Illinois made a request for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which will take but a moment. I interposed an objection, with a view to carrying out the regular order. I withdraw the objection, in order that the Senator's bill may be taken up, with the understanding that after that we shall proceed with the regular order.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 588) for the relief of William H. Hugo. I have taken great pains to investigate it, and I assure the Senate it ought to pass.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not like to object to any request of the Senator from Illinois, but we are still operating under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it may be waived for this one bill.

Mr. PALMER. I ask that the bill may now be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to suspend the laws regulating appointments in the Army for the purposes of this bill, and authorizes the President to appoint William H. Hugo a first lieutenant of cavalry in the Army, and thereupon to place him on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. QUAY. I think before proceeding to vote on a bill of such importance, we ought to be absolutely certain that there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Daniel,	McBride,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Baker,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Smith,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Stewart,
Berry,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Wis.	Tillman,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Vest,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Walthall,
Carter,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Platt,	White,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	Wilson.
Clark,	Kyle,	Roach,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Sewell,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

WILLIAM H. HUGO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1602) for the relief of William H. Hugo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. QUAY. Before the final vote is taken upon the bill, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WILSON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it possible in the midst of a question being put to raise the question of the absence of a quorum, the presence of a quorum having just been announced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that a question was not being put.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WILSON. The presence of a quorum had just been announced; not two seconds had intervened.

Mr. QUAY. Other business had been transacted.

Mr. HILL. What was the other business?

Mr. WILSON. What was the further business?

Mr. QUAY. A half dozen questions were put.

Mr. WILSON. I have no recollection of a half dozen questions.

Mr. QUAY. I refer to the Presiding Officer.

Mr. WILSON. I raise the question that we had just had a call of the Senate; the presence of a quorum had just been announced; the Chair had just announced it; not two seconds had intervened, and the question was being put on the passage of the bill. I raise the point of order whether the Senator has a right to raise the question of no quorum until the transaction of some other business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair requests the Senator from Washington to state his request concisely, so that the Chair may rule upon it if necessary. Does the Senator make the point that a question was then being put?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; I make that point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that a question was not being put. The Chair was stating the condition of the bill. The Chair stated that the bill was in Committee of the Whole, and stated that the committee had made no amendment. The bill had then been reported to the Senate, but the Chair had not propounded any question to the Senate. If that is the point of order simply, that a question was then being put, the Chair will be constrained to overrule it.

Mr. PEFFER. I understand the point of order is that no business had intervened, and that therefore another call was not in order.

Mr. QUAY. The Chair is perfectly aware that a number of perfunctory motions and questions had been put to the Senate after the previous call of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senate that the title of the bill had been reported to the Senate by the Secretary, which was intervening business. In addition to that, the Chair will state that according to the rule no intervening business is required; that the rule is that at any time a Senator may raise the question, and it must be immediately determined.

Mr. HILL. There can not be two calls in succession. With all due deference to the Chair, must not the rule have an intelligent and reasonable construction? There must be some business which is business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled there has been intervening business.

Mr. HILL. By the announcement of it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By the bill being reported by the Secretary to the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And a message was also received from the other House. The Secretary will proceed to call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dubois,	Mantle,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Shoup,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Teller,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Thurston,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Tillman,
Carter,	Hill,	Perkins,	Vest,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Vilas,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Pugh,	Warren,
Daniel,	McBride,	Roach,	Wilson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the call of the roll 48 Senators have answered to their names, and a quorum is present.

The Chair wishes to state, as this question may recur, that the ruling of the Chair in this instance was put distinctly upon the fact that the bill had been reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, which was a fact of making progress, and therefore was intervening business. While the rule itself does not say so, the Chair is inclined to the opinion that the suggestion made by several Senators upon the floor that there must be some intervening business is correct. But in this instance there had been intervening business.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE D. MOWATT—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

The Senate proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt, which had been returned by the President to the House in which it originated with his objections to the same.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cockrell,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Allison,	Cullom,	Martin,	Smith,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Mitchell, of Wis.	Stewart,
Baker,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Teller,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Berry,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Brown,	Hill,	Perkins,	Walthall.
Butler,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Call,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,	White,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Clark,	McBride,	Sherman,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. QUAY. What is the status of the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to state that the bill is before the Senate, vetoed by the President of the United States. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WHITE. What is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], but I will vote to make a quorum. I will vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Wis.	Roach,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Shoup,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Teller,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Tillman,
Clark,	McBride,	Platt,	Warren,
Cullom,	Mantle,	Pugh,	White.
Dubois,	Martin,	Quay,

NAYS—7.

Bacon,	Berry,	Hill,	Vest.
Bate.	Gray,	Lindsay,

NOT VOTING—44.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Irby,	Proctor,
Baker,	Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Sewell,
Blackburn,	Elkins,	Kenney,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Frye,	Lodge,	Squire,
Brice,	Gear,	McMillan,	Turpie,
Brown,	George,	Mills,	Vilas,
Burrows,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Hale,	Murphy,	Wetmore,
Chilton,	Harris,	Pasco,	Wilson,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. I suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. HOAR. My question of order is that the suggestion of the want of a quorum is out of order; that the matter of the intervention of business has nothing to do with it. In the case of the repeated motions to adjourn, the Senate having done something, they are motions for the Senate to do something, to wit, to adjourn, and the previous motion to adjourn may have been voted down for the very purpose of doing the thing which has intervened, and then they may be ready. But it never was intended that it should be put into the power of one man to prevent 89 men from doing business.

The intervention of business, therefore, has nothing to do with it. The proper and reasonable application of the rule of the Senate is that if the Chair, on inspection, sees that since the presence of a quorum has been ascertained in the way provided by the rules there has been no substantial change in the condition and composition of the Senate, and that the quorum which was ascertained continues here, he is bound to refuse to entertain the suggestion and allow the 89 men to go on with their business.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, without discussing the general question, it is sufficient now that no business has intervened since the announcement showed a quorum when the Senator from Pennsylvania made his point. I insist upon it that the Senator can make no point of the want of a quorum. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] is entitled to be recognized, having addressed the Chair to make a motion.

Mr. QUAY. Those who were present in the Senate pending the discussion of the bill for the repeal of the silver clause of the Sherman Act will remember that a majority of the Senate were held up by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] and the entire minority, and the precedent was adopted and sustained that anyone, at any time after intervening business, could suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] if that is not true?

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order, which I will state. The Chair announced the vote. That vote showed the presence of a quorum. No business has intervened. We need not go further and raise a point upon an imaginary case. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] rose and asked to be recognized by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York that two points of order can not be pending at once unless the second point of order is addressed to something contained in the first. The Senator from Massachusetts has suggested an independent substantive point of order. The point of order suggested by the Senator from New York is an independent point on a different principle.

Mr. HILL. No. The question I raise is that the Senator from Pennsylvania can not raise the question of a quorum when the roll call had immediately before disclosed the presence of a quorum. That is the point I should like to have decided, and if it is decided in my favor the Senator who addressed the Chair is entitled to be recognized. Is not that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained to rule that the point submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts has to be disposed of unless the Senator from Massachusetts waives it.

Mr. HILL. It is the same point of order, except the Senator from Massachusetts went further; that is all. Having the two points both involving the same question, the Senator from Massachusetts went further.

Mr. VEST. I should like to hear the rule read. I ask for the reading of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks for the reading of the rule. The Secretary will read the rule.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to say that while to the public at large, to the people of the United States, it may seem that I am wantonly obstructing business, Senators on this floor know that I am doing it in the interest of millions of Pennsylvania capital and the wages of thousands of Pennsylvania workingmen.

Mr. HILL. Pennsylvania capital can not override the plain rules of the Senate or the country.

Mr. HOAR. I say again that in my judgment the question of the intervention of business is not a decisive test. It is the question whether the Chair sees that the composition of the Senate as made up, as ascertained by the roll call, remains substantially unchanged and a quorum continues. The other rule is to put 89 men, representing this whole country, in the power of one.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that when he and I were striving to sustain the credit of the Government pending the controversy over the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act the rule was interpreted as it is being interpreted by the Chair to-night.

Mr. HOAR. I never heard it interpreted in that way.

Mr. QUAY. My recollection is that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] time and again suggested the absence of a quorum, and we were compelled to sit here and to take vote after vote. We were held, I think, one month in that controversy by those obstructive tactics.

Mr. HOAR. I never considered what was done at that time parliamentary or proper on the subject of the points raised or thought of.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, is this ancient history in order?

Mr. DUBOIS. Inasmuch as the Senator from Pennsylvania has alluded to me, I would say that during that debate on the repeal of the Sherman Act I never called for a quorum once when there was a quorum of the Senate in their seats. The Senator from Pennsylvania complained about that, and he stands here now and says he wants to protect some capital in Pennsylvania. They did not care much then when they struck down all of that Western country. But even through that fierce fight, which was a fight for the people of this country and not for a few capitalists in Pennsylvania, men who have millions and whom you are trying to give more millions to unjustly—even through that fierce fight I never asked for a quorum in the Chamber when there was a majority of the Senate in their seats; and no advocate of silver on this floor and none of those who were opposing the repeal of the Sherman Act asked for a quorum when there was a quorum present.

Mr. QUAY. My recollection is——

Mr. HILL. Can we not have the decision of the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. QUAY. I may be mistaken and the Senator from Idaho may be correct, but my recollection is that time and again, I can not say the Senator from Idaho personally suggested the absence of a quorom, but those who were subordinate to him and were acting in concert with him when there was a quorum present, and at times when there was not a quorum present the Senator from Idaho sat in his seat and refused to vote, and efforts were made to force him to vote without success, because the Senator from Idaho stood bravely up and refused to vote, and the Senate had no recourse.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not know anything about the controversy then existing, but I want to know about the rules of the Senate. I ask for the reading of Rule V in relation to the matter, and I ask for a decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE V.

QUORUM—ABSENT SENATORS MAY BE SENT FOR.

1. No Senator shall absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave.

2. If, at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the Presiding Officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate.

3. Whenever upon such roll call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, that rule expressly says that a question of a quorum can not be raised if the roll call has just disclosed the presence of a quorum, and that is the only question that is now pending. If that is so, then the Senator from Pennsylvania could not raise the question and the Senator from Idaho was entitled to be recognized by the Chair.

Mr. SEWELL. In answer to the Senator from New York, the rule very explicitly shows that his point can not be maintained. Here it is in plain English:

2. If, at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the Presiding Officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result.

Mr. HILL. The calling of the roll, no matter whether it is upon a regular roll call, upon the passage of a measure, or whether it is upon a direct suggestion of the want of a quorum, is a roll call, and that has just taken place. That is the fact which determines the presence of a quorum. Otherwise when it is called a suggestion can be made that there is no quorum, and you can keep right on forever. It can not be done, Mr. President, under these rules. Bad as these rules are, they will not permit such a farce as that. I submit the question that when the roll call discloses the presence of a quorum then the Senator who has addressed the Chair is entitled to proceed. That is the question I want decided by the Chair.

Mr. SEWELL. The rules of the Senate may be wrong——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will suspend a moment. The Chair will state that two points of order have been made. Only one can be entertained at a time. The point of order before the Senate (after which the point of order made by the Senator from New York will be entertained) is the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is that the Chair should by inspection ascertain whether there is a quorum present, and if he finds such to be the case that he shall rule the call out of order.

Mr. HILL. That is an abstract question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to hear any debate on that question. If there is none, the Chair is ready to rule upon it.

Mr. SEWELL. The rule does not give the Chair that right. The rule is absolute.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, we have enough difficulties here without imagining them. I am one of those willing to go to the extent of holding that the Chair can even under these rules substantially count a quorum; but it is not necessary to go so far until we reach that point. That question does not arise. You are not called upon to decide the question whether at any time the Chair can discover that immediately after the roll call there had been any change, as the Senator from Massachusetts says. You are not called upon to decide that question; it is an abstract question which may arise hereafter.

The question that was presented here was simply to test the accuracy of the last roll call. The last roll call disclosed the presence of a quorum, and a Senator can not immediately arise and say, "I suggest the want of a quorum." That is the practical question and the only one now before the Senate to decide. The other is an abstract question which has not yet arisen, but which may arise before this evening's performance is over.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from New York a very important fact, that may settle this question of order, and that is the information that the other House has receded from its disagreements all along the line so far as the naval bill is concerned.

Mr. HILL. That is not a parliamentary question; that is a motive for the proceeding.

Mr. LINDSAY. It lacks now only the signatures of the presiding officers of the two Houses and of the President of the United States to make it a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is constrained to rule that when a Senator presents a point of order the Chair can not refuse to rule upon it on the ground that it is an abstract question. If a Senator presents a point of order, it is within the province of the Chair to rule upon it; but the Chair can not rule upon more than one point at a time. After having ruled upon one question, if the other still survives, the Chair will decide it. The Chair will then rule on the point of order submitted by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HOAR. The point of order is that the suggestion is out of order. I stated one reason for the point and the Senator from New York stated another—two reasons in favor of the same point. My proposition was that, after having done this, the provision of the rule has been exhausted, and if the Chair sees, upon an inspection, that the composition of the Senate remains unchanged, it can not be successively put every two minutes; otherwise, if I should be held to be wrong, it is very evident, it seems to me, that the rule would require the Chair to put it again and again, without any intervening business whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts is that, after there has been a roll call, in case there has been no intervening business and there is another suggestion of the absence of a quorum, the Chair should rule that point out of order if, upon a personal inspection of the Senate, he should determine that there had been no substantial change in the number present. The Chair knows no way in which such an inspection could be made, except by counting; and the Chair does not know of any rule in the Senate which justifies or authorizes the Presiding Officer to count a quorum. So the present occupant of the chair is now ready to pass upon the question submitted by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. My point is, that the presence of a quorum was determined by the last roll call, and that a Senator can not immediately thereafter suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator mean to embrace the feature that no business has intervened?

Mr. HILL. Yes; that no business has intervened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Idaho can now make his motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order, Mr. President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 30 and 103 to the said bill and agreed to the same.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and agreed to the same.

WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. HILL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals, the conferees having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in lines 3, 4, and 5 the words "That in all cases in which by law the decrees and judgments of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia are final" and insert in lieu thereof the words "That in any case heretofore made final in the court of appeals of the District of Columbia."

DAVID B HILL,
O. H. PLATT,
CLARENCE D. CLARK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY M. BAKER,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, for information, to have the bill read as it will read when the conference report is adopted.

Mr. HILL. This is the reading of the bill:

That in any case heretofore made final in the court of appeals of the District of Columbia it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. I could not hear the Senator very well. I should be glad to have the bill read at the desk.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read as it will read if the conference report is concurred in.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any case heretofore made final in the court of appeals of the District of Columbia it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator understand to be the meaning of the phrase "in any case heretofore made final." Does it mean a case is finally decided?

Mr. HILL. That is substantially the language of the act of 1891.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean where the decision of the court is final?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. HOAR. That seems to be rather an extraordinary phrase, if I comprehend it.

Mr. PLATT. It follows the law.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator read the law, which he has before him, perhaps?

Mr. HILL. It reads as follows:

And excepting also that in any such case as is hereinbefore made final in the circuit court of appeals it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. The act of what year is that?

Mr. HILL. The act of 1891.

Mr. PLATT. The circuit court of appeals.

Mr. HOAR. That is the exception, and it follows the same language in this act. Perhaps I may be permitted to say that that was a statute in which, by some extraordinary omission, there were several very inexact, unlawyer-like phrases adopted. The matter was left by accident to two quite eminent lawyers, each of whom, I think, trusted the other, and each of whom thinks the other is to blame. But, as that phrase is in the statute, I agree to the propriety of the Senator from New York having followed the phraseology, and I make no further objection. But of course the Senator would agree with me that if we were drawing an original bill we should not speak of a case being made final, but of a decision being final.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 60 and 88.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 61, 87, 90, 92, and 95; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of said amendment, the words "three hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and thirty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "that" in line 7 of said amendment the words, "on and after January 1, 1898," and strike out in line 9 the word "hereafter" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thereafter;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That on and after January 1, 1898, all acts, ordinances, and resolutions of the council of either of the aforesaid Five Tribes passed shall be certified immediately upon their passage to the President of the United States and shall not take effect if disapproved by him, or until thirty days after their passage: Provided, That this act shall not apply to resolutions for adjournment or any acts or resolutions or ordinances in relation to negotiations with commissioners heretofore appointed to treat with said tribes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the mineral lands of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, are hereby declared open to public entry, under the mineral-land laws of the United States, and no one person shall be allowed to make more than four claims on lands containing gilsonite, and on and after January 1, 1898, all of said reservation unallotted to the Indians shall be open to public entry under the land laws of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the following persons, and not to their assignees, immediately upon the passage of this act, out of the balance remaining of the 35 per cent reserve for payment of legal services rendered and expenses incurred under contracts entered into by the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians, through their authorized commissioners, in the prosecution of their claim appropriated for by act of Congress approved August 23, 1894 (28 Statutes at Large, page 451), entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes," namely:

"To William S. Peabody, $10,000.
"To Charles A. Webb, administrator of the estate of C. M. McLoud, $2,500.
"To Marcus Erwin, administrator of the estate of Marcus Erwin, deceased, $2,500.
"To Theodore H. N. McPherson, $2,500.
"To Mary E. Carey, executrix of the estate of James J. Newell, deceased, $2,000.
"To John A. Sibbald, $1,000.
"To Samuel W. Peel, $2,500.
"To Reese H. Voorhees and John Paul Jones, $3,500.
"To David A. McKnight, $2,000.
"To C. M. Carter, $167.50.
"To Belva A. Lockwood, $500.
"To J. L. Baugh, $2,500.
"To Stephen W. Parker, $2,500.
"To Joel M. Bryan, $5,215.06.

"And the remainder of said sum of money, after paying the foregoing specific sums, shall be paid to the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians on their requisition or requisitions made therefor by the national treasurer of the Cherokee Nation or by such other person or persons as said Old Settlers or Western Cherokees may in special council appoint for that purpose: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall take a receipt from the person so appointed to receive said money from the said Old Settler or Cherokee Indians; and every person receiving the sums of money herein specified shall receipt in full for all claims upon the aforesaid fund, and such payment shall extinguish every right and claim of any kind of any one of said parties to any part of said funds of $78,765.13."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"That all children born of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman by blood and not by adoption, and who is at this time recognized by the tribe, shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, either by blood or descent, as any other member of the tribe, and no prior act of Congress shall be construed as to debar such child of such rights."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 30 and 103, the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEORGE C. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. QUAY. This is an important report, and it seems to me proper that a full Senate should act upon it. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the want of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Smith,
Allen,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Squire,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Bate,	Frye,	Martin,	Teller,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Brice,	Hale,	Palmer,	Vest,
Brown,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Butler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Warren,
Call,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wilson.
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,
Clark,	Jones, Nev.	Roach,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Shoup,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the call of the roll 53 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. WILSON subsequently said: I had hoped to say a single word, and rose to address the Chair before the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill had been adopted, not by way of any criticism upon the conferees for the rejection of amendment numbered 90, and also of amendment numbered 88, but to call attention to the fact that when the appropriation bill came over here from the other House it contained an amendment authorizing the leasing of certain lands in the Colville Reservation for mineral location. It was thought advisable upon the part of the Senate to strike out what the House had placed in the bill, and to insert an amendment opening the south half of the Colville Indian Reservation to mineral location without the operation of leases.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, without request, saw proper to send to the committee a letter protesting against opening the Indian reservation to mineral location other than by lease. In his letter to the committee he says he wishes to keep the boundaries of the Indian reservation intact, and yet he is in favor of leasing the mineral property. How a prospector could lease mineral property without first having gone upon the land and prospected, no one has been able to tell. It would be absolutely impossible, and it is an absurdity upon its face. Doubtless the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs expected them to look over into the promised land with a telescope and locate the mineral lands. It is an utter absurdity. The amendment to strike out, which was adopted by the Senate, was proper, and the amendment that was adopted was proper. How are we to develop this Western country? What has this Western country produced? These mineral lands.

Mr. President, when we look into it, when we stop to examine it, we find that the mineral lands of the West have furnished nearly all of the circulating medium of this country. Here is a vast mineral belt upon which now no one is permitted to go except the Indian agent, and yet the Commissioner of Indian Affairs comes here and says that we must lease this mineral property before we open it, and that we must go to the tribe of Indians who are upon that reservation and get their consent. They do not own the property. They never did own the property. The statutes of the United States have expressly declared that they have no ownership in the land. Section 5 of an act to be found on page 54 of the statutes of the Fifty-second Congress, first session, especially provided:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as recognizing title or ownership of said Indians to any part of said Colville Reservation.

Why should they be permitted, then, to lease these lands, as recommended by the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs? It is an utter absurdity. The land should have been thrown open to all the people, giving them an opportunity to enter upon the reservation and develop the mineral lands, if any can be found there.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I submit the final report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10167) "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 6, 7, and 58.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 53, 55, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, and 131, and agree to the same.

H. M. TELLER,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM GROUT,
MAHLON PITNEY,
A. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9571) authorizing the Galveston and Great Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 6353) to simplify the system of making sales in the Subsistence Department to officers and enlisted men of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 9099) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 10223) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to copyrights.

NONPARTISAN INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9188. To that bill there has been an amendment presented as a substitute by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I ask that the substitute be laid before the Senate for present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The title of the bill will be read for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. I reserve the point of order.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9188) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed to be substituted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That a commission is hereby created to be called the "Industrial Commission," to be composed as follows: Five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof; five members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, and nine other persons, who shall fairly represent the different industries and employments, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, to manufacturing, and to business, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation as it may deem best upon these subjects.

SEC. 3. That the commission shall give reasonable time for hearings, if deemed necessary, and if necessary it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make investigation in any part of the United States, and it shall be allowed actual necessary expenses for the same. It shall have the authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and affirmations. All necessary expenses, including clerks, stenographer, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; however, not to exceed $50,000 per annum for expenditures under this section.

SEC. 4. That it may report from time to time to the Congress of the United States, and shall at the conclusion of its labors submit a final report.

SEC. 5. That the term of the commission shall be two years. The salary of each member of this commission appointed by the President shall be $3,600 per annum and actual traveling expenses.

SEC. 6. That any vacancies occurring in the commission by reason of death, disability, or from any other cause shall be filled by appointment of the President of the United States.

SEC. 7. That a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which has been read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator submit a motion, or is it a request to take up the bill by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. QUAY. The amendment to the bill is one introduced by me. I understood the Senator from Idaho to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. QUAY. Then I hope the Senator will make that motion.

Mr. SHOUP. Inasmuch as there is an objection, I move to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if this will interfere at all with the capitalists of Pennsylvania?

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SHOUP. There are ten million toiling men and women interested in this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SHOUP. I beg pardon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to take up the bill. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to take the bill up.

Mr. HAWLEY. I called for the yeas and nays loud enough to be heard, I thought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs pardon of the Senator; he did not hear him.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. CAFFERY], and I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote, if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—44.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Quay,
Allen,	Gibson,	Mantle,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Gray,	Martin,	Shoup,
Baker,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Butler,	Hill,	Morgan,	Squire,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Peffer,	Thurston,
Clark,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Tillman,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Dubois,	McBride,	Pugh,	White.

NAYS—6.

Bate,	Chilton,	Platt,	Vest.
Blanchard,	Hawley,

NOT VOTING—40.

Allison,	Daniel,	Harris,	Proctor,
Berry,	Davis,	Irby,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Elkins,	Kenney,	Sewell,
Brice,	Frye,	Lodge,	Turpie,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Vilas,
Burrows,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Voorhees,
Caffery,	George,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Call,	Gordon,	Murphy,	Wetmore,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Wilson,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9188) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am one of those opposed to this bill in its present form, but, as it has been taken up, it might as well be discussed at this time and in this way as at any other time and in any other way. But I should be glad, before the discussion proceeds, to have some of the Senators who are warmly interested in this measure show us the merits and the necessities of it. As Blackstone says of a new statute, "Let us know the present law, the mischief thereof, and the remedy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The bill is still in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I desire to justify myself in the vote I shall cast. If this were a proposition to appoint nine men from private life, representing a variety of trades so far as possible, and if the representation were to be taken from all kinds of labor unions and all kinds of discontent or dissatisfaction, I would not say one word in opposition to it, for there might be some advantages from testimony collected by able men, eminent among the classes of which I speak. My objection is chiefly to the mingling of the two, for it is also proposed here to have ten members of Congress selected by the presiding officers of the two Houses as part of the commission.

We have now, if I recollect aright the number of electoral votes, 447 members of the two Houses, duly elected under the Constitution and the statutes by the best devices known to civilization, the best devices known to statesmen and students of law and liberty for obtaining a fair representation of the opinions and desires of the people of the United States. The country is divided into Congressional districts containing a little over 173,000 people each, divided, so far as may be, when legislatures are just about it, into comparatively symmetrical districts. It is supposed, barring shoestring districts, as a Senator near me suggests, that the people in those several districts know what they want. To say that they do not know what they want is to reflect upon their intelligence, their judgment, and their patriotism.

What they want, sir, is well represented by the great variety of sentiment and opinion which prevails in these two bodies—Populists, silver Republicans, regular Republicans or gold Republicans, silver Democrats, gold Democrats—on the whole fairly representing the discordant desires of the people.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think the Senator omitted to mention the silver Republicans.

Mr. HAWLEY. I mentioned them.

I say the Senators and Representatives already elected and sworn in are the fairest possible for a jury or a bench—I do not care which—that could be imagined. I do not now say who is right and who is wrong, but they represent the nation. It is the best we can do; it is the culmination of the efforts of centuries to attain free government. When we get together, we do not, of course, assume that "we know it all;" we do not assume that we are all-wise, or that we are perfect in any respect, but we do fairly represent the people taken as a whole.

I remember that when John Morrissey, the pugilist, was elected to the House of Representatives from a district of New York City it was freely said by some that he was the best man in the district, the fairest representative that could be selected. He would not lie and he was not afraid, and those are two great virtues. In addition to that, he stood by his friends and he knew what his district wanted. He was their champion in Congress as well as in the fistic arena.

We represent the people. We know more about them, at any rate, than any random collection or organization of men that gets together and attempts to have practically another member of Congress, in fact nine or ten more members of Congress. We are supposed, as a rule, to have given a good deal of reading and a good deal of thought to all political questions. We are chosen by this elaborate system; we are sworn to a diligent and honest performance of our duties, and whatsoever the grumblers, educated and uneducated, of the army of labor or the cultured left wing of Altgeld's army may say, we are, on the whole, a representative body and know something about what our constituents desire.

Now, if you chose to make a commission of nine or ten or twelve men, chosen from the variety of interests and opinions which would be required to make a fair selection to represent all these classes of men—the Altgeld men, the Socialists, the Nihilists, and all the others—and put them in a commission and let them have an investigation, collect their evidence, and present their general judgment, I should like that; it would be instructive; but I protest in a reasonable way—I am not fanatical about it—against the combination proposed by the pending bill. I know, I think, what sort of men you will get for these nine commissioners, to some extent. I do not think you will get as good a lot under this bill as you would if you authorized the President to make the selection.

Mr. HOAR. How much time would ten members of Congress have to give to this duty?

Mr. HAWLEY. The honored Senator from Massachusetts at my right [Mr. HOAR] asks how much time the ten Congressmen would have to spare for this investigation. Would they be able to discharge fairly the duties of the position? We have had commissions which have been of great service.

Mr. SHOUP. I want to say to the Senator in that connection——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, for a question.

Mr. SHOUP. Nine of these men are to be appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHOUP. And all of this commission——

Mr. HAWLEY. I must resume the floor. I can not yield for interesting conversation.

We have had commissions which have been of great service not only to ourselves in the transaction of current business, but also of general and permanent service to all economists and students of political affairs. I take for an illustrious example the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, that branch or section from the Finance Committee which went to work to ascertain the prices of material, the figures relating to labor, and all that, and which compiled in a nonpartisan way those very admirable volumes, consisting of the evidence of experts and the conclusions derived from their own study, and made a report which was accepted on both sides of this Chamber during the hottest discussion of the tariff and of financial questions, the currency, as a standard work.

That is the kind of commission I should like to see organized upon this question, and not a sort of harum-scarum affair, each subdivision to take up for itself this remarkable range of subjects, "questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, to manufacturing, and to business, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation as it may deem best upon these subjects." That is about all there is of the material interests of the country—agriculture, manufacturing, and business; and it is proposed that this commission shall cover this whole ground and make any suggestions they please.

I say the old way is the better way; a commission composed of members of Congress, and then a distinct commission of persons taken from private life, made up with whatever motives you please, according to the best judgment of the President.

Mr. SHOUP. I know the Senator from Connecticut would not knowingly misrepresent the manner in which this commission is to be appointed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Please do not waste time on that. I know that it is to be composed of five men to be appointed by the Senate, five by the House of Representatives, and nine by the President.

Mr. SHOUP. That is correct. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the political parties to which the Senator has alluded are represented in both branches of Congress; but there are ten or twelve million people in the United States who are without representation on the committees which frame or recommend legislation. Those are the laboring people of the country, and they ask for recognition. This bill was introduced in their behalf and went to the Committee on Education and Labor, by which it was referred to the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] as a subcommittee, who gave it a great deal of study and thought, and submitted a report upon it, which has been laid before the Senate. Later on a substitute which met with his concurrence was presented. The Senator from California, having had this bill under consideration, is better qualified and better fitted to explain it to the satisfaction of all Senators here than I think anyone else can do, and I therefore yield the balance of my time to the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I shall not weary the Senate by a long speech. The committee have had this measure under consideration for several months. They considered it in its various phases. It passed the House of Representatives almost unanimously. When it reached the Senate, there was some opposition developed against the bill, and finally this compromise substantially was submitted to the Senate for its consideration.

It is no experiment. In 1885 our Government established a national bureau of labor statistics, and almost ever since that time there has been at the head of that organization a gentleman who has made a great reputation for himself as a gatherer of statistical matter for the information of Congress—Carroll D. Wright, of Massachusetts. That is a fund of information of which this commission will have the benefit, and out of it they may formulate some bill which perhaps will allay the feeling that has existed and does exist between capital and labor.

Other countries have realized the importance of this question. Great Britain has a bureau of labor statistics. Germany, France, and Belgium have such commissions. Those commissions consist of from ten and fifteen to as high as thirty-two members. They gather together the information and present it to their legislative bodies, and out of it there is formulated a law or laws which are intended for the benefit of the people. In the United States alone thirty-two States have established labor bureaus, annually gathering information, and this commission will have the benefit of their work.

No possible harm can come from the enactment of the bill and much good may result. Labor is the source of all wealth. If the laboring people of this country are not prosperous, of our other people no one can be prosperous. One-half of this country can not be unhappy and the other half happy and prosperous. We are so closely allied to each other that the prosperity and the happiness of one depend in a great measure upon the community, upon his neighbor, upon those with whom he daily associates. The expense of the bill is reduced to a minimum. Fifty thousand dollars per annum for two years is the maximum amount that can be expended.

Mr. President, only a few months ago we appropriated $50,000 to pay a commission to locate a harbor of refuge on the Pacific coast where we might expend $3,000,000, and yet our Government board of engineers had reported again and again to the Senate, but the Senate was not satisfied, and they created the commission.

We are daily receiving petitions and memorials from our constituents from Maine to Texas, from the Pacific States to the Atlantic States, asking us to consider this and that proposition, requesting us as their representatives to espouse their cause and to formulate into law that for which they have petitioned. More than fifty labor organizations in this country have petitioned us to enact this bill into law, and, as I understand, it has been so amended that all of the objectionable features have been eliminated. It is to cost not to exceed $50,000 a year. If it cost ten times that amount, it would be money wisely and judiciously expended. If it could be the means of preventing one strike, one conflict between labor and capital, it would be worth ten times, aye, a hundredfold, more than the amount named in the bill.

Mr. President, the great strike which commenced in July, 1894, it is estimated, cost this country $100,000,000, to say nothing of the lives lost, of the heartaches, of the bad feeling that existed, and which was brought about as the result of that conflict.

It seems to me the part of wise statesmanship to reconcile and harmonize when there is a conflict between any of the interests of this great country. Our interests are common, and we as representatives of the people should heed their petitions and memorials. The cautious mariner does not wait until the storm has burst with full force upon his bark before he commences to take in sail; he prepares for the coming storm.

I think that much of this complaint is imaginary; that there are many good people, thoughtful people, who believe that the laws are made in the interests of great corporations and trusts, and that the poorer people do not have the same opportunity with the rich. Many think that the poor are getting poorer and the rich richer. I do not share in that belief. I think much of it is imaginary, for every avenue to wealth and every avenue to fame and honor is open to the humblest boy and child in this land. But it is our duty to consider these questions, to consider them thoughtfully and considerately. Carroll D. Wright has recommended this measure. He has devoted a quarter of a century of his life to gathering statistics, to investigating labor organizations, the agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial interests of our country. We have all that information before us that this commission may take, and out of which they may formulate a law that may bring peace and prosperity to the people who are now complaining. There are many questions that are so closely allied to this that you can not separate one from the other. The question of arbitration, of conciliation, of profit sharing, the apprentice law, the unemployed labor of our country, the competition with Japanese and the servile labor of India, the low prices paid by other countries for labor, paid in silver, the immigration question—all these questions are to be considered by this commission.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator from California permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. Did not the Labor Committee, of which the Senator is a member, report the House bill without amendment, and when he made an effort for the consideration of that House bill, did not the opposition he spoke of develop itself, which induced the committee to frame and offer the substitute which is now before the Senate?

Mr. PERKINS. I so understand it, Mr. President.

Mr. PUGH. Is it not the surest way to secure the creation of a commission for the objects stated by the Senator to pass the House bill without amendment, and if the Senate adopts the substitute that has been offered by the committee, does not that insure the defeat of any legislation at the present session?

Mr. PERKINS. I am in full accord with the expression of my friend from Alabama, but the friends of this bill were so anxious that it should be crystallized into a law at the present session that they have accepted the suggestions which have been presented by the opponents of the bill and so have offered the substitute. The committee did not do this; it was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and has been accepted by the friends of the bill. I do not believe that even if it were to adopt the substitute the bill will be defeated, for the House of Representatives, composed of 356 members, have come fresh from the people. They are in touch with the people.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask my honorable friend a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator think that any member of the House of Representatives coming fresh from the people of California is nearer than he is to the people? Are the members of that body any more in touch with their people than he is with the people of his State?

Mr. PERKINS. I would be untrue to myself if I did not say that I am in touch and in deep sympathy with the "plain people," as Mr. Lincoln called them; but it is a fact that many people think that this body is not a body as closely in touch with the people as the other body, whose members are elected directly at the ballot box by the people whom they represent in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to know whether my friend, then, is not in favor of the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people?

Mr. PERKINS. I believe that a Senator should be elected by the people direct. I believe the nearer the representatives of the people get to their constituents, the more they understand their wants and are in sympathy with them, the better the results that will come to our country. We can not have in all of our States such distinguished Senators as my friend from Massachusetts, or I might not be a convert to that faith; but it is a fact that from many of the States some of us have come here who never would have been here if the people had voted for us directly. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. I rose to ask my honorable friend whether he meant to concede that he was not as much in touch with the people of his State as if he had come expressly from them, as any Representative from that State would come. My distinguished friend has certainly had as good an opportunity, in the course of his very remarkable, useful, and honored life, as any human being to understand what the people are who get their living by honest work. He has had the indorsement of the direct vote of his people for the greatest office that they can give, and he could have it again if he would be a candidate.

I do not agree myself that I am not in touch with the people of my State, that I do not come straight from them every time I come here, and I do not agree that the race of Yankee yeomanry from which I have descended has not the popular instinct and impulse as much as anybody. I do not think that my honorable friend means to concede to the men who are attacking this body that we do not represent the people as much as any body can. You will find, if you look at the history of the legislation of this country, that five important, useful measures for the benefit of the people originated here where you will find that one originated in the other branch.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I thank my honored friend for the compliment. His life is a part of the history of this country. No words from me could do sufficient honor and justice to what he has done, and on some occasion I should like, if I were capable, to pay the just tribute which he merits, to his worth, his statesmanship, his patriotism. But I want to pass this bill to-night. The people in the House of Representatives have almost unanimously voted for it. Now, let us imitate their example, and show the people that we are in touch and sympathy with them, and if no good comes of it, we will have done a righteous act.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I merely wish to add a few words to what my friend the honorable Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has said. I do not desire to detain the Senate by any lengthy speech. I do not propose to occupy the floor for any considerable lenght of time.

I think it is necessary for the Senate of the United States, by its action here and now, to indicate its sympathy with the purposes of the amendment. I am very glad that the amendment originated with the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from Washington will allow me to interrupt him, I beg to say that the amendment did not originate with the Senator from Pennsylvania and does not express his best thought or judgment. It was handed to the Senator from Pennsylvania as the result of some sort of an agreement between the labor people, and, although I do not approve of the amendment, at their suggestion I submitted it to the Senate and had it read for information. If the friends of labor in the Senate wish to advance the interests of labor, they will vote down the amendment and vote up the original bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator from Pennsylvania, I understand, is, in all sincerity, in favor of the amendment proposed by him?

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Washington is entirely mistaken. I am not in favor of the amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. But the amendment was proposed by the honorable Senator himself.

Mr. QUAY. No.

Mr. SQUIRE. Then I do not understand the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania, if he introduced an amendment of which he is not in favor. I supposed the Senator from Pennsylvania had introduced the amendment in good faith.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from Washington will listen to me, he will understand the situation. I have stated that I introduced the amendment by request; that I did nothing with it except to send it to the desk to have it read for the information of Senators. I do not favor the amendment, but I favored the original bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. I regard the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as a simplification of the question and not as a complication of it. That is the way I have been taught.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator from Washington will permit me, I am authorized to say that the labor organizations, representing more than a million of the people of this country, are willing to accept of this amendment as a substitute, and if we will pass it now it will go to the House of Representatives, and they will concur in it; and if it does not become a law it is not the fault of Congress. Now, if we just adopt the amendment, we are all right.

Mr. SQUIRE. I do not propose, as I said in the beginning, to indulge in any extensive discussion of this question, but I feel it to be a very important one for us at this juncture. It is true, emphatically true, that the great labor interests of this country desire recognition, desire investigation, and desire results from investigation. No man who is familiar with affairs in business or has any kind of contact with the public pulse can fail to realize that there is something radically wrong to-day in all that relates to the labor question in this country. It is true there is agitation, there is unrest, and there is constant appeal to us as individual Senators and as individual Represenatives in the other House of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not let us pass the bill, then?

Mr. SQUIRE. I will be through in a moment. I have not occupied very much time. I have listened to the Senator from New Hampshire often.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Washington will allow me, I do not think a measure of this kind should pass until it is fully discussed, and I hope he will take all the time he wants. There is plenty of time.

Mr. SQUIRE. I thank the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. I have not given to this question any more study than he has. Probably I have not given to it any more study than many Senators upon the floor. What we need is action. What we need to do is to show to the people of the United States that we are in earnest, and that we are considering the broad questions relating to the labor interests of the country.

I did not propose to let this subject pass over in silence. I am ready to give my vote. I do not know how the Senate is going to vote. How can I tell until the votes are recorded? Senators come to me and say, "Yes, we are going to have it;" but I want the members of the Senate to understand that all the great labor interests of the country are looking to us in this particular instance as they have not done in any bill that has come before us in the past ten days or the past thirty days, and that it is needful that we should be careful and considerate in our action.

I believe it to be desirable that the Congress of the United States should recognize the great labor interests, and I do not know of any better way. I might have been willing to take the House bill, but if the substitute is simpler, if it is better, let us take it. We are not quibbling about this question. What we want is a recognition of the labor interests.

There is no use of ignoring this question. We ought to have a unanimous vote of the United States Senate in favor of this measure. There is no use of ignoring the fact that the labor interests of this country are dissatisfied with present conditions, which, unless remedied, may produce very important results to this Republic. I regard this measure as one fraught with immense consequences. Let us do what we can in our day and in our time for the betterment of the condition of the industrial classes.

I second all that the honorable Senator from California has said, but on the part of the people of the State of Washington, whom I have the honor in part to represent, I want to say that I am in favor, and earnestly in favor, of the adoption of this measure.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well.

Mr. NELSON. Is there any reason why we can not have an immediate vote on this bill?

Mr. SQUIRE. Not anything that I know of.

Mr. NELSON. All right, then, let us vote.

Mr. SQUIRE. If there is any other question that anyone wishes to ask, I shall be glad to answer it. If not, I shall take my seat.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose the present question before the Senate of the United States is as to the proper form of this legislation. For one, I am heartily in favor of the purpose of this bill. I had the honor, when I was a member of the other House, to be the author of the first bill for a labor commission ever proposed in this country, and of carrying it through that body. It failed in the Senate, but it was afterwards renewed, and finally ripened into the present Labor Commission, which has given satisfaction to everybody. I think it would be quite well—and I should defer to the wish which has been alluded to here of the representatives of the organizations of laboring men—that the work of this Commission should be extended as is proposed in this bill; but I do not think it is a mark of respect to those gentlemen; I do not think it is right, when we consider that we are the servants of the American people, to give our assent to crude, hasty measures of legislation, which are to be to the men who are seeking to promote them like apples of Sodom, fair to the eye, but to the taste nothing but dust and ashes.

Here is a proposition to investigate within two years' time all the great subjects which affect the happiness of the workingmen of our country, who are in substance and effect the country itself—immigration, labor, agriculture, manufacturing, business, including, of course, commerce and transportation, including the great internal commerce of this country, greater than that of all the countries in Europe put together, growing with a magnitude and a value and a rapidity which throws into the shade the dreams of even the Arabian fables, and you undertake to make a commission which, it is clearly demonstrable, can not do the work. Here are to be five members of the Senate and five members of the House of Representatives, two bodies which are to meet in special session within fifteen days, to be kept here in special session until nearly or quite midsummer, to return to their homes to give an account of their stewardship to their constituents in the State elections, to come back here again on the first Monday in December, and to stay here until midsummer next year, and you fasten upon that commission a majority of men who can not do the duties without violating their own sworn official oaths, and you say you will do it in the interests of labor, when every man on this floor, if you ask him whether he thinks that is a good thing to do, will tell you in private that he does not.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HOAR. Certa nly.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that there are more than five members of this body, to say nothing about the members of the other branch, who are absent all the time?

Mr. HOAR. Then you are going to put on that commission—and that makes it worse—and you propose to answer this grave ob ection by putting on it the idle and lazy drones of these two bodies.

Mr. PEFFER. That was not the point, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. That is the result of the proposition.

Mr. PEFFER. What I wish to suggest to the Senator is that, as a practical question, we always have from five to ten members of this body somewhere, not on duty.

Mr. HOAR. You can not have on the commission the great Senators, those who give their attention to these subjects, for their time is too valuable, according to the gentleman who made the proposition. The men who are absent from their duty, who are not on the Finance Committee, who are not on the Appropriations Committee, wno are not on the Commerce Committee, who are not on the Interstate Commerce Committee, are to be sifted out for this duty. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill if you strike that out, and let these labor gentlemen have their commission, let them select and present to the President of the United States nine or ten of the foremost citizens of the country whom they think fit for that purpose from among the representatives of their own organizations.

I am not a young leader in this matter; I have voted for every measure in the interest of the laboring man which has been up in either House of Congress now for nearly thirty years. I have a trunk full—I do not say so with any boastful spirit, but I say it to show my sincerity in this matter—I have a trunk full of the resolutions of labor organizations, of labor conventions all over the country, thanking me for getting up that original plan of a labor commission, thanking me for my votes for the eight-hour system, and for the other great measures which have been here in their interest; and I am not afraid to state what I think is best for them; I am not afraid that I shall not have their own sober judgment, and I say that it is not respectful or decent to them that we should ask them to make up a majority of this commission of men who have got to be engaged in other duties for the time when this work is to be done, which would take every moment of their time and all of their strength, or else to palm off on them the drones and lazy men in both Houses of Congress, who will make this a mere matter of junketing or traveling about the country enjoying themselves.

Mr. President, we had another proposition almost like this in regard to another subject, to put into a statute a provision for appointing a committee made up partly of persons outside of and partly of members of Congress, and it was ruled out within three days on a point of order, and Senators from all over the Chamber came to me and said they were glad that I had made the point of order, and that it was clearly right.

Now, what is this proposition? Are these men to be public officers? You can not by an act of Congress make public officers unless they are officers of the body itself under the Constitution. Each House of Congress may appoint its own officers. These are not officers. If they are, they are not constitutionally appointed. They are committees of this House and the other, and nothing else, and if they are committees of this House and the other, and nothing else, you can not create them by statute without changing the rules; you can not appoint them in this way without changing the rules.

Mr. ALDRICH. What rule?

Mr. HOAR. The rule which provides the method of appointing committees of the Senate and what the committees shall be.

Mr. President, I do not treat this thing as a farce, to be passed through as a sop to Cerberus, and to have every Senator who votes for it chuckle and laugh in his sleeve, as some Senators do, and say they passed it simply to please the labor men. I want to serve the labor men if I can and not to please them. I admit the existence of that magnificent discontent, characteristic of the great race of this people, characteristic of the great race from which we spring, which makes men discontented with their own condition and makes them try to better it. The discontent of labor will not hurt us if we try to answer its just and reasonable demands. That discontent which makes every American look away from the space where he stands, which, to borrow the eloquent phrase of the Senator from Kansas who was once here, makes him hungry for the horizon, which sends him to the Arctic and Antarctic sea in search of his prey, which has filled up our Western lands, and which makes the man wherever he is not contented that his children shall not be better off than he is, that his old age shall not be better than his youth, is the sublimest, the noblest, the most useful, the most patriotic instinct of the human heart, and I thank God that it is pervading the bosoms of the American people at this hour as never before. It is the parent of all virtue. It is the source of all glory. It is the creator of all wealth. I take hold of the hands of the great laboring organizations of America, and am glad to yield to their demands that they shall have these great questions investigated and probed to the bottom; but I stand here as their friend and defender when I say that it is not a demand to be met with half insult and half sneer.

I put this point in all seriousness. Answer it if you can. Is it decent to give them a commission of which ten men out of nineteen either can not do their duties at all, or who, if they undertake to do their duties at all, must be the ten laziest, idlest, most unnecessary men in either House of Congress?

I move to amend the substitute by striking out the words "five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof; five members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker;" to strike out the word "other," between the words "nine" and "persons," and to insert before the word "nine" the word "of" instead of "and." If that amendment shall be adopted, I will vote for the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to hear the substitute read as it will read if amended.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that the Senator from Pennsylvania himself, a gentleman of whom I wish to speak with all respect now and always, said when he introduced the amendment that he did not introduce it as liking it, but only that the gentleman who drew it might have it brought before the Senate in some way for its information, and that he thought the whole amendment had better be stricken out.

Mr. QUAY. I sent the amendment to the desk simply to be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to have the amendment to the amendment stated.

Mr. HOAR. If the amendment is not moved, then my motion is not in order. If it is, I want to make a commission of nine of the strongest and best men in this country, and say to the workingmen, "We will give you a commission which shall be as good and as entitled to respect as the Supreme Court of the United States itself, if you can get it."

Mr. SHOUP. Does the Senator make the motion to strike out?

Mr. HOAR. I do make the motion to strike out that much of the bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. Allow me to say a word. It is not important, as I take it, as to the technical language, or as to the number or the particular element that shall constitute the number of the commission proposed. The great question is, Shall there be a commission?

Mr. STEWART. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry before the debate goes any further. I should like to inquire of the Chair if the substitute has been offered and is pending, or whether we are acting on the original bill?

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand the amendment has been offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute has been adopted, as the Chair understands, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand this question is before the Senate and that debate is in order. All that has been said has been in order upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair again announces that the substitute was adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHILTON. I think the Chair must be mistaken about that.

Mr. THURSTON. The motion was put and carried.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts may be stated.

Mr. STEWART. Would a motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted be in order? I am opposed to the substitute and I am in favor of the original bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. I believe I was recognized by the Chair and am entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Washington ought to let the motion be stated. We ought to know on what he is talking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is advised that the substitute was adopted.

Mr. GRAY. That is right.

Mr. SQUIRE. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts proposed an amendment to the amendment. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to suggest that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, the important question is, Shall there be a commission?

Mr. QUAY. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Squire,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Lodge,	Stewart,
Bate,	Daniel,	McBride,	Teller,
Berry,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Blanchard,	Elkins,	Mantle,	Tillman,
Brice,	Frye,	Martin,	Vilas,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gibson,	Nelson,	Warren,
Call,	Gray,	Palmer,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Peffer,	White,
Carter,	Hill,	Perkins,	Wilson.
Chandler,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,
Clark,	Jones, Nev.	Shoup,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is necessary to understand the parliamentary situation. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania has been adopted. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment. That amendment is in effect to strike out the provisions that the commission shall consist jointly of Senators, Representatives, and those appointed by the President, and leaves a commission to be appointed to consist of nine, the members of which are not to be taken from either House of Congress. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HOAR. That is all there is of it.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator from Massachusetts affirms that I am correct in my statement. That leaves the question before the Senate simply, Shall we have a commission?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington, that the parliamentary situation is that the substitute was adopted as in Committee of the Whole, and the substitute being an entire substitute for the bill, it is not now open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. It will be open to amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be open to amendment in the Senate, of course. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. What became of the motion of the Senator from Nevada to reconsider?

Mr. STEWART. I was not allowed to make the motion. I could not get the floor.

Mr. FRYE. I do not see why he could not get the floor. Four or five Senators took the floor away from the Senator from Washington.

Mr. STEWART. I tried to get the floor, but failed to be recognized.

Mr. CHANDLER. Who has the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. SQUIRE. I had not yielded the floor. The question mainly is, Shall we have a commission or not? All members of the Senate will understand that. There may be technical points raised, but the great question is, Shall this great interest of labor be recognized? Shall there be a commission? Are we disposed to fritter away our opportunities here, and because one member of the Senate wants this and another wants that, shall we have nothing? The House have indicated by their vote a disposition to respond to the demand of labor. It is well recognized that this is one of the greatest questions that can employ the attention of either branch of Congress. We have the question fairly presented to us. Shall we as Senators shrink from it? Shall we dodge this question? Shall we undertake to escape by some subterfuge, by some technicality, from our plain duty in the premises? Are we representing the people? Is it true, as the Senator from Massachusetts has asserted, that we are in touch with the people of the United States? Is it true that we are disposed to respond to the demands of this great and important element—American labor? If it is true, we ought to find a way very easily to settle these minor questions of parliamentary practice. We ought to find a way to get at the kernel of the nut.

It seems to me we have had enough discussion of this question. I believe the members of the Senate of the United States are disposed to treat fairly the question of American labor. I do not believe we are disposed to bandy words about and play with this subject. The honorable Senator from Pennsylvania submitted this amendment. Does he mean it, or does he not mean it? If he does not, then some other Senator must stand ready to offer such an amendment. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts comes forward with his great experience, his learning, his high intelligence, his great patriotism, and he says that he stands ready to respond to the call of American labor. But he says he has technical objections to the amendment. He does not agree that it is wise to have the members of the Senate and the members of the House of Representatives as a part of this commission. Therefore he proposes to strike out the provision which relates to the number of the commission, and instead of having 19 members, 5 from the Senate, 5 from the House, and 9 citizens of the United States outside of the two Houses, he proposes to have it consist of 9, simply leaving out the 10 members of Congress proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

If there is anything in this movement, if there is anything of earnest in our hearts, let us get at it. There is no use dodging this question. Do we mean really to recognize the interests that are presented here by petitions to the extent, I am told, of 50,000 signatures? If we do, let us indicate our intention. It is not a question as to whether a portion of the commission shall consist of members of the House of Representatives and members of the Senate of the United States. The main question is, Shall we have any commission, and shall it be a competent one?

I take it for granted from statements made upon the floor of the Senate that Senators represent in good faith the interests of the American people and the great interests of American labor, and that we do want to deal with this question. We know very well that the members of the various committees of the Senate and House of Representatives engaged in their proper duties have sufficient to employ them during the session of the Congress. We know perfectly well that if the matter is left entirely to existing committees of Congress this question will not be adequately dealt with. We understand that perfectly well, do we not, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts? The Senator from Massachusetts responds that he does. It is evidently true that we do need a commission. The ablest and wisest and most patriotic hearts and souls in the Senate agree that we need a commission. We need a competent one, and we do not need to quibble as to the constitution of its personnel. But do not let us lose sight of the main question. The main question is, Do we intend to have such a commission, or are we willing to be diverted from it?

I know very well that Senators here have shot in the locker. I know very well that my friend the honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] intends to rise here and oppose this proposition. I know very well that others have concealed weapons to bring forth on this question. But I say to the Senator from Rhode Island before I take my seat that if this great Senate of the United States shall fail now and here to recognize the great interests of American labor on this question, they will fail of their duty and they will stand impaled upon the pickets of patriotism that are on the outworks of the great fortifications that represent the interest of the American people. We can not endure suspense longer. We must have action, and we must have intelligent action. The days of Patrick Henry were no more important than the days under which we are meeting to-day. The American people require at the hands of the American Congress a proper solution of the great problem of labor as applicable to our present conditions.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me for one moment. I rise to a question of explanation.

Mr. PALMER. I beg pardon of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have the floor, and I do not think I can be taken off of it by a call of the Senate. I am ready to submit that question to the Chair—whether having the floor I can be taken off for a call of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that such a proceeding can not regularly obtain.

Mr. PALMER. I am very anxious that a commission shall be appointed substantially as proposed by the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators and persons entitled to the floor will cease audible conversation.

Mr. PALMER. I have spoken in the sound of brass bands, and all that, and I have no particular concern about talk in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend. Senators and persons entitled to the privileges of the floor will please suspend conversation and resume their seats.

Mr. QUAY. I do not think the Senator from Illinois heard my request; I did not hear his statement. What I asked when the Senator from Illinois took the floor was that I might rise to a personal explanation.

Mr. PALMER. I do not yield for that.

Mr. QUAY. All right.

Mr. PALMER. No; the Senator from Pennsylvania can make his personal explanation after I get through.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious that a commission shall be appointed, but not exactly as proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I favor the appointment by the President of the United States of a commission of nine persons who shall consider the various questions proposed in the second section of the amendment:

That it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate questions pertaining to immigration.

I am solicitous to know whether an intelligent commission appointed by the President of the United States, the new President, will require of immigrants a literary qualification, requiring them to read and write the English language or some other language. I am exceedingly anxious to learn from the report of such a commission whether they believe that a protective tariff is essential to the protection of American labor, or whether a tariff which will protect American labor is, under the circumstances, possible.

I repeat, the second section of the bill provides that it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, to manufacturing, and to business. I desire to know whether a commission of intelligent men, after investigation, will report to the Congress of the United States that they believe any system of duties imposed upon imports will afford anything like protection to American labor, or whether the promise of our friends on the right, that by some system of tariff duties they will be able to secure to American labor American prices, will be fulfilled. I am anxious to learn on that point. In my judgment it is not possible. In my judgment a tariff for protection to the extent that protection was given twenty or thirty years ago is now an absolute impossibility.

I am anxious that nine intelligent men shall inquire whether protection is needed for the Pennsylvania iron interests and steel interests that are now able to sell their products abroad, in Canada and in Great Britain; whether the Pennsylvania doctrine of protection to American industry is now practicable or can be employed as the means of giving wages to American labor. I am anxious, too, to know whether agriculture will be benefited by an increased duty upon wool and a corresponding increase upon the manufactures of woolens. I am anxious to know, by the report of an intelligent, enlightened commission, whether under the new dispensation we are now approaching a tariff of duties upon the wool produced in the West, where sheep cost nothing, where wool is substantially the simple cost of the requirements of the shepherd, and a corresponding tariff on woolen productions is to the advantage of labor. I am anxious to know, after the deliberations of such a commission, whether, in their judgment, it is advisable and wise to adopt the free coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1; whether that will promote the interests of the American people and of agriculture and labor. I am anxious to know whether the business of the country will be improved either by a tariff or by the free coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1. Indeed, such men as would be selected would not be likely to agree that it was wise to consult European nations as to whether we should adopt the free coinage of silver or adopt some method by which we could obtain an international coin.

So, Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious that this commission, consisting of nine persons, shall be appointed, and that that commission shall deliberately consider all questions submitted to them, and I trust that some parliamentary method may be found by which nine persons, who shall fairly represent the different industries and employments, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be appointed, and that that commission shall investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, to manufacturing, and to business, and report to Congress and to suggest such legislation as they may deem best upon all those subjects.

Surely, no commission can be charged with a more important duty. If that commission should undertake to dispose of the questions that pertain to immigration, they will be called upon to and will investigate intelligently questions pertaining to immigration. They will report to this body, and will collect facts, as I suppose, which will illustrate the infinite folly, the childishness, and the injustice of that measure, which has met the condemnation of the President of the United States upon principles so broad and well settled, so much in harmony with justice and right, that the Senator, the author of the measure, or who is responsible for the measure, sought to commit it to the Committee on Immigration rather than meet a vote of this body.

I repeat that they will inquire whether labor would be benefited by what we term, ludicrously enough, protection. I trust that they will inquire whether labor would be benefited by the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. I trust they will inquire whether it is necessary that the American people shall adopt the coinage of Japan or Mexico or China; whether that is best for the labor interests of the country; and I trust, in their general consideration of business, they will determine that the only safety for American business is a rigid and firm adherence to the existing standard of values, and that free trade, subject to the mere duties which are essential for the necessities of the Government, is the policy of the United States.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, we are in the last hours of an expiring Congress. We have voted to take up this bill and consider it. We ought to be prepared to consider it in view of the fact that but a few short hours remain in which it can become a law. I believe it is time to quit horseplay on this bill; and if we propose to create a commission, let us create it. The labor and industrial interests of this country for months have been asking and beseeching us to give them a commission, a commission only with power to secure information and lay the result of that information before the Congress of the United States. There is no harm in such a commission; there can be no harm in the collection of such information; and why is it that these representatives of the great labor forces of the country are played with by the Congress of the United States day by day, month by month, given fair promises to their faces, and every time that their measure comes up they are met, not by direct and fair opposition, but by parliamentary procedure designed to defeat the end by means of delay?

Mr. President, it has never been my habit to tell the people of the country how I felt about labor or to parade any friendship that I might or might not have for the representatives of labor. I prefer to act rather than to speak; to vote rather than to delay.

There is an amendment here which provides for a simple commission, with no power except to secure evidence and lay the result before the Congress of the United States. I understand that the most respectable representatives of all the great labor organizations in this country are here to-day, ready to accept that as a satisfactory measure for the present time. We can pass that measure to-night if we wish to do it. We can defeat it; any Senator can defeat it if he desires to do so; but if we are to pass it, it must pass at once. The bill, if amended as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, will leave a simple commission of nine men to be selected by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It is a wise method of selection. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that it is not wise to create a mixed commission, half fish and half fowl, if I may apply that term to the several branches of the Congress of the United States. If we have a commission, it should be a commission pure and simple, composed of a membership which is outside of Congress and not connected with it.

Nine members is a fair number. The President of the United States can be safely trusted to assign them correctly among the different industrial and labor interests of the United States.

Now, there is the situation. If we are the friends of the organized labor of the United States, let us pass this bill now and send it to the House of Representatives, where it can be concurred in and become a law by 12 o'clock to-morrow. I do not desire to speak further. I wish to attest my belief on this subject by my vote. I hope to have a chance to give this small measure of right and justice to the organized-labor demands of the United States. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the words spoken by the Senator from Nebraska when he took his seat explain this bill. He appeals to the Senate to "accede to the demands of the organized labor element of the country." That is what the bill under consideration means. It is a demand from a certain class of our citizens that we shall adopt certain legislation for the purpose of securing from Congress certain other legislation which they desire.

Now, suppose it was a "demand" of the railroad interests of the United States; suppose that the presidents of the great railroads came here and demanded of us a commission to investigate the railroad situation in the United States, and to report its conclusions to Congress and its recommendations as to what kind of legislation we should adopt relating to the railroads of the United States.

Mr. PEFFER. Does the Senator think we could get such a commission if it were asked for in that way?

Mr. PLATT. That is the way this commission is asked for.

Suppose it was a "demand" from what is called the gold-standard interests of the United States that there should be a commission appointed in the interests of the money power of the United States to investigate and collect facts, to have hearings and make a report advising Congress what legislation it should pass for the benefit of the money interest and the money power of the United States. Suppose it were a "demand" from the manufacturers of the United States, who are interested, it is supposed, in the passage of a tariff bill; that they came here and presented the demands of organized manufacturing interests that we should pass a bill creating a commission to inquire into and determine what legislation we should pass in their interest.

Mr. President, what I have said is but preliminary to a few observations as to what I think of commissions. Certainly we ought not to accede to the "demands" of any class of our people in this respect. I believe that Congress ought to legislate, and that Congress has both the power and ability to legislate, on all subjects which require legislation. I do not believe in commissions created outside of Congress for the purpose of telling Congress what it shall do. If that shall be done, then the "demand"—that is the word—which requires this commission demands the legislation with tenfold clamor and with tenfold power.

I understand that by the Constitution of the United States we have a Congress composed of two branches, the Senate and the House, and I understand the Constitution commits the subject of legislation to that Congress. I know that in these days there has cropped out, as it seems to me, a desire to minimize the other two independent branches of Government and concentrate power in Congress, to minimize the executive and the judicial branches, and to magnify the power of Congress; and it seems that this sentiment, this disposition and tendency, is running side by side with a desire that Congress shall farm out its legislation into the hands of the classes which demand legislation for their particular benefit.

Mr. President, so long as the commission proposed was one in which the majority was to remain in Congress I thought it was not an entire abdication of our duty and our power, but I never have known any good to come from a commission appointed by Congress from outside of itself. I do not know that I need to enlarge at this time these views of mine, but I think we may well assume that we have the power and the capacity and are charged with a duty to enact needful legislation. The committees of Congress are ample; its committees are as able to deal with questions of legislation that affect the welfare of the country as any number of men unfamiliar with legislation who may be appointed from outside of Congress. If experience counts for anything, if long consideration of subjects counts for anything, the committees of Congress are better able to deal with these questions than are persons who are selected having had no experience in reference to them.

I would not vote for any commission upon any subject which was clothed with any power except that of investigation, and of reporting facts as the result of that investigation, and when it comes to that the committees of Congress can obtain those facts and report them to the Congress just as well and better than outside commissions. I would not favor a tariff commission or any other commission which was to report to Congress a formulated bill which Congress was expected to pass. It is abdicating our power; it is avoiding our duty, and all because there is a demand by organized labor or other organizations in this country that legislation shall be passed for their benefit.

Some one may as well speak out plainly and tell the truth. These outside commissions are contrary to the genius of our Constitution, contrary to our system of Government. They were not intended when the Constitution was formed. They have never wrought any good, and they never will. I think perhaps I am as true a friend of what may be called the interests of labor in this country as those who are loud in their advocacy of this bill. But no class of our fellow-citizens should come with a demand that legislation such as it desires shall be enacted. It makes no difference whether it is from the labor interest of the United States or the money power of the United States, whether it is from the agricultural interests of the country or the manufacturing interests of the country, whether it is from the moral interests of the country or the banking interests of the country, no class of citizens has a right to come boldly saying that they "demand" certain legislation of the Congress of the United States.

If any class of our citizens do come organized to make demands on our Congress, it is the duty of Congress to turn a deaf ear to such demands. The interests of labor, the interests of agriculture, the interests of manufacturing, the interests of currency, the interests of property, require alike the impartial, the patriotic, and the honest attention of Congress. We may well take pattern of the divine law. No word of the divine canon was promulgated for any class of the people of this world or any individuals in this world. Human laws should be like the divine laws. They should apply to all. They should be for the interest and benefit of all. They should be equal and not enacted deliberately, openly, avowedly, in the interest of any class of our fellow-citizens.

I am entirely opposed to these outside commissions, and so when the bill was presented here it seemed to me, as I undertook to say when the bill was about to come up one day, the most remarkable bill in its details and its purposes that has ever been presented to the Congress of the United States. Its details, I think, can not be defended, and its purposes, as I understand them, that an organized body of people in the country come here demanding that this bill shall be passed, can not be defended either.

Mr. President, legislation has been running into strange grooves of late. Every interest in the United States almost is organized for the purpose of promoting or preventing legislation. In these days there is not much of bribery or corruption in the National Legislature. I thank Heaven that the National Congress is comparatively free from any suspicion of corrupt means being used to favor legislation. But the great danger to our legislation, the great danger to the character of our legislation, is that Senators and Members of the House are influenced by the demand of these organizations. The Government clerks are organized to demand legislation of Congress. There are many organizations of them, and that demand we are made to feel. We get it in the resolutions which are passed in their bodies. It comes to us not with a request to consider matters, but with a kind of stand-and-deliver authority. The Senator or the Member of the House of Representatives who will not listen to it and act upon it understands that it means that he is to be opposed at the polls.

I merely speak of this as an illustration. But all over this country every possible interest has become organized. Quick communication by mail and telegraph makes it possible to organize the whole of any particular interest throughout the entire country. Then resolutions are passed, and those resolutions are sent to us, not as requests, not as petitions to Congress, but with the tacit threat behind them that if legislation is not passed for the benefit of such organizations we shall suffer at the polls.

I venture to say that there is not a Senator sitting in his seat to-night who has not been plied with telegrams, either from the railroad companies and their agents to favor what is called the anti-scalping bill, or from the organizations that are opposed to it to defeat it. They do not come requesting our attention to the bill, asking us to consider it, but they come in this way: "Do all you can" either "to urge the passage" or "to defeat the passage of the antiscalping bill."

Mr. President, it is quite time that we called a halt in this sort of legislation. It is quite time that Congress should assert itself and have the courage, the manly courage, notwithstanding what organizations may desire, notwithstanding what particular classes of people may desire, each member for himself to decide what is best for the whole people, all the people. My word for it, Mr. President, when each Senator and each member of the House acts, as he knows he ought to act, upon that principle, and we pass laws for the benefit of all the people and not for the benefit of any particular class of people, all the different classes of this country will find their interests better subserved than they can be in any other way.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I am for this bill. I believe it is a good measure to pass; I am not for it simply because, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says, it is the result of the demand of organized labor; but I am for it because I believe that it may result in great good to the people of the United States.

I observe that the bill provides that this commission, consisting of five members of the House, five members of the Senate, and nine others, who shall fairly represent the industries and employments, to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall do so and so. Whoever may be the parties who are demanding the passage of this bill, if there are any such, when you come to look at the purposes of the bill, it would seem that they are worthy of consideration.

I rose more especially, however, to say that I am not in accord with the honorable Senator from Connecticut on the proposition he reasserts often, that such commissions are of no use to the country. I believe that they are of use to the country. I believe that one of the best things we can do when we come to the business of preparing a tariff bill, which we shall urge in the course of a few weeks, will be, when we get through with the consideration of that bill, to attach to it a provision for a permanent commission on the tariff, whose duty it shall be to consider all the time whatever there may be to consider in the direction of changes of any tariff law that may be passed hereafter. I desire the attention of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. You have it.

Mr. CULLOM. I say I believe the time will have come, when we take up tariff legislation again, that we should provide by some means or other for a tariff commission, who shall report to Congress year by year such amendments as they may deem best after investigation, so that the time may pass by when, upon one party coming into power and another going out, there shall be radical changes in tariff legislation for raising revenue and giving protection to American industry and American labor.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator propose to tie the hands of Congress, so that they would abdicate their functions in legislating?

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all.

Mr. GRAY. Why should not one Congress undo what they think was wrong in the action of a preceding Congress?

Mr. CULLOM. Of course Congress has the power to do that. There is no reason why it should not do it, of course, if the tariff legislation, in the judgment of one Congress, is wrong that was passed by a previous Congress. But it seems to me the Senator from Delaware will agree with me in my proposition. Take the present condition, if you please. A new Administration is coming in. A new tariff law is likely to be passed. I think the country would benefit by the adoption of such a scheme when Congress passes the next tariff bill. If it is to be done very soon, Congress should provide for a commission whose duty it shall be to give their exclusive attention to the examination of the question as to whether the proper duty is laid upon this item, and that, and the other, and report to the succeeding Congress upon the items, suggesting whether there should be any little changes or great ones made by the succeeding Congress.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask my friend a question there?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Is the Senator in favor of having such a commission appointed before the new Congress passes a tariff bill or afterwards?

Mr. CULLOM. I should prefer to have one in existence now, so that it could submit a report at the called session of Congress.

Mr. GRAY. Would the honorable Senator prefer that we should defer all tariff legislation in the next Congress until that commission reported?

Mr. CULLOM. I would not.

Mr. GRAY. Why not?

Mr. CULLOM. Because I think the defects of the existing tariff law are so patent to everyone that they demand immediate attention in order to raise a sufficient amount of revenue and give reasonable protection to American labor and American industry. But when that law is passed, in my judgment, there ought to be a tariff commission at work from that day on until the next session of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Does not that always apply to the idea of a commission appointed by a President who is a great protectionist?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; not necessarily. I want a commission of statisticians, men of business, men who are familiar with the subject, not to pass the law for Congress, but to report the exact facts to Congress, so that Congress shall have the information before it and can act upon little amendments to the tariff law instead of sweeping a tariff law away and bringing in a new bill entirely different and in the opposite direction from the one in force at the time.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator infer that in consequence of the conspicuous success of the Civil Service Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, therefore a tariff commission would be a success?

Mr. CULLOM. So far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned, I do not know whether there is much success attached to it or not. There has been more success attached to the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission. But I do not want to go into a discussion of interstate commerce now, after the Senator was so anxious to have the anti-scalping bill laid aside, so that we could not discuss it to-night.

Mr. ALLEN. In what respect has it been a success?

Mr. CULLOM. I say I am not going to take up that subject, but I am amazed almost that we have been able to go forward in the development of our industries in view of the fact that we are shuttlecocking first to one extreme and then to the other upon the tariff question. What I want is a reasonable tariff law that will give sufficient revenue to the country and upon such lines as will give reasonable protection to American industry and American labor, and then keep it there, as I believe the country is prepared to keep it there, when we can get it in that shape, without reference to what party comes into power. But in order to do it, we want a capable commission that will report to us at every session of Congress the exact facts in reference to the protection that is given every article of industry or commerce where such articles come from foreign countries in competition with American labor and American industry.

Mr. SQUIRE. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Illinois whether, in his judgment, it would not be wise in the consideration of the question of commissions to apply them to the study of great questions of economics, and to have not only the tariff question, but the money question considered by a nonpartisan commission, so that not only the question of revenue to be raised for the support of the Government, but all questions relating to the currency of the country, should be considered by a competent commission and reported upon for the advice of Congress, not necessarily for its control, so as to take this question as far as possible out of the arena of active politics, so as to make these questions those of the real interests of the commercial people and all of the people of this country, without regard to the battledore and shuttlecock style we have been indulging in.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not going to say anything more to-night than to refer to the importance of a tariff commission. As to the financial question, that is another subject entirely.

I believe that this commission will be an important commission, and will do an important work in the interests of the peace and harmony and wealth of the people of the United States, and I hope, as expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], that we shall get a vote upon this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish to occupy but a short time in making a preliminary observation or two concerning this idea of subletting legislation. When I was first up I said enough about the machinery by which our forefathers and the people before them, studying free government, devised to get at this very thing—the will of the people.

It has been suggested that we should not only create a tariff commission and keep it in operation all the while, but that we should have commissions of various kinds engaged in the consideration of various subjects of legislation. Mr. President, this is practically abolishing Congress. We can not delegate the trust that we hold from the people. Lawyers will tell you that——

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator does not understand me as wanting to delegate the authority to pass laws to an outside commission. I only desire to have them to inquire into and report facts to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the important part of the business of legislation is getting a knowledge of the facts to build a law upon.

Mr. CULLOM. But we have not been able to get the facts.

Mr. HAWLEY. But your statute is to be found in your collection of facts, when you have them; then practically you have your law. You find out what is demanded by the circumstances of the case.

It is a very great mistake to let people assume, without correcting them, that we are entirely unfit or so far unfit for the proper performance of our duties that it is better to create a commission to do our thinking for us, and that we should accept the results of their labors.

I dislike another expression I have heard, of getting in touch with things—getting in touch with labor. Who is not in touch with labor?

We are in touch with labor in our houses every day, according to the number of employees we have. We are in touch with labor when we take a cab or a street car; in touch with labor when we talk with laborers in the street. I am in touch with labor when I go to my home, and among the first men I seek there are the mechanics of my town. I am in touch with labor there. I am disgusted when I hear persons talking as if we knew nothing about the people—"the people!" It is a species of demagogism and flattery that is directly seen through, to be sure, by the great mass of the American laboring people themselves.

Who will tell me anything about what labor is? Who can instruct me on that subject? My earliest recollections of boyhood are of living in a log house in the pine woods, and going to a log schoolhouse. I worked upon a farm, and I worked hard. At 13 I was the janitor of a church for a time, and when I went to college I taught my landlady's daughters in the afternoons for two hours to pay my board bills, and in another place the good woman allowed me to saw, split, and carry wood to pay for my board. And when I came out of college I was in debt, but I paid it all off in four years, I am happy to say. I was clerk in a store for a while. I taught school three winters. I turned my hand to any and every thing to earn an honest livelihood, for there was nobody poorer in that neighborhood than we were. I was a barefooted boy, living in the piney woods, and I know the whole gamut of labor. I lived among people who labored. Does anyone tell me that I am not "in touch with labor?"

In these things there is nothing to boast of, nothing to be ashamed of. It is an old story, well known to multitudes of Americans.

Labor is the business of the great majority of the people of the country, and the laborers are the large majority. They can do what they please. They have sent us here when they could have defeated us and sent others if they pleased. They hold the ballot—

> A weapon that comes down as still
> As snowflakes fall upon the sod;
> But executes a freeman's will,
> As lightning does the will of God.

And yet it is said they are not represented. Why, sir, nothing in the world that is just is unrepresented. It may not have a distinct agent appointed and commissioned, but it is represented in the thoughts of all generous people, represented in the burning words of the eloquent orator, represented in sermons and poems, represented everywhere. There was only one class in this country who were in a sense unrepresented, but it is a mistake to think they were entirely so. Then there was labor without a voice; it could not read; it could not print; it had no legal relation between husband and wife, nor between parent and child. That was labor unrepresented, was it? No; for there were thousands of people who for a hundred or two hundred years, doubting the wisdom of that system, printed papers and made speeches, uttered prayers, and systematically year after year formed societies and hired orators to discuss that great wrong, growing stronger and stronger, and finally creating a powerful sentiment, which with many became a profound religious conviction, in behalf of that unrepresented labor. By and by, in God's good time, that system, which seemed to have been bound down with bands of steel on foundations of granite, went skyward in a great explosion of fire and blood. The "nigger" was "represented," sir, for a century before he became free.

I say nothing just can be unrepresented in this world, and I say that every man who is a statesman, every man who is a student, should take note of everything that is said, no matter how foolish it may appear, if it seems to come from honest conviction, and inquire why did that man say so and so, what makes him feel so? He will inquire as to the nihilist, whether there is anything in his situation which is unusual which has bred that sort of feeling; he will study the secret springs of action that move the anarchist and the extreme socialist and whoever makes an outcry against alleged wrong.

We are all inevitably and unavoidably connected with labor. I always wish to hear what the laboring people say; I always read the resolutions and addresses adopted by their conventions, even those which may be thought to be the most wild and visionary, for I know that, in a certain sense, it is the fanatics who make the world go—the people who are in dead earnest, who are supposed to be foolishly earnest, if you choose, about a cause. So it was said of the abolitionists. Brickbats were thrown at my father because he mildly lectured against slavery.

I have always been an honest and sincere friend of sincere labor. But legislators can not deceive the straightforward common sense of the "plain people" by manufactured expressions of sympathy and feeding them with a spoon in matter of politics.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise not to make an argument on behalf of the pending bill, for what is wanted just now is not arguments for it, but votes for it. This bill passed the House of Representatives June 1, 1896. It was a long, elaborate bill, and it met with a great deal of opposition. There have been conferences about it all this winter, and the persons who have taken an interest in it have come to the conclusion that is embodied in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. Within a short time there will be conference reports coming in here, which will take up the time of the Senate, and the persons expecting this bill will be disappointed. I appeal, therefore, in connection with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], for a vote, that we may at least give to these people this humble, modest provision for which they ask.

At first, Mr. President, I thought the provision for the ten Congressmen ought to be stricken out, and that the commission ought to consist only of nine other persons; but upon reflection, as all the persons who desire this legislation, who have a right to ask for it, who have asked for it, and who have united in favor of it, and inasmuch as it is reduced in its expenditures, reduced in its machinery, and is a very humble request, not a demand, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has said, but a very humble request from the people, who think that this commission might do something toward solving the great questions which are pressing down upon the country, I hope, Mr. President, that Senators will refrain from speaking on the subject, and give us a vote. There are Senators enough here on the floor and in the cloakrooms to pass the bill, even if there shall be a call for the yeas and nays. But if you spend much more time in debating it, and Senators ventilate their views on all sorts of subjects under heaven, including tariff commission and the whole subject of the tariff, we shall not get a vote on it, and we shall be justly subjected, as some Senator has said, to the imputation that we have been playing with the people who want this bill.

There is no such thing, Mr. President, as stopping debate in this Senate; I know that very well, but I do hope that the Senators who really are for the bill will sit still and let the Senators who are against it, if there are any, talk against it, and then let us vote upon it.

Mr. GRAY obtained the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon. I had forgotten one or two things I had intended to say.

Mr. GRAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are to be on this proposed commission ten Congressmen with nine outsiders, with a distinct and evident purpose that the Congressmen shall control the commission. I venture to prophesy that that commission will never make a report that will be satisfactory to anybody, and all the fault will be laid upon us, for it will be said, "There were ten Congressmen against nine of us." So before the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] had risen, by a curious coincidence, I had marked out upon the bill precisely the amendment that he is about to move to it when the bill gets into the Senate, a proposition to create a commission to be composed of nine citizens taken from private life. If you are going to have a labor commission, why not do as you did with the tariff commission—select a body of men not in Congress, composed of the brainiest men of these labor organizations, and we shall then learn something from it? We may not be obliged to accept all they say, but we shall learn much; and we shall listen to it with a great deal of respect, for some of these men are very shrewd thinkers. Even among the nihilists and anarchists you easily find intellectual and thoughtful men.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, notwithstanding the monition of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], after having said all he wished to say upon the bill, that no one else had better say anything at all about it, I venture to submit a word or two.

I am opposed to putting this Government in commission. I do not believe that that is in consonance with the genius of our institutions and with the Constitution of the United States in any phase in which we may consider it.

I do not believe, sir, that the great political questions which agitate the people of this country can ever be taken away from them and turned over to a commission of men selected by the President, by Congress, or in any other way, however able or great or scientific or learned such a commission may be. This country did not grow up in that way. This country is governed by public opinion, which sifts itself down through the agitation that the people make until we arrive at a rational and sensible result. We can not get rid of the great question of taxation by putting it into commission. We can not get rid of the great debate as to whether it is right or wrong that a few should be armed with the taxing power of this Government, that would enable them to take from the fruits of labor any portion of its reward which it had earned and put it into the pockets of those who had not earned it. That is a question which will not down, nor will any one of the other great questions that agitate the surface of politics in this country down at the bidding of a commission. We can not get rid of these things. Free government rests on agitation. We will agitate and agitate these great questions until they are settled rightly. The tariff, the currency, individual freedom, and all that belongs to a free man and a free government must be tossed about on the yeasty waves of popular debate and be agitated and agitated, as I said, until a true and honest result is arrived at. Agitation is the life of a free government. If you want the calm of despotism, you must leave the shores of this Republic and seek another clime.

No, sir; I am not in favor of getting this Government into commission yet. I do not believe that we should abdicate the functions with which we have been clothed. I do not believe we should abdicate our judgment or seek advice from the dry nurses whom we create under the name of commission. If we are to benefit the labor of this country—and when I say that and use that phrase, I mean if we are to benefit the country, for the labor of the country is the country—then we must, if we are to make an investigation to inform ourselves as to any proposition that is before us in the nature of legislation, make a specific inquiry in the domain of our legislative powers, and not make this futile endeavor to cover the whole domain of human interests as this amendment does. Listen, sir, to what is to be committed to this commission:

It shall be the duty of this commission to investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor—

Which includes almost every interest that concerns this Republic—

to agriculture, to manufacturing, and to business.

There you have taken in the great circle of human activity, the larger part of which, under our scheme of government, is within the legislative control of the States, and you have left out the only two subjects that are legitimately and properly within the domain of Congressional legislation—the tariff and the currency. You have excluded the very matters about which we have a right to legislate, and you will have told this commission, if you enact the bill into a law, to investigate every other subject under heaven except those that come within the purview of our constitutional legislative power.

If this is to be a mere tub to the whale, a mere sop to Cerberus, I am against it. I believe the labor of this country, so called, which is the country, rests upon a manly, self-reliant intelligence, upon a brave manhood that can be treated as if it were brave and intelligent, and does not need to be drynursed and coddled and befooled by projects such as are often attempted here in the name of labor.

Mr. ALLEN. Protect it?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, protect it; protect the country, protect yourself and your neighbors, and you protect labor. Protect the great interests of this country, but do not try to separate something called labor out of the body of the county, out of the body of the States, out of the body of this great Republic, and set it up or put it down, whichever you please, as if it were a thing apart and not the very life and essence and substance, the flesh, the blood, the bone. Why should we not come here as the representatives of the people, of the labor of the country, of the wealth-producing labor of the country, and legislate in their interest, without treating them as if they were some great, cruel, blood-stained heathen deity that had to be appeased by oblations and by nonsense that is talked in the name of labor? I want to treat it and treat all interests in this country in man fashion, and to treat it as if it deserved respect, as it does, and because I respect it I do not want any such language as this to be thrown to it, and to tell it that that is something we are doing for it when we know we are doing nothing for it.

Let us investigate a specific proposition, if you please. Let us investigate something that is within our legislative power; but what is the use of asking a commission to roam over this country and investigate every question that pertains to immigration, to labor, to agriculture—as if agriculture and labor were not the same—to manufacturing, and to business? Mr. President, these phrases are unmeaning, whether they were intended to be so or not I do not know, and, sir, it is trifling with these great interests, it is trifling with the country, it is trifling with its intelligence, to talk about investigating in this wide domain that covers all human activity and the whole circle of human interests, and ask the commission to advise Congress in what direction they should legislate.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Delaware if he will be kind enough to point out any act of Congress in the last third of a century that was designed to protect the man who works with his hand, the common laborer, as distinguished from other classes of people?

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Nebraska asks me whether I can point out an act of Congress within the last thirty years——

Mr. ALLEN. Within the last third of a century.

Mr. GRAY. Within the last third of a century—that has been enacted for the benefit of common labor as a distinct class. I think that was it. My reply to the honorable Senator from Nebraska would be that every act of Congress—and I do not propose to defend all the acts of Congress by any means—that was conceived in a patriotic intention to advance the general welfare of this country, to redound to its glory and its honor, that increased the protection of individual liberty and placed barriers between those who would prey upon their neighbors and their victims, or which tended to do so, every law that was enacted to ameliorate human conditions and did so, was for the benefit of labor, because it was for the benefit of labor, and labor is the country and the country is labor in that sense, and if it were not then we would be in sad case indeed. The honorable Senator from Nebraska says for the benefit of the common laborer as a distinct class. If I have one aspiration of my heart that I believe to be patriotic, one that I cherish, it is that there shall be no classes in this country.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with the Senator in that respect.

Mr. GRAY. That there shall be neither in our legislation nor in our common walk and conversation any serious allusion that would suggest the idea that there are classes in this country. There are none in that sense. Let us unite here, if you please, to remove from our statute book every law, if any such there be, that tends to promote the existence of classes in this country; and I will stand with the Senator from Nebraska in every effort of that kind, and I trust he will stand with me, and I believe he will. Let us remove from our statute book every vestige of law, if vestige there be, that tends to breed these distinctions, that creates or promotes this injustice between classes of men or between man and man. I will be by his side. I will follow where he dare lead and I will lead where he dare follow in an effort of that kind; and it is because that is my aspiration, it is because I do cherish the fond hope that I may be able in what remains to me of my term of public service to do something to that end, that I am here today and shall remain with some small contentment and with some degree of comfort.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the very generality and vagueness of the language used in the sixth section of the bill which by substitution is now before the Senate ought to condemn it. The Congress of the United States has legislative powers that have been delegated to it by the Constitution, and it has none other. Of course, the Senator from Nebraska agrees with me in that. The great domain of human interest that concerns the relations of man to his neighbor, the domestic relations, the laws of property and all that concern most intimately the happiness and well-being of mankind remain as the great reserved powers of the several States. And yet this commission that is to be instituted covers the whole of that great domain and leaves out of sight, as I have said a while ago, the only two important specific questions with which Congress is exclusively charged by the Constitution of the United States, to wit, the tariff and the currency.

If there were a commission to consider the whole question of the currency, while I would not hope for any beneficial results from it, and while it comes within the reason of my opposition to all commissions, yet there would be a tangible result to be reached. And so about the tariff. That is within the exclusive domain of Congress, and though I would be opposed, as I said, to a commission, and believe that it would come within the objections I have already made to commissions, there would be a definite and tangible result.

Mr. ALLEN. The commission is to be only advisory, I understand.

Mr. GRAY. Of course it is only advisory. I do not suppose the drafters of this amendment were ever so fond and foolish as to suppose that they could delegate legislative power to them, in a measure delegate their judgment. They will have the advice of a commission of men who presumably are no better able to form an opinion and have no better facilities for forming an opinion than the delegates of the people of the United States assembled here in the two Halls of Congress.

When a specific measure comes up to which the Congress of the United States has a legitimate relation for the benefit of the condition of the people of this country, if it can be helped by legislation, I am for it, and will labor for it, and in my humble way I will contribute to the success of that measure. But, Mr. President, I can not refrain from pointing out the illusory character of this whole proposition, that whether it is so intended it does not and can not hold out any rational hope anywhere to the persons who have asked, if so be they have asked, for legislation of this character.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, when this proposition was first submitted to me it did not strike me favorably. I was fearful that the commission would be ineffective, and I thought Congress ought to deal with this matter. But on reflection I came to the conclusion that Congress had not been entirely successful in maintaining the prosperity of the country. When that was suggested to me also by men who importuned me to advocate the bill, I told them that I would like to know of some way of producing prosperity; that I never had found, in all my reading, prosperity without money; that if all people had money they would be able to get along pretty well, but there was not money enough evidently to go around, and they could not all have some; that if there was any way of working out prosperity without money I should like to have them invent some plan. Congress having been entirely unsuccessful in its efforts to make the people comfortable, I felt as if I were willing that the laboring men or anybody else should try their hand and see, and if they could make a suggestion that would have any influence in bringing about good times I would let them make it.

I felt something like Mr. Lincoln did after he and Mr. Stanton had managed the war here for several years. They brought General Grant to Washington to take charge of the Army of the Potomac. He went to the Secretary of War, had some conversation with him, and proposed to take all the troops away and make a campaign against Lee's army. Stanton objected. He said Washington would be captured, and he was very much excited. Finally General Grant suggested to him that they had better go and see Mr. Lincoln about it and learn what he had to say, as they could not agree. So they went over to the White House and laid the case before Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Lincoln thought about it a moment, when he turned to the Secretary of War and said, "Mr. Stanton, you and I have been managing this matter about Washington for a long time. I know we have not satisfied the country that we were doing everything that ought to be done. And do you think we have satisfied ourselves?" Then Mr. Lincoln said, "I do not feel satisfied with the way we have been doing things, and I propose to let Mr. Grant have the Army and do as he pleases with it; and if Washington is taken we will take the consequences." Inasmuch as Congress has been trying to do something in this direction for a good many years and has not made any progress, I thought perhaps we might let the laboring men take hold of it and see if they could do anything with the question.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether in his judgment, if we had the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1, it would be necessary to have any commission of this kind appointed?

Mr. STEWART. I think we could get along something better if we had more money. I think as long as the volume of money is shrinking the people will be miserable. That is my idea.

Mr. GRAY. Commission or no commission?

Mr. STEWART. Commission or no commission. But these men think they can invent a plan to accomplish something that never has been accomplished under the sun; that they can fill a man's pocket without having any money in it. If they can make any suggestions of that kind, let them make them, and we will listen to them. I have no hope of producing prosperity while the money of the civilized world is confined to the commodity gold and a few men have that commodity. As long as they have that commodity cornered, I do not believe anything will produce prosperity. It is true my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] thinks it might be possible to apply to those who have it coined and get them to divide with us in some way. We can not do it in this country, but it is thought if we go to Europe we might get them to give up the advantages they possess in having the money of the world cornered. I do not believe that they will break the corner of money. I think if it is broken at all, it will have to be done by the people of the United States. I believe it has got to be done in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. I do not believe that we will ever have our own Government until we exercise those functions. As long as we fly to Europe for legislation, I do not believe that they will legislate for us; I think they will legislate for themselves. We used to do it ourselves; but somehow we are now told that we are helpless and can not legislate for ourselves; that we must apply to Europe; and we pass a bill to go to Europe. After the manner they used to do in old colonial times, we send to the mother country for relief. The evils we endure are intolerable.

That is the wisdom of Congress. I appeal from that wisdom to the wisdom of the laboring men. It may be that they can do something. I am willing to appeal to anybody. I would rather appeal to the laboring men of this country than to the crowned heads of Europe for relief. They have not got the gold of the world cornered. They have no interest in making money scarce. On the contrary, millions of them are out of employment. Prices are growing lower and lower. I have a list in my pocket of the national banks that have failed since October last. It is a formidable list, made out by the Comptroller of the Currency, and it shows that things are shrinking up here. See the list. [Exhibiting.]

Mr. SMITH. Is the sum total stated?

Mr. STEWART. No, it is just a list.

Mr. ALLEN. Will my honorable friend permit me to suggest that to-morrow the "advance agent of prosperity" will be here to take charge of the Government, and probably there will be a change for the better without any more money?

Mr. STEWART. It was said in the campaign that prosperity was on its way and that it would be here on the 3d of November, but it did not get here.

Mr. GALLINGER. No one said that.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes; it was said everywhere that just as soon as it was assured that Mr. McKinley would be elected, confidence, which would bring prosperity, would come at once. The manufacturers throughout the country posted notices in their shops that if Bryan was elected business would close down, but if McKinley was elected the shops would be opened and the mills would be opened, and all would have employment. We were promised prosperity on the very day McKinley should be elected. We waited. We were all looking out for it, watching for its coming. But it has deceived us. It has gone back. Perhaps it is going back to get a new start. You know sometimes a thing gets a momentum by drawing back, and when it comes it is going to come with redoubled force. But it is certainly receding. Perhaps it is acting on this principle, backing up so as to get a good start to run and jump. That is the way the promised prosperity is operating now. It is said that it is coming; and after the election they fixed on the inauguration as the period. It may be that they will now fix on some other date. Any date will do, if only it comes at all. We do not want it to keep out of sight permanently.

But it is a mockery to talk about prosperity coming with a shrinking volume of money. There is not an instance recorded in history where there was prosperity unless there was an increasing volume of money to correspond with population and business. It has not occurred once in all the history of this world, and I defy any man to find an instance. Perhaps by this commission we can find it. I am willing to try the commission; I am willing to try anything that anyone wants to try. I was even willing to try the experiment of my friend from New Hampshire. I had a good deal less confidence in that scheme than I have in the proposed commission. Still I said, "Go on and try it," and I voted for it. This is certainly a case where we are applying to our own people for advice and information. It is not humiliating at all. But when we go across the water and ask the aristocrats of Europe to have mercy on us, it is a different kind of a prayer from what this country has been accustomed to. We had quit that kind of a prayer more than one hundred years ago, and we did not commence to bow the knee to Europe until within the last fifteen or twenty years. Now our people go to Europe and spend a hundred million a year to enjoy the smiles of aristocracy, to be presented at courts, to learn the beauties of monarchies and to learn to despise the rabble. We heard this in the campaign. Every man who was of the people was called an anarchist. The discussion of economic questions was called anarchy. The great mass of the American people were called anarchists.

It has become very popular to say that all we want is a stronger government.

Why do you want a stronger government? To keep the rabble in order? They learn that vocabulary on the other side of the Atlantic. That is monarchic. Do you not suppose that the sneers at the masses of the people, and the calling of them anarchists, and the demand for more power to put them down and keep them in order, originated in Europe? There was where the inspiration was received, by travel in Europe; it came from Europe; it is the language of aristocracy; it is the language of monarchy. The leading papers in the campaign breathed the same spirit and used the same phrases that are used in monarchical countries.

People were called anarchists for what? For peaceably discussing political questions. We hear the governor of Illinois, Mr. Altgeld, alluded to now as an anarchist, alluded to in that way by men who, if they had his capacity, his patriotism, his earnestness and zeal for the cause of humanity, would be elevated away above any place they can occupy by being temporarily in high office. I, amongst others, from what I saw in the papers, was prejudiced against him before I knew him, but when I saw him and heard him talk and read his speeches, I came to a very different conclusion. He and all the balance of those men are called anarchists. I speak of him because he is most frequently alluded to. Everybody who discusses political questions in antagonism to European ideas, in antagonism to aristocracy in this country, is called an anarchist. I do not believe that we shall receive any harm from allowing these laboring men to have a commission to collect information.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Nevada pardon me a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to take issue with the Senator from Nevada on this question of anarchy. I am opposed to anarchy, and that is one of my reasons for not being pleased at the new Secretary of the Treasury who is to be proposed to us. As I understand it, he is the man who deluded and led off Mr. Altgeld; he is the man who is suspected of having advised Mr. Altgeld to take the fatal step, and he was made the scapegoat—of pardoning the anarchists. I understand that this man, who is a business man, a man standing high among the respectable people of Chicago, advised Governor Altgeld—this honest, simple-minded governor—that he ought to pardon those anarchists, and the governor had no more sense than to follow his advice. Is that correct?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know about that.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that is so; and if that is so, and we are about to have an anarchist here for Secretary of the Treasury, it is a matter which ought to be investigated.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know anything about that. I do not know what advice he gave to the governor of Illinois; but I know that the newspapers have represented that he undoubtedly really and honestly thinks—and I shall not question his honesty of purpose—that the greenbacks ought to be retired, that the Treasury notes ought to be retired, that the silver certificates ought to be retired, that the silver in the Treasury ought to be sold, and that the Government ought to get down to the real gold basis, with the exception of such money as the national banks might issue. If he really believes that, I do not think he can be called an anarchist in the acceptation of the term as it was used in the last election, because he must believe in very sound money, so sound that nobody in this country will be able to get any of it. The gold being pooled on the other side of the Atlantic, if he accomplishes his purpose, he will make money so sound that nobody will get it. He will accomplish one purpose. The people of the United States will be in poverty, and there will be no chance of extravagance. Perhaps his idea is to introduce economy. I have thought that our President was trying to reform the world in that way, by teaching them economy, by taking all their money from them, throwing them out of employment, and making them starve. Perhaps that is what he has been trying to do in order to guard against extravagance on their part and prevent them from indulging in luxuries.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. STEWART. Wait till I get through this sentence.

It is said by some, however, that he does not practice what he preaches, but lives better than he advises others to live. That may not be so, but I have heard it.

Mr. HILL. I want to make a suggestion.

Mr. STEWART. Just one word.

Mr. HILL. I am friendly to the bill and the Senator from Nevada is friendly to the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I am friendly to the bill.

Mr. HILL. If we are going to adjourn at 12 o'clock to-day, and if it is important that this bill should pass, it is important that something should be done, and done promptly. I ask whether we can not come to a vote now? We can pass the bill if its friends will give us an opportunity.

Mr. STEWART. I have sat here for several hours, and I found the friends of the bill talking a little too much, and so I thought it would not do any harm to make a few suggestions.

Mr. HILL. And very excellent suggestions.

Mr. STEWART. I was not saying anything against the Senator from New York, because he recognizes what is right.

I know it is difficult to practice exactly what we preach, and I find that one of the difficulties of the gold men is that, while they preach economy to others, they do not themselves appear to be suffering very much from the want of the necessaries of life. They say, "All we want is economy; we must bring wages down; we must get down to bed rock; we want more economy in public expenditures; it will not do for the masses of the people to be extravagant; and if they do not have any money, they will not spend any money; they will not go to conventions and be making trouble." Is there any danger of the common people having Bradley-Martin balls? They will be prevented from committing the sin of extravagance.

Mr. HILL. Economy of time is what we want now.

Mr. STEWART. That is true, but I do not occupy much time, and I think I might offer a few reflections, and I hope they are agreeable to my friend from New York.

Mr. HILL. Particularly so.

Mr. STEWART. I hope I am not annoying him, because I have not included him in the characters I have been describing, and I hope he does not take any of my remarks as personal. I am simply referring to the class such as those who live on Fifth avenue and those who do business in Wall street. They are the fellows who tell us that we should be economical, that we should not spend too much money, that what ought to be done is to lower wages, and they do not believe the common people have any right to advise us.

We are told that if this commission is formed it will be composed of anarchists. Of course the ordinary American citizens, according to these people, are all anarchists. If so, I am willing to let the anarchists have their way a little while. I do not know but that I am classed with them, and may have a fellow-feeling for them. I rather think I am classed with them, because I am not one of the other class, and I must be classed somewhere.

I hope, Mr. President, that this bill will pass and that we shall see what the laboring people can do. They certainly can not make matters any worse than they are and have been, and I am willing they shall try it.

Mr. THURSTON and Mr. CHILTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] is recognized.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I would gladly yield the right of further discussion if a vote could be taken upon this bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I think it can be taken. I for one have no disposition to delay the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator form Nebraska yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THURSTON. I will only yield, if by unanimous consent, a vote can be taken. Otherwise, I feel in duty bound to make a few remarks.

Mr. HILL. We have got to vote, I suggest to the Senator, in order to pass this bill, and if its friends will keep quiet we can come to a vote, and vote the other side down. A Senator who is now an opponent of the bill wants to perfect it somewhat. Why not permit that to be done? And then I think we shall be able to get a vote on the bill, and that is what the laboring men want. They do not want talk; they want this bill. Time is precious to-night.

Mr. THURSTON. I will yield informally to the Senator from Texas if he desires to make a motion.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to state for one that I have every sympathy with the objects named in this bill, but I believe those who expect beneficial results from the project will be disappointed. Nevertheless, it is the evident sense of the majority of the Senate that the experiment shall be tried.

I have drafted an amendment, which I have submitted to the Senator in charge of the bill. It meets his approbation. It should come in at the end of line 18, section 4. The language of the section as it stands is:

SEC. 4. That it may report from time to time to the Congress of the United States, and shall at the conclusion of its labors submit a final report.

I propose to add this proviso:

Provided, That said final report shall be made within two years from the date of the appointment of said commission.

The Senator from California accepts that amendment. This is all I have to say.

Mr. HILL. That amendment can be offered after the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. Very well. I have no objection to withholding the amendment until that time.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed without further debate to vote upon the amendments and then upon the bill, and if we can have that unanimous consent, I do not desire to discuss the matter further. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to vote. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I dislike to take up the time of the Senate at this hour, but——

Mr. THURSTON. I have asked unanimous consent for a vote, and I think I have the floor. I simply ask if we can have unanimous consent for a vote; if not, I will address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BROWN. I do not know why we should all be cut off fmro debate because the Senator wants a vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. We are not complaining of the Senator. We only want to find out whether there is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate now proceed to a vote? The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHILTON. I now offer the amendment which I suggested, to come in after the word "report," in line 18 of section 4.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 18, on page 2 of the amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That said final report shall be made within two years from the date of the appointment of said commission.

Mr. HILL. Accept that.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3538) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 2663) to amend the laws relating to navigation; and

A bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

CONTINUATION OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. However, I will withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing and select committees of the Senate as now constituted be, and they are hereby, continued until the first Monday of December, 1897, or until their successors are elected.

Mr. DUBOIS. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SHOUP. Will the Senator yield to me to make a report?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; I will not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Chandler,	Gray,	Roach,
Allen,	Chilton,	Hawley,	Sewell,
Allison,	Clark,	Hill,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Berry,	Cullom,	McBride,	Squire,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Brice,	Dubois,	Mantle,	Teller,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Thurston,
Butler,	Frye,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Call,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Gibson,	Perkins,	White.
Carter,	Gordon,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ALLISON. At the suggestion of the Senators about me, I modify the resolution, or offer a new resolution, which I ask to have considered at this time.

The resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing and select committees of the Senate as now constituted be, and they are hereby, continued until their successors are elected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CANNON. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BROWN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). On this subject I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and will therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. CALL). Vote anyhow.
Mr. CALL. I will allow my vote to stand.
Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the result may be announced.
Mr. HOAR. Let us wait until we get a quorum.
Mr. ALDRICH. I prefer that it should be announced.
Mr. HOAR. I prefer that it should not be.
Mr. ALDRICH. It is the duty of the Presiding Officer to announce the result.
Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is his duty.
Mr. HOAR. I think the Presiding Officer has the right to a reasonable time.
Mr. FAULKNER. The names have not been recapitulated.
Mr. GORDON. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], in order to make a quorum, that we let our pairs stand paired, and he and I can vote.
Mr. NELSON. I prefer to let it stand as it is.
Mr. WHITE. I suppose the statement of the Senator from Minnesota that he does not wish to vote demonstrates his absence.
Mr. GORDON. In order to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "yea."
The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 12; as follows.

YEAS—33.

Mr. CANNON. Did the Chair announce the result of the call of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that the roll call did not disclose a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the Secretary call the roll of absentees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BROWN responded to his name.

At 2 o'clock and 57 minutes a. m., Mr. NELSON, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. MCBRIDE entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] to yield to me that I may present a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CANNON. I very cheerfully yield. I have no desire to obstruct the conduct of the public business here, and I shall answer to my name when the roll is called and vote on every question which may be presented until the business of the Senate is finished.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 12, 49, 50, 62, 63, 73, 74, 104, 117, 134, 140, 144, 148, and 168.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 24, 48, 58, 89, 91, 99, 131, 132, 133, 135, 141, 180, and 190, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment insert the following:

"The President is hereby authorized at any time to modify any Executive order that has been or may hereafter be made establishing any forest reserve, and by such modification may reduce the area or change the boundary lines of such reserve, or may vacate altogether any order creating such reserve."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$489,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "nor to prevent the United States Electric Lighting Company from extending conduits into Columbia Heights, Washington Heights, and Mount Pleasant within the fire limits, as specifically provided in the act of June 11, 1896, making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia; and the existing overhead wires of the Potomac Electric Power Company west of Rock Creek and outside the fire limits are hereby authorized to be maintained for a period of one year from the passage of this act and no longer;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$18,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$437,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$481,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$394,334;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$437,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$875,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the word "purpose" and insert in lieu thereof the word "purchase;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 169, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,503,646;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 170, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "All supplies for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be purchased, shipped, and distributed as may be directed by the Board of Managers;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
WM. A. STONE,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad if the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would explain seriatim these items. I should be glad to vote intelligently upon them, and, in order to vote intelligently, I should like to know what has been done by the committee of conference. It may or may not be that I may desire to address the Senate at some length upon the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. As this is the final report on this bill, I will explain as briefly as I can, because time is important, the conclusion of the conferees.

Amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 10, and 12 all relate to public buildings—the public buildings at Bridgeport, Conn., Charleston, S. C., Norfolk, Va., and so forth.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Are those new buildings?

Mr. ALLISON. None of them. They were agreed to by the House conferees. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the House amendment for a public building at Topeka, Kans. The report strikes out the appropriation for the purchase of the Corcoran Art Gallery building, and also the appropriation for a public building at Butte, Mont. It strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate appointing a committee to examine sites, etc., for the memorial building of the National Society of the Daughters of the Revolution. As to amendment numbered 24, for a revenue cutter on the Atlantic Coast, the House recedes from its disagreement.

The Senate recedes from its amendments relating to the Omaha Exposition. The House agrees to the provision relating to the collection district in Vermont. Amendments 62 and 63 strike out the appropriations proposed by the Senate for two private claims, or what are in the nature of claims. Amendment numbered 72 inserts the latter clause of the provision proposed by the House relating to the forest reservations, which has been read at the Clerk's desk. The Senate recedes from the appropriation relating to the gold and silver inquiry, the amendment of the Senate relating to mineral resources. Amendments numbered 89, 90, and 91 were disposed of by including in this bill the provisions agreed to in the bill appropriating money for the District of Columbia relating to electric lighting.

Mr. HILL. Just the same; in full and in the same language?

Mr. ALLISON. In full and in the same language.

On the amendments of the Senate relating to rivers and harbors there was a compromise by reducing the House appropriations 12½ per cent instead of 25 per cent, as proposed by the Senate, upon certain river and harbor improvements.

In respect to amendment 144, the committee strikes out the appropriation for Garfield Hospital; as to amendment 148, it strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate for Pearl Harbor; as to amendment numbered 168, it strikes out the appropriation of $100,000 for a soldiers' home in South Dakota.

Amendment numbered 180, appropriating $150,000 for the Nicaragua Canal survey, is retained, and on amendment numbered 190 we retain the provisions proposed by the Senate concerning the joint committee on printing.

Mr. QUAY. Did I understand the Senator to say the appropriation for Pearl Harbor, in the Sandwich Islands, is stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Nicaragua Canal survey provision remains in the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the Nicaragua Canal amendment is retained?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; it is retained.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator spoke about the river and harbor items. Will he tell the Senate what disposition was made of the proposition for the improvement above Cairo, which was amended by the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senate amendment respecting the Cache River is retained in the bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the chairman please repeat his statement in regard to the Nicaragua Canal?

Mr. ALLISON. The proposition for the Nicaragua Canal survey is retained. I think I have named all the material amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

COST AND PRICE OF ARMOR.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, early in the evening I intended, on the presentation of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, to address the Senate at some length, but proceedings, if not extraordinary, at least unexpected, on the part of a coordinate branch of this Government, the name of which, under our rules, is too sacred, like that of Osiris in old Herodotus, to be mentioned in this profane assembly, have placed the object I intended to effect by mentioning my sentiments and views to the Senate entirely beyond my control. I think that what has transpired here—and I speak seriously—is calculated to create a great misapprehension in this country of the absolute truth of existing conditions in regard to our Navy and the armor-plate contracts.

I had intended to read to the Senate to-night, had it been possible to accomplish anything by so doing, the report of the Secretary of the Navy to the two Houses of Congress under the resolution of the last session of the present Congress; second, the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, forwarding a supplementary report in the matter of the cost and price of armor, transmitting certain letters to the Senate, dated January 25, 1897, which are somewhat important; and third, the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs on the price of armor for vessels of the Navy, and the testimony attached. The hour is very late, and the effect of adopting that method of placing this information before the people of the United States in the RECORD can be reached by printing it all in the RECORD without reading. If it is the wish of the Senate that I shall not proceed to read it, and if the Senate will agree that it shall go into the RECORD without being read——

Mr. CULLOM. Would it not be better to print it all as a document?

Mr. QUAY. No; let it go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the matter designated by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

Mr. QUAY. Then I will proceed to read the documents. First——

Mr. MANTLE. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment, while I make a few remarks, I want to help take up time, and it will probably save the Senator from Pennsylvania some effort. Besides, my remarks will be directly in point to something that is transpiring.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to move that the Senator from Pennsylvania have leave to print the document he speaks of in the RECORD?

Mr. STEWART and others. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOAR. I make that motion.

Mr. QUAY. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, whose good opinion I respect, that my desire is that these facts shall go before the people of the country. They will see it in the RECORD, as the Senator knows, and they will not see it in the shape of a document.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the question be put on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DANIEL. May I make an inquiry? Would the document be printed in the RECORD to-morrow?

Mr. HOAR. In a day or two.

Mr. QUAY. The RECORD containing it would be published in a few days, and every recipient of the RECORD would receive this information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator from Pennsylvania be permitted to have printed the document indicated as a supplement to the RECORD.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania ought to present these matters to the Senate. They are of great importance, and should be condensed into a statement of results reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

The matter referred to is as follows:

54TH CONGRESS, 2d Session. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. DOCUMENT No. 151.

COST AND PRICE OF ARMOR.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS ON THE ACTUAL COST OF ARMOR PLATE AND THE PRICE FOR THE SAME WHICH SHOULD BE EQUITABLY PAID AS DIRECTED BY THE ACT OF JUNE 10, 1896, MAKING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVAL SERVICE.

COST OF ARMOR PLATE.—LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, COMPLYING WITH THE PROVISION OF THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL APPROVED JUNE 10, 1896, REGARDING THE COST AND PRICES OF ARMOR PLATE.

JANUARY 5, 1897.—Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 31, 1896.

SIR: In the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1897, approved June 10, 1896, it was enacted that—

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to examine into the actual cost of armor plate and the price for the same which should be equitably paid and shall report the result of his investigation to Congress at its next session, at a date not later than January 1, 1897, and no contract for armor plate for the vessels authorized by this act shall be made till after such report is made to Congress for its action.

In compliance with this provision of the act I have the honor to transmit herewith my report.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

COST AND PRICE OF ARMOR.

The Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, approved June 10, 1896, provided:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to examine into the actual cost of armor plate and the price for the same which should be equitably paid, and shall report the result of his investigation to Congress at its next session, at a date not later than January 1, 1897, and no contract for armor plate for the vessels authorized by this act shall be made until after such report is made to Congress for its action.

This provision of law was construed as imposing a duty which was to be performed by me individually. I, however, associated with myself as advisers Capt. W. T. Sampson, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, and Chief Constructor Philip Hichborn, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, who have throughout this investigation rendered me much useful assistance.

The law vests in me no power to administer oaths or to summon before me witnesses.

The following sources of information appeared open:

1. The contractors for armor. They, of course, could, if so disposed, give full and accurate information as to the cost of their plants and of the manufacture of armor.

2. The naval officers who had been stationed at the works of the armor manufacturers as inspectors. These officers did not have access to the books of the contractors, and could not be expected to give very accurate information as to the cost of plant, but they had opportunities to know about the cost of material, and the character and amount of labor employed, and they had been, such of them as were on duty at the works when the Senate committee began its investigations into the price of armor last winter, especially charged by the Department with the duty of observing and ascertaining, as far as practicable, the prices of labor, cost of material, etc. They had collected much valuable information on all these points. Indeed, they were familiar with the processes of manufacture in every stage, and there were, it is believed, no secrets connected with the manufacture of armor with which they were not acquainted.

3. The prices of armor abroad, though already known in great part, could be more thoroughly inquired into and compared with the prices being paid by the Government.

4. The cost of erecting the armor plants, which was a material portion of the inquiry, could not be ascertained with absolute accuracy without an inspection of the books of the contractors. If they should fail to furnish the proper information, an inquiry into the price at which similar plants could at present be erected would throw light upon the subject. This inquiry into the present cost of erecting armor plants seemed to be all the more material because the Committee on Naval Affairs of the United States Senate, when it began the investigation which resulted in the enactment of the law calling for this report, had before it the proposition that the Government itself should erect a plant for the purpose of manufacturing its own armor.

5. Search could be instituted for any reports made to State authorities by the two contracting companies under the laws of their State.

All these sources of information have been applied to, and the inquiries which were set on foot immediately after the enactment of the law have been prosecuted diligently.

Immediately after the passage of the law, letters were written to Lieut. Commander W. S. Cowles, naval attaché to the United States embassy at London, and Lieut. Commander R. P. Rodgers, naval attaché to the United States embassy at Paris, instructing them to secure further and additional information as to the prices paid for armor to European manufacturers, and as to the cost of establishing armor plants like those of the two American companies, and with the view of aiding in these inquiries, and also of ascertaining, if possible, whether it was true, as had been charged in the Senate debate last spring, that there was an agreement or understanding existing between the manufacturers of armor in this country and in Europe, the purpose of which was to keep up the prices of armor, I made a personal visit during the past summer to France and England. Armor plants and machine shops were visited, and inquiries were set on foot while I was there, which resulted in the obtaining of two estimates of the cost of establishing armor plants, one of which was made in England and the other in France, which are hereto attached, marked Exhibits No. 1 and No. 2, respectively.

At the outset of this investigation, and in order to enable me to more readily understand the testimony which it would be necessary to take in this matter, I visited the Carnegie armor plant in July, 1896. The officials of the company courteously showed me over the works and explained the methods of manufacturing. I had some years before visited the Bethlehem works. One who witnesses the methods employed in the manufacture of armor at these plants is much impressed with the fact that relatively very little manual labor is required in the processes adopted. Very few employees are needed to put in motion the immense machines which handle the material and do the work. From this it follows that by far the most important single feature in this investigation is the cost of this machinery.

On the 13th day of June, 1896, the following letter was written to the president of the Bethlehem Company and also one of like tenor to the Carnegie Company:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 13, 1896.

SIR: In the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, approved June 10, 1896, it is provided "that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to examine into the actual cost of armor plate and the price for the same which should be equitably paid, and shall report the result of his investigation to Congress at its next session at a date not later than January 1, 1897; and no contract for armor plate for the vessels authorized by this act shall be made until after such report is made to Congress for its action."

In discharging the duty thus imposed upon me by Congress I shall be glad to have such assistance as you may be able to render me. If it be convenient for you to attend at this time, I will be pleased to have you come to my office in the Navy Department on Saturday, the 20th instant, with such of the officers and employees of your company as may be able to aid you in this matter, and prepared to furnish me with such facts and figures relating to the subject-matter of the inquiry to be pursued as will tend to aid me in arriving at a conclusion which shall be just and fair to the company you represent and to the Government.

In conclusion permit me to express the hope that I shall have your hearty cooperation in the discharge of the delicate duties imposed upon me by this act of Congress.

I have written to Mr. Leishman, of the Carnegie Company, a letter similar to this, requesting his appearance on Wednesday, the 17th instant.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary.

ROBERT P. LINDERMAN,
President Bethlehem Iron Company, South Bethlehem, Pa.

The Carnegie Company replied entirely by correspondence. Mr. Linderman, president of the Bethlehem Company, eventually came to the Department for a conference, all of which was taken down stenographically and is also appended as Exhibit No. 3. The result in both cases was a failure at that time to get any of the information desired, both companies contending that the Government had no right to inquire into their private concerns, or to ask them to exhibit to the public the secrets of their business, which they maintained were their own.

In my opinion, this position of the contractors was not well taken. I stated to Mr. Linderman that the Government had bound itself not to go abroad for armor; that this meant that it was to buy from the two American companies which make it; that the Government, therefore, as one party to these contracts, had a right to know whether the prices charged by the other party were reasonable, etc.

In reply to a question, I said to him that while the information upon which conclusions might be reached could not be withheld from Congress, that any manufacturing secrets that might be disclosed would not be revealed. In point of fact, however, it is not believed that there are any secrets connected with the manufacture of armor, as such, that are not now known to the Department through its ordnance officers, and it is to be especially noted that secrets, if any there are appertaining to the business of manufacturing either steel or armor, would not be apparent upon the books of account, and it was these to which access was desirable to enable me to reach correct conclusions.

Finding that no information was likely to be furnished by the contractors, I called before me Lieutenants Rohrer, Niles, and Ackerman, who had all been at the works of the Bethlehem Company as inspectors, and orally instructed them to make me a written report, giving their estimates separately or together as they might conclude, of the cost of manufacturing armor; and they made two reports. The first report is hereto attached, marked Exhibit No. 4. The second is not attached, because it was an attempt to state an account with the Bethlehem Company, and was not used by me for the reason that in my opinion it was not based upon proper methods, and also because the figures subsequently obtained at Harrisburg rendered such an account unnecessary. This statement is, however, on hand, if desired.

Lieutenant-Commander Rodgers, who had been an inspector at the Bethlehem Iron Works from March 1, 1895, to December 23, 1896, was also called upon to make separately his estimate of the cost of manufacturing armor, and his report is hereto appended, marked Exhibit No. 5.

Ensign McVay, at present stationed at the Carnegie works, was also instructed to observe, inquire, and report his estimate as to the cost of manufacturing armor at the works of that company, which is hereto appended, marked Exhibit No. 6.

It should be observed that the Bethlehem Company was the first to contract with the Government for armor. This company made a contract with the United States Government for a quantity of armor and gun steel on the 1st day of June, 1887, and with the plants erected under these contracts it has manufactured armor for this Government and for Russia, and gun steel for the United States Navy and the United States Army. The Carnegie Company erected its plant under a contract made with Secretary Tracy on the 20th day of November, 1890, and with this plant it has made armor for this Government and some also for the Russian Government. The Bethlehem Company, being the first to establish an armor plant in this country, naturally made some costly experiments, and its plant was therefore more expensive than that of the Carnegie Company. Leaving out of consideration the cost of plant, it is believed that the cost of manufacturing armor at the two establishments is about the same, minus a small difference in favor of the Carnegie Company, noted in some reports, resulting from cheaper coal.

RULES IN ACCORDANCE WITH WHICH CONCLUSIONS HAVE BEEN REACHED

In considering this matter, I have been guided by the following considerations:

1. A Government contractor should be liberally treated. He does not stand on an equal footing with the other party. To illustrate: Contracts for such material as armor always contain provisions authorizing the Government to modify its specifications, and in such cases to appoint a board of its own officers to decide questions of increase or decrease of cost. Government inspection is usually much more rigid than is required in ordinary commercial transactions. Such considerations as these, no doubt, often deter those who are already doing a profitable business from taking Government contracts. The Government, therefore, as an inducement, should pay liberal prices, so as to entitle itself to the best services.

2. If contractors who have invested large amounts of money on the faith of Government contracts shall be unfairly treated and ruined by the exercise of the sovereign power of the Government, the natural result will be that only the hope of the most extravagant profits will tempt manufacturers to make Government contracts. On the other hand, liberal treatment of contractors by the Government, coupled with a prompt payment for work, ought always to enable it to procure the best articles at fair prices.

3. The two armor contractors, the Bethlehem Iron Company and the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, each invested a large amount of money in the plant necessary to manufacture armor. Only governments require armor plates, and there was at the date when these two companies undertook to erect their plants but little prospect that either of them would ever make armor for foreign governments. It is also to be remembered that they both entered upon the business at the request of the Navy Department. Neither of them had any expectation that its first contract would insure full payment for its plant. They both, therefore, when embarking upon this manufacture, encountered the risk of a failure of the Government to authorize and build other armored vessels. If the Congress had failed, after the making of the original contracts with these parties, to authorize other armored vessels, the loss to each of these contractors would probably have been considerable. It was natural, therefore, that profits under the first contracts should be large. The risk involved was an element to be taken into consideration in fixing prices.

4. On the other hand, when these transactions are looked at from the present standpoint, it appears that not only have the original contracts made by both these companies been practically completed and the moneys paid thereon, but that each of them has been given other armor, the manufacture of which will fairly occupy it until June 1, 1897, although they are allowed by their contracts until January 1, 1898. There is, therefore, from the present standpoint, no uncertainty whatever about the volume of the Government business these two companies will have had from the dates when they began up to January 1, 1898.

In examining from the present standpoint the mutual relations between the Government and these contractors, as they are now and as they will be at the time of the fulfillment of existing contracts, there is no element whatever of uncertainty to be taken into consideration. If it shall appear that the profits already received or hereafter to be received from past and existing contracts, considered together, are or will be sufficient to pay these companies a fair percentage upon their investments and to pay for their plants in whole or in part, then the fact that the plants have been or will have been so paid for, either in whole or in part, must be taken into consideration in fixing the rates that should be allowed for armor in future contracts.

It may be that the conclusion attained from a full consideration of past and present relations between these parties and the Government is to be that future prices for armor should be much lower than those now being received, yet it will not at all follow from this that prices have, up to this moment, been higher than they should have been. When a manufacturer is about to enter upon a contract with the Government to erect a special plant for the manufacture of an article needed only by the Government, and for which no other government would probably become a customer, the amount of the demand for the article being uncertain and contingent upon the action of Congress, it can not be held unreasonable that he should expect his profits to pay him within a reasonably short period of time for a plant which would be useless in case the Government's demand upon it should cease. When, however, the time comes that the investment by such contractor in a special plant has been paid for by profits, either in whole or in large part, the time has arrived for a readjustment of prices. Thereafter rates are to be computed upon a totally different basis, and when the contract relations between him and the Government are being reviewed for the purpose of reaching a basis for future prices, a contractor can not complain if the very large profits he bargained for when the future of his venture was uncertain are not allowed him in such calculation. Such present review of past transactions can furnish no reason for taking away profits already realized, but it may very properly be looked at when determining the rate of profit in future contracts. To put it in another form, a contractor might very well refuse to embark upon an enterprise the future of which was clouded with many doubts, even upon a fair prospect of say 25 or 30 per cent profit, and yet be entirely satisfied with a profit of say 10 per cent when the future had resolved itself into the past, and uncertainty had become certainty. Confining myself therefore to past and existing contracts about which there can be no doubt, I have concluded that if the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, up to January 1, 1898, a period at which the armor for the Kearsarge and Kentucky will all certainly have been finished, are allowed a profit of say 10 per cent upon the investments they have made for armor plants, the residue of the profits received by them severally from the manufacture of armor, due allowance being made for wear and tear, repairs, taxes, insurance, etc., ought to be applied to the amortization of their investments.

I have also concluded that in ascertaining whether the armor plant of a contractor has, after allowing him reasonable profits, been paid for, it is not unjust to consider all the profits he has derived from the use of such plant, whatever be the sources from which such profits have come. To illustrate: The Bethlehem Company contracted with the Secretary of the Navy in 1887 to furnish both armor and gun steel. The two contracts formed parts of one transaction. The company erected a gun plant and an armor plant. The two plants were contiguous, though this does not seem to be material. What did at first appear to me to be a matter of some doubt was whether in the summing up of profits derived from these plants to be set off, after allowing fair dividends on investment, against the cost of the armor plant, the profits on gun steel furnished to the United States Army, and on armor manufactured for the Russian Government could be taken into consideration in ascertaining the extent to which the company had been paid for its armor plant. I have decided this question in the affirmative.

The Government, in contracting with a manufacturer for an article he is putting on the market, and which requires no special plant, is, no more than a private individual, under obligation to see that the manufacturer makes any particular profit or that he is enabled by his contract with it to pay for any portion of his plant. Both parties in such a transaction take the ordinary chances of profit or loss. Exactly the reverse is true where the Government asks that a special plant for its own special purposes be erected. Here the Government ought, in all its contracts, up to the point at which the manufacturer shall have recouped his original investment, to take into consideration the expenses incurred, prudently and in good faith, by the contractor in preparing himself thus to serve it. But in case the contractor uses his plant to manufacture for others, his venture becomes pro tanto a commercial enterprise and is to that extent divested of its character as a governmental agency. It would, therefore, seem clear that if by means of such commercial contracts, together with Government contracts already enjoyed, such a plant has been paid for, there can no longer be any obligation resting on the Government to do what has already been accomplished. In other words, it is only when the Government is sole paymaster that it can be looked to for full payment.

I have, accordingly, in the estimates hereafter submitted as to the Bethlehem plant, reckoned on the profits made by that company on gun steel for the Navy and Army and on armor for the Russian Government, and the supposed profits of the Carnegie Company from a contract it made with Russia have also been charged to that company.

It has been heretofore stated that all efforts made in June last to obtain information from the companies were fruitless. They each then replied that their directors were (some of them) absent, and that no definite replies could be expected until these directors should return from their summer outings, and they were in turn both notified that the investigation would proceed without them.

On the 25th of November, 1896, the Bethlehem Company addressed me the following letter:

THE BETHLEHEM IRON CO., ROBT. P. LINDERMAN, PRES.,
South Bethlehem, Pa., November 25, 1896.

SIR: Referring to your letter addressed to this company under date of June 18, 1896, and to the writer's interview with you on the 25th of that month, we write to say that, after a very serious consideration of the subject, we feel reluctantly obliged to decline to give, in such detail as you request, the cost to us of manufacturing armor plate, since to do this would necessarily involve the disclosure to our competitors of business secrets which we have obtained by long and expensive experience and which belong to us alone and which might be used to our disadvantage. So far as we know, it is without precedent for a manufacturer to be asked to divulge the cost of his product, and we can not see that we should be asked to do so in this case.

We desire, however, to assist you as far as we consistently can in the investigation imposed upon you by the act of Congress referred to by you in your letter, and we therefore respectfully offer the following suggestions:

Last March, during the course of the investigation by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the United States Senate in relation to the prices paid for armor for vessels of the Navy, Commander Horace Elmer, in charge of steel inspection at the Carnegie Steel Works, and Lieut. Commander John A. Rodgers, in charge of steel inspection at these works, both stated that in their judgment the cost of the material and labor involved in the manufacture of a ton of armor amounted to $250. This estimate does not, we presume, include the very difficult and costly shapes we are sometimes required to make.

Taking this figure, however, as a basis, but without in any way indorsing or assenting to the same, there must be added thereto, among other items of cost not taken into consideration by them:

INTEREST ON INVESTMENT—MAINTENANCE AND DEPRECIATION OF PLANT—WORKING CAPITAL.

Interest on investment.—Our plant for the manufacture of armor has cost us not less than $4,000,000, not including interest on outlays during construction, land, railroad connections, etc., and counting at bare cash cost, without any manufacturing profit, the large part made by ourselves. Assuming that, by reason of comparatively recent improvements and extensions, our investment has only been that large for the past two and a half years, and for the two and a half years previous was but $3,000,000, the interest during these five years would amount to $1,050,000. During this period we made 13,411 tons of armor, including that made for the Russian Government, which would make the interest charge per ton $78.29.

Maintenance and depreciation of plant.—Ten per cent per annum is certainly a low charge to cover these two items. Ten per cent on $3,000,000 for two and a half years and on $4,000,000 for two and a half years amounts to $1,750,000, or, on 13,411 tons, to $132.72 per ton.

Working capital.—It is extremely difficult to say exactly what is the amount of working capital locked up in this branch of our business, as it varies with the condition of the work, the orders on hand, and on a number of other factors unnecessary to enumerate, but it is safe to say that during the past five years it has not averaged less than $1,500,000, the annual interest on which would amount to $90,000, or $33.55 per ton.

To recapitulate:	Per ton.
To the estimated cost of labor and material as made by your agents..	$250.00
Must be added:
Interest on cost of plant	78.29
Maintenance and depreciation	132.72
Working capital	33.55
Total	494.56

There are other costs and expenses, such as loss on rejected plates, cost of experiments, administration expenses, etc., but the above is sufficient, we believe, to convince you that the prices now being paid by the Government are not excessive.

When, at the instance of the United States Government, we undertook this difficult and vexatious business, it was obvious that this could not be prudently done for the order which the Government then desired to place, but we were given to expect such further orders as the Government might have to give. The obstacles and delays that always beset the pioneer had, however, been overcome when the Government gave a private contract on the same terms as ours to a rival concern, which, guided by our sacrifices, was spared the outlay of more than a million dollars. And now, though there is little prospect of continuous work for these two establishments, if even for one, the Government is urged to set up another to be operated by itself.

Under these circumstances, we now confirm the informal suggestions made to yourself and to others, and state that we desire to withdraw from this troublesome business by selling to the Government, below cost, our entire armor-plate plant, which we believe to be the best in the world.

Respectfully,

THE BETHLEHEM IRON COMPANY,
ROBT. P. LINDERMAN, President.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D. C.

It will be seen from this letter that Mr. Linderman does not commit himself to anything except, perhaps, to the methods of calculation which he suggests. He, however, consents that if his methods are adopted the plant of the Bethlehem Company may be estimated at $4,000,000, $3,000,000 of which are to bear interest for five years and $1,000,000 for two and a half years. He also calls attention to the fact that two naval officers during the investigation of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate had testified that in their judgment the costs of material and labor in a ton of armor amounted to $250. Upon this basis he suggests the following method of calculation:

1. He claims 6 per cent interest upon the amount of his investment. Now, a manufacturer can not claim interest on his capital as distinct from profits. The net income derived from shares in such an enterprise, however large or small it may be, is profit and not interest. If Mr. Linderman means to say that in any estimate to be made the net profits allowed should be at least 6 per cent on the capital invested, this may be readily admitted. In the calculations hereafter to be made a larger per cent than this will be allowed as a rate of dividend before applying the residue of profits to the extinction of the capital invested in plant.

2. Mr. Linderman asks 10 per cent per annum for maintenance and depreciation of plant. It will be noted that the Carnegie Company, in its statement soon to follow, claims 5 per cent for "maintenance of plant," where the Bethlehem claims 10. There is no distinction to be made between the companies in this regard. Their plants are similar and are doing similar work. The difference in their estimates can only be accounted for by considering that the rule, often invoked, that 10 per cent must be allowed to a manufacturer for maintenance of plant, which includes taxes and insurance, is not of universal application. The Bethlehem Company invokes this rule, but the Carnegie Company asks only 5 per cent. As to the Bethlehem Company, it has not, on account of certain returns hereinafter set forth, been necessary to apply this rule at all. As to the Carnegie Company, I have made two calculations, in one using 10 per cent, in the other 5, the figure suggested by the company itself. There is little danger that this company has been unjust to itself. It is obvious that charges for maintenance must, under different circumstances, vary widely. A new and well-constructed plant will require not half so much for repairs, and may not subject the owners to one-third as much loss from stoppages as one that is old or badly constructed. So a plant composed in large part of delicate machinery, like those engaged in weaving fine fabrics, ought to cost more for repairs than a plant like those in question, which consists almost entirely of large and heavy pieces, like cranes, etc., which, if originally strong and heavy enough, would last indefinitely, if the smaller parts, like rollers, be from time to time replaced.

I have before me what are believed to be all the taxes paid by these companies, and they are so insignificant that they will be considered as included in either estimate of percentage for maintenance.

It is to be observed that Mr. Linderman claims maintenance on the cost of plant. This, of course, can not be allowed. So applied, Mr. Linderman's rule and his rate would give the Bethlehem $100,000 more every year than would be allowed at the same rate to the Carnegie Company for keeping a similar plant in order, as the plant of the former company, it is claimed, no doubt correctly, cost $1,000,000 more than that of the latter. The reason on which the rule is founded could lead to no such conclusion. Under such a construction the charge for maintaining a plant would vary according to the value of the land upon which it was located, according to the good or bad bargain made in buying it, or other adventitious circumstances.

The reason of the rule is apparent from its terms, viz, an allowance for maintaining a plant, not for maintaining or keeping up the cost of a plant. The percentage allowed is therefore to be applied only to the present value of a plant, and in arriving at this value the price of land, etc., which do not need to be renewed, is not estimated. This is the rule hereinafter applied.

Having determined upon allowing a percentage for maintenance, instead of apportioning it to each ton of armor, as insisted upon by Mr. Linderman in the calculations hereinafter made, a company will be credited with it during the whole period to be covered by the estimate, and this certainly can not be objected to.

3. Mr. Linderman insists that the working capital necessary is $1,500,000, the annual interest on which would amount to $90,000.

It is difficult to say what working capital is necessary to a manufacturer. Much depends upon the nature of the business done, whether returns are frequent or at long intervals, whether the products are for sale in the general market or manufactured to order. It would seem that $1,500,000 would be totally unnecessary in this instance. Every group of armor consists of three or four hundred tons and is promptly paid for when delivered and tested. When 3,000 tons of armor per annum are manufactured, payments, after they begin, accrue almost monthly. When 2,000 tons are manufactured, payments accrue at least once in two months. Ten per cent, it is true, of the money due under each contract is reserved by the Government until its complete fulfillment, but the profits on every ton of armor are great, and they afford much ready money with which to pay for labor and material, and all this must be taken into consideration in determining upon the amount to be allowed. As to future contracts, including the Kearsarge and Kentucky, progress payments will be made, rendering necessary still less working capital than now. The Carnegie Company, which claims that calculations should be made very much as is contended for by Mr. Linderman, only insists upon $1,000,000 of working capital. It may be that when a contract is entered upon, as some months must elapse before the first deliveries, $1,000,000 may be employed for a time as working capital, but certainly no such sum can be needed throughout any considerable period in such a business as manufacturing for a customer who pays promptly at short intervals, and when in every payment there is a very large profit. It is believed that $750,000 as working capital will be a liberal allowance.

About the time of the receipt of the above letter from the Bethlehem Company the following communication came from the Carnegie Company:

THE CARNEGIE STEEL COMPANY, LIMITED.

We regret to be compelled to decline any request you make, but believe that upon due reflection you will see that it is impossible for us to open the details of our private business to the eyes of our competitors and to the world.

The cost of making armor is not to be found in the details at the shops, upon which your officers have estimated. Permit us to show you three, among the many, elements of cost which they did not take into account:

First. The capital we have invested in our armor plant is, as stated by our Mr. Carnegie in his evidence before the Senate Naval Committee, fully $3,000,000. We charged to this account in our books only $2,500,000, the amount paid out; but we ourselves contributed fully $500,000. No charge was made for the ground, railway connections, etc. The water supply is taken from our other works; so also are the electric light and power currents; no charge was made for the proportion of these plants necessary for the armor-plate plant. We charged nothing for superintendence, nor for interest during construction. All of these are legitimate charges and bring the total cost up to something over $3,000,000.

We began making armor plate in October, 1891, and have made to August 1, 1896, 11,059 tons of armor. The interest upon our investment, $180,000 per year, in five years amounts to $900,000, or $81.53 per ton of armor.

Second. The estimate made by your officers took no account of maintenance of plant. This can not be estimated at less than 5 per cent per annum, which makes $150,000 per year, or for five years, $750,000, amounting to $67.94 per ton of armor.

Third. The armor plant is practically useless except for the making of armor; therefore, when the Navy is finished, say ten years hence, we have to face a probable loss of the cost of the plant, $3,000,000. Even if the salvage amounts to $500,000, we have a loss of $2,500,000, equaling in fifteen years $166,666 per annum, or $75.49 per ton of armor.

This will make items of cost which were not taken into account in the estimate of your officers, as follows:

Interest on plant, per ton of armor	$81.53
Maintenance of plant, per ton of armor	67.94
Loss by abandonment of plant when Navy shall have been completed, per ton of armor	75.49
Total	224.96

To the above should be added the cost of working capital, which varies greatly, as works may be run fully, partially, or not at all, but estimated at $1,000,000 average, the cost is, say, $25 per ton.

It is because of these and other facts that we do not hesitate to say that the manufacture of armor is not, and can not be made, a permanently satisfactory investment of capital, even at the prices charged per ton.

We did not seek the Government orders for armor; the Government sought us, and after declining, when invited, we finally agreed, reluctantly, to undertake the task, simply because the Government could not get armor for the ships which were upon the stocks waiting for it.

If the Government now desires to undertake the manufacture of armor for itself, we shall only be too happy to sell our plant to it at cost. It is in splendid order, and we refer you to your experts as to whether it is not far more efficient now than when new, as we have continually made improvements upon it.

The plant can remain where it is, and we will undertake to furnish the steel in the ingot at a price to be fixed by three arbitrators; or we will remove the plant and erect it at any point designated by the Government; also erect the additional plant for the making of the steel. We will superintend all this and start the works, and continue to operate them until they produce armor successfully; and for all this we will only ask the Government to pay the actual cost.

We undertake also to teach the Government officials how to make such armor as we are now supplying you, which, as you know, holds the world's record.

Having gone into this business primarily to help the Government when it could not obtain armor, we submit to you and to Congress that we have some claim upon the Government to take our plant at cost, and we hope this proposition will meet with favor.

We make about 150,000 tons of finished steel per month, and the two or three hundred tons of armor we make per month demand greater attention and give more trouble than all the 150,000 tons. We shall be delighted if the Government will let us out of the armor business. We can use the capital in several lines of our business to better advantage.

It will be seen that the claim of this company is that its investment in plant should be taken at $3,000,000. It insists also on interest on its investment at the rate of 6 per cent for the full time of five years. Like the Bethlehem, this company would add to the price of armor paid for in the last part of the period interest that accrued on capital, a part of which was already extinguished, to increase its price. While demanding for itself all this interest, the Government is allowed no interest on its payments. To adopt such a rule as this would be to say that although it might appear that when one-half of these five years had elapsed the capital originally invested had been 30, 40, or 50 per cent of it repaid by profits received over and above fair dividends, yet we must go on counting interest on the whole amount, no matter how much of it had been paid back.

The company does, however, admit the possibility of some "salvage" by its third proposition, "That the armor plant is practically useless except for the making of armor. Therefore, when the Navy is finished, say ten years hence, we have to face a probable loss of the cost of the plant, $3,000,000. Even if the salvage amounts to $500,000, we have a loss of $2,500,000, equaling in fifteen years $166,666 per annum, or $75.49 per ton of armor."

It seems to be very plain that no assistance in arriving at a correct conclusion in the premises can be derived from either of these letters, unless it shall be concluded that the cost of the plant is in the one case $4,000,000 and in the other $3,000,000, as insisted upon.

The amounts of these investments, as has heretofore been stated, is most material, and I have diligently sought to secure evidence that would enable me to estimate them correctly. In discussing the weight to be given to the statements made by the companies, consideration is to be given to the following facts:

1. These companies are testifying in their own interests.

2. They are in possession of evidence which would, if produced, satisfy Congress of the correctness of their statements. They have been requested to produce this evidence, and they refuse to do it. The general ground upon which these companies refuse to show their books, or to explain otherwise the costs to them of the manufacture of armor, is that this would be to expose their business secrets to their competitors. It would appear that they might give evidence as to the value of their plants without exposing their business methods. Certainly the prices of such portions of these plants as were purchased might be proven by vouchers, and details of the items constituting the remainder might be set forth so as to enable Congress to see what had been included, and to form for itself some opinion. It is not easy to see how this would be giving away business secrets. Nevertheless, all important as is the question of the cost of these plants, we have on that subject only a bare statement by each of these companies, neither of them going into any particulars or giving any such explanations as are usually required in courts and before committees when facts are to be established.

These statements, while both of them mentioning items which are not included in the sums mentioned, do not either of them specify what items are comprised in the cost of their plants. Both of these plants are connected with steel mills, and the armor and steel plants are necessarily to some extent interdependent. If the figures in the books of these companies, when making up amounts chargeable to armor plant, proceed upon bases as incorrect as the methods suggested in each of these letters for calculating the cost of armor, and this would seem to be a reasonable presumption, then the statements as to the cost of the plants are to be taken with many grains of allowance.

It is also to be noted that if the plants of these two companies cost $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 each, proof of these figures in such manner as to satisfy Congress and the public would have a wholesome effect upon business competitors in deterring them from entering into competition in the manufacture of armor.

Examining the estimates of the cost of plants made by the Government inspectors, we find that Ensign McVay, in his prepared statement of the cost of the plant at the Carnegie works, estimated it all together at $3,000,000, the same figure given by the company. In the company's statement it said that the $2,500,000 shown by the books does not include ground, railway connection, water plant, or electric light and power currents; that these are taken from the other works, and that, together with the interest during the construction of the plant, they will amount to something over $500,000. Mr. McVay only reached $3,000,000 by including these items:

Power house at	$75,000
Pumping station, etc., at	75,000
Electric plant at	75,000
Land at	550,000
Stock on hand at	300,000
Total	1,075,000

Deducting this from $3,000,000, leaves $1,925,000 for the items which are estimated by the company at $2,500,000. The stock on hand, $300,000, is clearly improperly included by Mr. McVay in plant. His testimony, therefore, does not sustain the company. It is to be considered, however, that naval officers have really very little knowledge as to the cost of plant. They must, in all their estimates, be governed largely by such data as they are able to collect from observation and hearsay. As to the amount of labor employed and of fuel and material used in the manufacture of armor, they have observed closely, and as the market rates for these are accessible, they may be expected to estimate them with reasonable accuracy. There is, however, no general market in this country for the structures constituting an armor plant. The inspectors must necessarily, in order to form any opinion whatever of the value of these, be guided largely by such hearsay information as they can obtain, and this must, of course, come primarily in large part from the interested persons with whom these officers are brought in contact around the works.

Coming now to the estimate for the armor plant of the Bethlehem Company, the Rohrer Board estimates this plant altogether at $4,881,000, or $881,000 more than the $4,000,000 upon the basis of which the company indicates its willingness to have estimates made, provided calculations proceed upon methods suggested by it, which methods have been shown to be grossly erroneous. There is no doubt but that the Bethlehem Company's plant did cost very much more than the plant of the Carnegie Company. At Bethlehem a hammer was constructed at large cost, which rumor has placed at amounts varying from $400,000 to $700,000. The use of this hammer was subsequently abandoned, because the press which was erected did better and cheaper work. Other experiments were made which were futile and costly. It is believed that it would not be unjust to allow in these estimates $1,000,000 more for the plant at Bethlehem than for that at Carnegie's, but here, as everywhere throughout these investigations, we are met with the difficulty of arriving at any correct conclusions in the absence of the positive, direct, detailed evidence which could be furnished by the companies themselves, but which they refuse to give, preferring, as they do, to leave the Department and Congress to speculate on the subject in so far as it may not choose to be guided by the very general statements which have been made in these letters.

Even these letters were not written until after I had returned from Europe, where by my visit I procured, as stated, two estimates of the cost of armor plants. One of them was made in England by a company which is prepared to furnish the plant, and it is attached hereto, marked Exhibit No. 1. This estimate by a manufacturer of experience and reputation puts as a sufficient sum for machinery £113,400, but it having been referred to the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance to be completed by adding estimates for duties, buildings, installation, etc., he has added these and other costly items which he deems necessary to make it equal the American plants. As thus completed, it amounts to $1,500,000. This is the estimate for putting up complete a plant equal to that of the Carnegie Company, said to have cost $3,000,000. Prices are, however, lower now than in 1887, when the Bethlehem Company began its plant, or even than in 1890, when the Carnegie Company undertook the manufacture of armor.

Exhibit No. 2 is a preliminary estimate for an armor plant at Guérigny, in France. This estimate was made by the French Government for the purpose of ascertaining what it would cost to put up an armor plant at that point in connection with the Government works already there, and which are now equipped for the manufacture of chains, cables, steel protective deck-plates, etc. No steel, however, is made there. The Government at present buys this material.

A reference to the explanation by Lieutenant-Commander Rodgers, attached to that exhibit, shows what Mr. Rodgers, after an examination of the present works at Guérigny, supposes the estimate of the French Government to include. It includes, it is supposed, installing the machinery and the erection of additional buildings so far as needed. This estimate, made by the Government of France for the erection in connection with its plant now making protective decks and equipment supplies, is $700,000, all told.

At present the duty on machinery of this class is 35 per cent. It is much to be regretted that the details of this estimate are not given, but it is to be remembered that this $700,000 is an official estimate for the Government, and the Government is presumed to have had in view an efficient armor plant. If we allow for duties, which would be collected only on the machinery included in this estimate, and then for higher-priced labor in building houses and installing plant, this could not be more than double this estimate, making it $1,400,000.

The English estimate, we have seen, as amended by Captain Sampson, amounts to $1,590,000, which would pay duties and freight and erect here a plant equal to those in question. Doubling the estimate of the French Government, we have $1,400,000 for a similar plant, houses, machinery, and all. The average of the two estimates is $1,500,000. Adding another million for fall in price since they were erected would allow $2,500,000 for the Carnegie plant, and still another million would give $3,500,000 for the Bethlehem plant. I shall not, however, insist upon these figures in the calculations to be submitted, but will present tables in which the basis shall be the cost of the plants as given in the letters of the two companies, as, after all, I prefer to rely on these figures. I do not mean even to cast a doubt upon them. I have submitted and commented on proofs as to the cost of erecting a plant, as showing that one could now be erected for about $1,500,000, and these figures will serve as a guide for Congress in deciding whether to erect a plant, and also as a basis in calculating on future contracts.

If a correct conclusion as to cost of plant, which is far the most difficult problem in this investigation, has been reached, we may advance with more confidence to a consideration of other factors in attaining results.

PRICES OF ARMOR ABROAD.

Appended hereto is a diagram of prices, marked Exhibit No. 7, which may be relied upon as showing accurately the prices of armor in the United States, England, France, Germany, and Austria, for armor manufactured at home, and also the prices at which the United States, English, German, and French manufacturers have furnished armor for foreign governments. These prices have ranged from $349 to $650 per ton, the cheapest first-class armor in the list having been furnished to the Russian Government by the Bethlehem Company, and the highest in price, excepting some made in Italy, the armor furnished by the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies to the United States under their contracts of 1887, 1890, and 1893. The contracts made by these companies in 1890 were for about $560 per ton, on an average. Italian prices average nearly $600. Austrian armor was not first class.

It must be understood that armor plates differ in prices. Difficult shapes cost more, simple shapes less. The figures used throughout this report refer to average prices.

During the debate in the Senate upon the armor question at the last session of Congress, one question discussed was whether there was an understanding or agreement among armor manufacturers throughout the world to keep up prices. This was one of the questions I inquired about upon my recent trip to England and France. If there be any such understanding it is of course impossible to prove it, unless some one of those to whom the secret has been confided should betray his trust. My impression is that there is and has been for some time at least a friendly understanding among armor contractors both in Europe and America as to the prices to be charged for armor. This impression I find prevails abroad, certainly among some of the persons who have inquired into the subject.

Without undertaking in any manner to justify such combinations, there are reasons that would naturally induce armor contractors to agree among themselves as to the prices to be charged to their own government, and also with armor makers abroad as to the prices at which armor is to be furnished to countries which do not manufacture it.

The manufacture of armor is a special business, dependent upon many uncertainties. The necessary plant is very expensive. Armor is the product in large part of machinery, and labor and materials are but small items when compared with the original cost of plant and the expense of maintaining it. A manufacturer in possession of a plant which has been paid for by profits can produce armor at rates that would be ruinous to a company in the outset of its operations. A large margin of profit is necessary also to meet the conditions arising out of the uncertainty of orders, the maintenance of a plant when not in operation, and the keeping together of the necessary operatives while awaiting orders. Sharp competition for custom would be apt to cause manufacturers to lose sight of these conditions, and financial disaster would inevitably result from failure to keep them in mind. These natural promptings to such a combination are mentioned only as persuasive to show, when taken in connection with what follows, that a world-wide combination or understanding does exist.

An inspection of the prices paid, as shown by the diagram before referred to, will indicate what is not denied, that the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies agreed with each other as to prices. They have divided the contracts of this Government between themselves, each bidding lower than the other for one-half of the armor required at any time by the Government.

In France the Schneider Company, at Creusot, seemed to have had the field largely to itself, and furnished most of the armor to that Government from 1885 till about 1888, when the Chatillon Company began operations. Afterwards the St. Chamond and Marrel Company came in, and still later the St. Étienne. These companies when they began to share in the contracts for armor for the French Government, all charged about the same prices, these prices gradually rising, until 1891, when changes were made in the requirements. In 1892 the United States had adopted the Harvey process of face hardening. France adopted this process in 1893, and we then find that in 1894 all the French companies had raised their prices from about $370 to about $470 per ton. Afterwards, in 1896, all these French companies were found charging their Government about $535 per ton.

In 1895 Russia was in the market for harveyed nickel armor. The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, in the United States, were then both well established, and neither had sufficient orders from this Government to employ its plant continuously. There was sharp competition for the order from Russia, and the Bethlehem Company secured the contract for manufacturing armor for one ship at the very low price of $249 per ton, this armor to be both nickeled and harveyed and to be delivered in Russia, the company agreeing at the same time to manufacture the armor for two other ships, if required, at the same price. The Russian Government afterwards did require armor for the other two ships, and taken altogether the armor for the three amounted to about 1,400 tons.

The French Government had, in the meantime, in 1894, and prior to these Bethlehem contracts with Russia, been paying to its companies about $560 per ton for harveyed nickel armor. Early in 1895 the Bethlehem Company secured another contract from the Russian Government, this time at the price of about $520 a ton, and almost contemporaneously the Carnegie Company made a contract with the Russian Government to supply armor at practically the same price as the Bethlehem Company.

Here, then, we have the pregnant facts that the two companies in the United States have had a perfect understanding with each other as to what they should charge their own Government; that the five companies in France seem to have had a like understanding with each other as to what they should charge their Government; that the price of armor in France rose gradually from 1891 to 1894, as improvements were adopted, to about the same price as that which was charged by the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies to Russia in 1895, after the former company had forced its way into the European market. I am informed upon authority which I believe to be good, that about, or perhaps before the time of the last contract of the Bethlehem Company with Russia, there was a meeting in Paris of the representatives of the principal, if not all, of the armor manufacturers of Europe and America.

The diagram shows also that, in 1896, Krupp manufactured for Russia some armor for about the same price as that charged to Russia by the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies. Dillinger, in 1896, also manufactured armor for Russia at prices about $30 per ton more than had been charged to the same Government by Krupp and by the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies. I have been unable to procure the prices at which the English manufacturers furnished armor for other governments. The price, however, at which the Cammel or John Brown Company and Vickers manufactured harveyed steel armor for their Government was about $330 per ton. None of this was nickeled and some of it was not harveyed. It will also be observed that the different companies habitually charged a little more to their own than to other governments. Vickers's armor furnished to the English Government was harveyed but not nickeled.

These facts seem to lead to the conclusion that there is at least a friendly understanding or agreement among the principal armor manufacturers of the world that prices shall be maintained at or about a certain level.

The prices at which the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies are now furnishing armor to this Government are $59 less than those paid under the contract of February, 1893. When about letting out the contracts for the Kearsarge and Kentucky, I insisted upon lower prices, and after considerable negotiation, these two companies were induced to reduce their prices to that extent, and as the price of nickel had fallen in the meantime about $10 per ton, the rates now being paid for the armor of the Kearsarge and Kentucky are some $70 lower than were previously paid.

In June, 1896, a board of officers, consisting of Lieuts. Karl Rohrer, Kossuth Niles, and A. A. Ackerman was assembled, with instructions to make a careful estimate of the actual cost in labor and material for the manufacture of armor now being provided for our battle ships. The board submitted a report on July 3, 1896.

Lieutenant Rohrer had been inspector at the works of the Bethlehem Iron Company for the period of three years from August 1, 1892, to March 26, 1895. Lieutenant Niles had also been inspector of ordnance at these works from October 18, 1888, to August 31, 1892. The latter was with the Bethlehem Iron Company as Government inspector from the inception of the manufacture of armor plate, and was consequently familiar with the installation of the plant used in the manufacture of this armor, and with all the experiments, failures, etc., which the company encountered in establishing this plant. The connection of Lieutenant Rohrer with this company followed in point of time that of Lieutenant Niles, so that their combined experiences covered the whole period from October 18, 1888, to March 26, 1895, the date of Lieutenant-Commander Rodgers's appointment as inspector of ordnance at these works. Lieutenant Ackerman had been connected with the manufacture and use of steel in its various forms, principally castings and forgings, at different times, for six years prior to his appointment upon this board. Mr. Ackerman had also spent several months at both the Bethlehem and Carnegie works, and was familiar with the methods employed at both establishments and with the differences in their methods of work.

These gentlemen having thus familiarized themselves with all the processes employed, and being entirely disinterested, the results of their deliberations may be considered as representing with much accuracy the cost of manufacturing armor such as is now used on our battle ships. Besides the knowledge thus derived from their experience, these officers had at their disposal the market prices of all materials which go toward the composition of this armor. They were furnished, in addition, through the inspectors of ordnance, and from the records they had made while at these two establishments, with the quantity of material used and the labor required in each of the operations involved in the manufacture of armor. In making their estimate, they began with the cost of the several ingredients charged into the furnace for casting the ingot preparatory to the forging process. Each item of loss resulting in the casting of the ingot was carefully considered and accounted for. Each item of expense due to mixing, melting, pouring, etc., was considered as constituting a part of the operation and of the cost of casting the ingot. The cost of making the molds, handling the ingot, stripping it, and the material required for preparing it for forging, together with the coal, etc., required in all subsequent heatings and treatment; the cost of power each time the ingot or armor plate was moved, etc., formed a part of the cost of the finished plate. In like manner every other item of cost, including administration, was calculated and added. The result of these calculations was that the cost of the labor and material in a ton of single forged harveyed nickel steel—the Government supplying the nickel—was $167.30.

All the armor used in our battle ships up to the present time, is of single forged harveyed nickel steel, except a portion of the Iowa's armor, which is double forged. In addition to the items of labor and material, it was found that a considerable allowance must be made for the loss to the manufacturers in material which was rejected for defects occurring at different stages of the process. These losses were at times very large, larger of course before the methods of manufacture were thoroughly established, and it is therefore thought just to add 10 per cent to the cost of labor and material to cover these losses. The addition of this 10 per cent increased the estimate for labor and material in a ton $184. According to the estimates of Lieutenant-Commander Rodgers, based upon observation in the manufacture of reforged armor, reforging results in an increased cost to the manufacturer of $11.27 per ton, which makes the cost of reforged armor (labor and material) $196.45 per ton.

When the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, in 1896, commenced the investigation regarding prices of armor, the inspectors at the works of the Bethlehem Iron Company and of the Carnegie Steel Company were instructed to investigate and follow carefully each process in its manufacture, the time required and its cost, the kind, quantity, and cost of different materials used, in order that they might be prepared with an estimate of the total cost of its production. The estimate thus made by Lieutenant Commander Rodgers now and then the inspector at Bethlehem, though formed independently, and with slight variations in the methods followed, was for single forged harveyed nickel steel armor, $178.59; with the 10 per cent added for losses due to rejection, $196.45; for double forged nickel steel harveyed armor, including the 10 per cent, $208.85.

The estimate made by the inspector of ordnance at the Carnegie Steel Company, Ensign C. B. McVay, who has been inspector of ordnance at these works during the past year, also based upon careful observation over the whole of this period, and upon methods similar to those followed by the Board, though varying in details, is for single-forged, harveyed nickel-steel armor, $161.54; or, adding 10 per cent for the loss due to rejections, $177.69; or, for reforged armor, with the 10 per cent added, $190.09. The Department is inclined to give the greater weight to the estimated cost formed by the Board, and it is believed to be just to both the manufacturers and to the Government to take average of the estimates to be $185.38 for single-forged and $197.78 for reforged armor.

Considering that the three estimates vary so little, and that they were made independently, the results must be quite near the actual cost. It should be noted in this connection that the first estimate submitted by Ensign McVay for reforged armor, in August, 1896, was, deducting the value of nickel, which is furnished by the Government, $177.50; adding 10 per cent for the loss due to rejections, $195.28, which makes his estimate very nearly the same as the two made by Lieutenant-Commander Rodgers and by the Board. Mr. McVay, after following for some months past the production of the reforged armor for the battle ships Kearsarge and Kentucky, has modified his estimate as above indicated, the difference in his two estimates being no doubt partly due to the increased skill of operatives and to improved processes. As, however, these deductions resulted from accurate knowledge of particular processes followed carefully throughout, we must also conclude that Mr. McVay's former statement was very liberal to the contractors.

The items constituting the heads under which the calculations of the Rohrer Board were made are summarized as follows:

Materials in ingot	$30.13
Materials consumed in manufacture	56.75
Labor	43.50
Keeping plant ready for use	9.80
Shop expenses	2.38
Office expenses and contingencies	3.34
Administration, superintendence, and engineering	21.40
Total	167.30

The methods pursued by the inspectors of ordnance followed, in the main, lines similar to those pursued by the Board, as in Exhibit No. 4, though differing occasionally in details of computation. For the purpose of comparison, the report of the Board was modified to show also the cost of reforged armor. The report of Lieutenant-Commander Rodgers was revised so as to include the item of cost of labor and material in maintaining the plant ready for use. The cost of nickel, which is supplied by the Government, was deducted from his given value of the charge. The report of Mr. McVay was changed so as to include the items: Cost of labor and material in maintaining plant ready for use, office expenses and contingencies, and shop expenses. It is noted that the report of Mr. McVay credits a cost of $15 per ton to the armor maker for the value of nickel scrap included in the charge, but the cost of forging is correspondingly low; that is to say, the cost of cutting up the scrap, which gives it its real value, is not included.

One of the inspectors estimates the losses from spoiled plates, rejections, etc., at 15 per cent, one at 10 per cent, while the Board, composed of three, puts it at 6 per cent, though this latter does not include the cost of experiment, which, however, is estimated to be less than 1 per cent. If the average of the five calculations be taken, this percentage would be 9⅓, but I have allowed 10 per cent for losses.

Upon my return from Europe, in October, I sent an officer to Harrisburg, Pa., in search of information, and he procured copies of the returns which had been made under an act passed by the legislature of Pennsylvania in 1889, by the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies. This act requires annual statements of the capital invested, dividends made, gross and net profits, and accumulations of surplus. The returns made by the Carnegie Company were so incomplete as to be of very litttle value. Those made by the Bethlehem Company are more definite. As procured from the auditor-general they contain the returns from this company of capital authorized, capital paid in, and dividends for each year from 1889 to November 1, 1895, inclusive. The returns, however, give gross receipts and net receipts only for the years 1893, 1894, and 1895, including the surplus for the fiscal year ending November 1, 1895. This information, supplemented as it was by that which the Department had at hand, constituting the amounts paid for armor during the several years, was important, and I felt that as these returns were not made with a view of being used in an investigation of this character, justice to the company required that it should be notified of the fact that I was considering them, which would suggest the propriety of making any explanations it might deem advisable. (See Exhibit No. 11.) In response to a reply I wired as follows:

DECEMBER 10, 1896.

Answering yours of yesterday, returns give you net earnings and gross earnings for the years 1893, 1894, and 1895, and surplus at end of fiscal year 1895. Would like similar returns for fiscal year ending in 1896, and also surplus at beginning of year 1889, and gross and net earnings for years 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892.

Two days afterwards a reply was received, giving the information requested. Thereupon I wrote the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 12, 1896.

SIR: I am very glad to receive your letter of yesterday containing returns asked for, the gross earnings, net earnings, and surplus of your company at the ends of the fiscal years 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, and 1896, severally. This information will very much aid me in the conclusions I must reach in the endeavor to arrive at the profits of your company from armor. I would like, however, especially to have also a statement as to what the surplus at the ends of the several years from 1889 to 1896 consisted of. This information would greatly aid me in arriving at correct results. If you can furnish it, you will put me under additional obligations. I ought, however, to state further what I have so often stated to your company in different forms, and what I hope you are convinced of, that my earnest desire in this matter is to do absolute justice to your company, as well as to the Carnegie Company, and, therefore, any additional information that you could furnish me, other than that herein indicated, to enable me to reach a correct conclusion would be very welcome, and if I can have assurances that you will furnish other information, I will gladly delay my report for a few days to enable you to send it.

It might not be amiss for me to say further that I recognize the fact, made clear from my investigations, that the armor plant of the Bethlehem Company cost more than that of the Carnegie Company. You began first, and you made some costly experiments, especially that with the hammer. The Carnegie Company had the advantage of your experience and avoided the mistakes which you had naturally committed. The Government ought not, in its legislation, to determine upon any prices that would do an injustice to you. The fact ought to be fully recognized that both the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies took up this business of manufacturing armor at the instance of the Government. Both companies are, therefore, entitled to fair remuneration, and no prices ought to be determined upon which would do injustice to either. I have only referred to this latter matter for the purpose of furnishing you a further indication, if any were needed, of the manner in which I am conducting this investigation, and of my wish to be just and fair both to the Government and contractors, in the conclusions at which I shall arrive in the report to be submitted by me.

If you are still of opinion, after considering this matter, that you ought not to go any further in the direction of furnishing specific information that would enable me to separate the profits made from armor from the profits resulting otherwise, I nevertheless hope that you will see proper to give me at once the statement showing what the surplus consisted of at the ends of the several years.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) H. A. HERBERT.

ROB'T H. SAYRE, Esq.,
Vice-Pres. Bethlehem Iron Co., South Bethlehem, Pa.

An answer to that letter was received, as follows:

THE BETHLEHEM IRON COMPANY,
ROB'T H. SAYRE, VICE-PRES. AND GEN. MANAGER,
South Bethlehem, Pa., December 16, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 13th instant is at hand. President Linderman's absence in New York this week up to date, and my absence in Philadelphia on Monday and Tuesday, will account for delay in reply to your letter.

In reply to your inquiry, "as to what the surplus at the ends of the several years from 1889 to 1896 consisted of," I can only say, in the absence of the president, in a general way—the surplus in each of these years consisted of cash, securities, stock on hand, raw material, work in hand and finished, work not accepted or delivered, plant and machinery, etc.—in other words, the surplus is the excess of assets over liabilities, and of course embraces all branches of our business.

We fully appreciate your "earnest desire to do absolute justice to our company in this matter," and have to thank you for the many evidences we have had of this, but you must pardon the natural and proper objections we have, from a manufacturer's standpoint, of giving to the public the details of our business.

Yours, respectfully,

ROBERT H. SAYRE,
Vice-President and General Manager.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT, Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

This letter, it will be perceived, gives no definite information. One especial purpose of my inquiry was to ascertain the component elements of the surplus as it appears in the returns from year to year.

When the table which follows is looked at, it will be seen that it would be instructive to know exactly what is meant by the large surplus, which was constantly increasing from year to year; but the company not only fails to give any definite statement as to this, but it also declines my request for "additional information" about the returns "to enable me to reach a correct conclusion."

The table is made up of the returns from 1889 to 1895, as gotten from the auditor-general, to which are added such returns from the company as came in response to my telegram on December 10, recited in my letter of December 12, and then adding the information as to the years 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888, gathered from the Red Book of Pennsylvania, and payments for armor and gun steel, as taken from the books of the Navy and War Departments.

Here is the table thus made up, the basic figure being the company's, and careful attention is invited to it:

These figures show that especially during the period from 1890 to 1896, inclusive, the company was doing an extraordinarily prosperous business. It seems also to have done a fairly prosperous business in 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888. During two of these years it declared 12 per cent dividends and during the other two 10 per cent. Its capital was then $2,000,000, engaged in the manufacture of steel rails and steel in other forms.

After it undertook Government business and began to receive returns from its armor and gun plants it made no separate returns of the profits derived from its work done for the Government and for the public, but by deducting receipts for Government work from total gross receipts in each year we find what was the volume of the company's commercial business.

A careful inspection of the figures, however, shows that whenever the Government business was largest the net earnings were greatest, notwithstanding the fact of a decrease during those years in the total volume of business. The year 1893 seems to have been an exception to this rule. This is probably to be accounted for by the fact that it was during that year that the company paid for the last important improvements in its plant, which is taken to have been done out of its earnings before the net amount was declared. The table shows many other indications that the net earnings were the sums left after deducting from the gross earnings whatever was paid toward plant, e. g., in 1889, when much of the plant was erected, the net earnings were less than $10,000; gross earnings over $600,000. However that may be, these returns, taken all together, clearly indicate that all the plant has been paid for, whatever it may have cost, as I shall endeavor to demonstrate. Still there remain no means apparent on the face of these returns for determining how much of the net earnings came from Government business.

I have supposed that the proper method of arriving at the profit of this company from its Government contracts would be to make a very liberal estimate on the possible earnings of its commercial plant and deduct this from the aggregate net earnings of the entire business. It will certainly be liberal to consider that its commercial plant has paid during the years from 1889 to 1896, inclusive, a dividend of 10 per cent, about what it was paying before. Its average during the four previous years was 11 per cent, but those years were far more prosperous than has been the period elapsing since that time.

An inspection of the Red Book of Pennsylvania shows that during the period from 1885 to 1888, inclusive, many companies were declaring dividends regularly which have since failed for years to declare any whatever, and that none of the principal companies engaged in business like that of the Bethlehem Company have averaged as large dividends since 1889 as they did from 1885 to 1889.

Below is an abstract showing the dividends made by different steel companies in the State of Pennsylvania, where these two armor plants are both located, from the years 1885 to 1894, inclusive. These are only the largest and, presumably, most prosperous companies; and they are selected because they have been doing work similar to that in which the Carnegie Company is now engaged and in which the Bethlehem Company was exclusively engaged up to the time it made its contract with the Government for armor and gun steel in 1887.

The dividends of the Bethlehem Company after 1889 are omitted from this abstract. They were declared on all business—we are seeking to separate Government from commercial business—and the figures are given to show what others were earnings on commercial manufactures.

d Earnings from 6 per cent to 8 per cent made annually and carried to surplus.

From this abstract it appears that the Bethlehem Company, in 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888, made four annual dividends, two of which were at 10 per cent and two at 12 per cent. The most prosperous company not having Government work is the Cambria Steel Company. This company declared larger dividends than did the Bethlehem Company up to 1888, when the latter had undertaken Government work. No other company appears to have been as prosperous or to have declared as large dividends since 1889 as the Cambria Company. The Cambria Company, from 1889 forward, did not average 10 per cent per annum. It is therefore fair to presume that if the Bethlehem Company had continued to do only a commercial business, it would not have made more than 10 per cent from 1889 down to the present time. To allow it, during this period of widespread depression, 10 per cent on its commercial business is to treat it liberally.

The testimony of Lieutenant Niles, hereto attached and marked Exhibit No. 8, shows that during a considerable portion of the period for which it is proposed to allow the 10 per cent on its commercial business this company's rail mills were idle.

In the calculations following this the company is considered as having made a profit of 10 per cent on all its commercial business since it undertook Government work. It will be noted that I base no estimates on the large dividends declared not only on the $4,000,000 paid for stock, but on the $1,000,000 dividend stock or on the constantly increasing annual surplus. This can not be done for want of knowledge as to meaning of surplus. The reasoning is based entirely on net receipts.

The synopsis of the Bethlehem Company's reports shows that its paid-up capital at the time it undertook this Government work in 1887 was $2,000,000; that this capital was gradually increased, new stock being issued in 1889, 1890, and 1891, amounting altogether to $2,000,000. In one of these years it appears that an option was given to stockholders to receive their dividends in money, or in lieu thereof stock at the value of $80 per share. It is presumed that some stockholders were willing to take and did take stock for their dividends, but even though this may have been done, in the calculations hereinafter made the stockholders are credited with having paid cash in full at par for all the $2,000,000 of stock.

Now, if the net profits as shown by this synopsis are sufficient, first, to pay back to the stockholders in full the money paid for this $2,000,000 of new stock; second, to pay interest at 10 per cent on this new stock up to the time it was repaid; third, to pay the Bethlehem Company 10 per cent per annum on its original $2,000,000 of stock, which represented its commercial plant, and, fourth, to pay all the indebtedness of the company and leave its surplus unimpaired, then it follows that the profits made upon armor and gun steel by this company have paid for all the new plant and have refunded all the money invested in the business of making armor and gun steel, having first paid fair profits thereon up to the time of refunding such moneys to the investors. The only possible answer to this is that the plant, other than that erected to manufacture armor and gun steel, has really made more than 10 per cent per annum, and this is not conceivable, considering, first, the general depression during this period, and, second, that it is known that a portion of the company's commercial plant has been much of the time idle. The calculations set forth in the following table show that the net profits accomplish these results, besides paying the bonded debt, amounting to $1,351,000, first shown on the company's report for 1895, and that after all this there is a balance of profit of $672,728.95 to be distributed among the stockholders.

At the same time the surplus, which January 1, 1889, before the receipts from Government business began to come in in any quantity, was $1,976,614.66, has increased to $4,651,982.80. This surplus was presumed to be made up of cash in hand, notes, bills receivable, and stock on hand, manufactured and unmanufactured; but fearing that this assumption might be unjust to the company, although it is a presumption that arises from the face of the accounts, I wrote the letter hereinbefore set forth to the company on the 12th day of December. It will be seen that in the reply, dated December 16, it is admitted that this surplus is made up in part of such items as have been supposed, but it is also stated that it in part consists of plant.

There is also an item of $880,000 floating debt in the report of 1885, but of this no estimate is made. It is the usual outstanding debt, amply taken care of by a surplus, also not taken into account, of more than five times its volume.

If the account is made up with the company according to its own statements from November 1, 1889, up to November 1, 1896, it will be as follows:

Profit and loss account, based on reports to auditor-general of the State of Pennsylvania.

Net earnings, 1889 to 1896, inclusive		$6,769,553.95
DEDUCTIONS.
Interest on original capital stock of $2,000,000 for 8 years at 10 per cent per annum	$1,600,000.00
Repayment capital added in 1889	613,200.00
Interest on same at 10 per cent for 7 years	429,240.00
Repayment capital added in 1890	231,850.00
Interest on same at 10 per cent for 6 years	139,110.00
Repayment capital added in 1891	1,154,950.00
Interest on same at 10 per cent for 5 years	577,475.00
Repayment bonds shown on report for 1895	1,351,000.00
		6,096,825.00
Balance of profit, 1889 to 1896, inclusive		672,728.95

This allows dividends annually on $2,000,000 at the rate of 10 per cent for eight years; it repays the $2,000,000 paid in, with 10 per cent from the dates when the capital was subscribed; it pays the bonds shown on the report for 1895 and leaves a profit from 1889 to 1896, inclusive, of $672,728.95 to put to the credit of the gun and armor plants, in addition to the 10 per cent already allowed on new stock.

The Bethlehem Company is now engaged in executing a contract for one-half of the armor intended for the Kearsarge and Kentucky. This contract requires it to complete this armor before the 1st of January, 1898. The prices for this armor having been agreed upon, the profit can be estimated. Then, supposing that the company will continue to make up to the end of the year 1897 10 per cent upon its original $2,000,000 of capital, the account will stand as follows:

Profit and loss account.

Net earnings, 1889 to 1896 (1897 estimated)		$7,619,553.95
Deductions.
Interest on original stock of $2,000,000 for 9 years at 10 per cent per annum	$1,800,000.00
New stock issued 1889	613,200.00
Interest on same, at 10 per cent, 8 years	490,560.00
New stock issued 1890	231,850.00
Interest on same, 10 per cent, 7 years	162,295.00
New stock issued 1891	1,154,950.00
Interest on same, at 10 per cent, 6 years	692,970.00
Proceeds bonds shown on report for 1895	1,351,000.00
		6,496,825.00
Balance of profit for period		1,122,728.95

It will be observed that in the above estimates the figures furnished by the company itself have saved me the necessity of estimating either the cost of plant or the cost of labor and material in a ton of armor. It will also be noticed that these estimates include all the work done by this company, whether with its commercial or industrial plant, whether armor or gun steel for the Navy or gun steel for the Army, and all other material manufactured with its special plant.

In order to ascertain exactly the profits made by the operation of the company's armor plant and gun plant, I have constructed the following table, still upon the supposition that 10 per cent per annum upon the original stock of $2,000,000 has been first deducted from the net earnings for the period in question:

Year ending December 31—	Net earnings, less 10 per cent on $2,000,000.	Stock issued, assumed to be at beginning of year.	22 per cent dividend on outstanding stock from issue.	Surplus to reduce stock.	Outstanding stock.	Accumulated surplus to pay bonds.
1889	−$190,003	$613,200			$613,200
1890	+ 290,847				845,050
1891	+ 100,844	1,154,950			2,000,000
1892	457,403		$1,080,738	$114,606	1,885,394
1893	587,187		414,876	678,854	1,206,450
1894	1,093,730		265,419	1,095,983	110,467
1895	1,361,402		24,299	110,467		$774,511
1896	909,277					659,711
Total	659,711					1,434,222
	5,169,554		1,735,332	2,000,000

The above shows that the Bethlehem Company, after paying 22 per cent on all money put into new plant from date of issue of stock and till its cancellation, can repay its stockholders in full and accumulate a surplus of $1,434,222, sufficient to more than pay off its bonded debt of $1,351,000.

These two calculations both show net results. Whatever may have been the cost of the armor plant and the gun plant, whatever may have been paid for the secrets of manufacture or for patents, whatever may have been the interest on working capital, all those and other charges were paid from the gross earnings of the company; only net earnings have been considered, and the results show that the company's investments in plant to make armor and gun steel for the Government have been returned with 22 per cent thereon.

If in any respect I have been misled by these figures, the error into which I may have fallen could have been prevented by the Bethlehem Company. It was informed that I was considering them, and when asked for certain additional figures it furnished them, but in response to my invitation to make further explanations it declined. It preferred to stand upon the inferences naturally to be drawn from these figures rather than to make further disclosures.

It is confidently believed, however, that there is no error whatever in the conclusions reached. It should be noted further that in attaining the conclusions in first table on page 33 no account was taken of the profits which will accrue on the Government contracts the Bethlehem Company has for armor and gun steel for the Army and Navy for ensuing years. These amount to over $3,000,000, on which profits will be very large.

Turning now to the Carnegie Company, it has been necessary in this case, in the absence of such returns as we have from the Bethlehem, to resort to the best evidence attainable for the purpose of showing—

(1) The value of its plant.

(2) The price of the labor and material entering into a ton of armor.

(3) The amount that should be allowed the company for maintenance and the amount of the plant upon which maintenance should be allowed.

Having determined these items, calculations have been made by using figures from the Department's books, and thus constructing tables hereafter set forth.

As to the cost of the plant, I have taken, in the table most relied on, the figures given by the company itself, to wit, $3,000,000, although the testimony hereinbefore commented upon is very persuasive to show that this is a large estimate.

The figures given by the company itself will be allowed for maintenance. I have not, however, allowed this 5 per cent upon the whole cost of the plant, but only on $2,000,000, for reasons hereinbefore set forth, viz, that the land and much other of the plant requires no appreciable charge for maintenance, and that maintenance can not properly be allowed upon what may have been paid for the plant, but that it can only properly be estimated upon the value of the plant; and I have given figures which seem to me conclusive to show that a plant like that of the Carnegie Company can be erected for about $500,000 less than the $2,000,000 allowed as to past transactions. It is estimated in the table below that the cost of labor and material in a ton of nickel-steel armor is $162.80; in a ton of Harvey nickel steel $185.38, and in a ton of double-forged nickel steel $197.78.

These figures having been arrived at, the question which next presented itself, and which was considered with great care, was as to the proper manner of stating an account. After much consideration I finally decided that it was proper to credit the company with the cost of its plant and keep no interest account whatever, either with the Government or with the company. A manufacturing company needs no interest account, if it has sufficient working capital and is doing a special business, such as the furnishing of armor under contract to a customer who pays promptly upon delivery; and I allow a working capital of $750,000.

An inspection of the table made out below will be persuasive to show that this sum, if allowed during a period of years, is ample. Money came in regularly in large amounts and always bringing large profits. The supposition has been made that the company has this working capital on hand at the beginning of the period, and it is allowed 5 per cent per annum for the use of it as a fixed charge, the principal remaining on hand at the end of the period. The table gives the number of tons of armor delivered during each period of six months and the price paid therefor. It is supposed that when payments are made to the company during these several periods, the money is deposited in its safe until a dividend is declared. Up to the moment when these dividends are declared, of course this cash is always available as working capital.

After declaring a given dividend at the end of each period of six months, the remaining net profits on hand are supposed to be paid to the stockholders, thus extinguishing their capital. When the profits over and above the assumed fair dividend are paid to the stockholders, the capital stock is pro tanto extinguished, and dividends for the ensuing six months are declared upon the reduced amount of capital, again at the same assumed rate, the surplus profits again going to reduce capital stock, and so the capital continues to be reduced at the end of each period of six months whenever there is a surplus of profit on hand for that purpose. The profits are arrived at by deducting from the amount received from the Government the amount of labor and material and 10 per cent for losses and the fixed charges of 5 per cent for maintenance and 5 per cent on $750,000 working capital.

The period covered by the estimates runs from January 1, 1892, when the Carnegie Company had begun to deliver armor, to June 30, 1897, when it will have completed its contract for one-half the armor for the Kearsarge and Kentucky.

The table is based on a valuation of the plant of the Carnegie Company at $3,000,000, and 5 per cent allowed on their entire amount for maintenance, etc., as claimed by the company in its letter to the Department. Interest at 5 per cent is also allowed on $750,000 working capital. Price of armor the same as in table that follows it.

Dividends of 10 per cent (5 per cent semiannually) are allowed on outstanding capital, and the entire cost of plant, $3,000,000, is practically extinguished by remaining surplus upon the completion of existing contracts.

a Includes $300,000 profit on contract with the Russian Government for 1,000 tons armor at $529 per ton, the cost of which is assumed as $221 per ton, labor and material, less nickel, $197.78 (179.80 + 10 per cent for rejections, etc.), the same as for this Government, leaving a balance of $23.22 to cover cost of nickel, freight, insurance, etc., to Russia. Nothing is allowed on this contract for maintenance, interest on working capital, etc., as the whole amount of "fixed charges" is included in the cost of armor produced for the United States during the same period.

It will be seen here that but $81,000 capital remains after paying maintenance upon and extinguishing $500,000 more than the company says its books show the plant cost. The addition for land, etc., is practically wiped out.

Assume cost of plant as $2,500,000 and working capital as $750,000. Assume cost of armor per ton (labor and material) as $148 for 1,950 tons nickel steel; $168.53 for 5,872 tons harveyized steel; $179.80 for 4,828 tons reforged steel (these prices being the average of the estimates submitted), adding 10 per cent for losses by rejections, etc. Assume $2,000,000 as the value of perishable plant and allow 10 per cent thereon for depreciation, or maintenance, insurance, taxes, etc., and 5 per cent interest on working capital as annual fixed charges. Then allow 10½ per cent dividends (5¼ per cent semiannually) on outstanding capital (plant), applying the surplus of net earnings, after deducting dividends for each period of six months, to the extinguishment of cost of plant.

The following table shows the result:

Period ending—	Tonnage delivered.	Cost, including 10 per cent for rejections.	Fixed charges, 10 per cent, $2,000,000; 5 per cent, $750,000.	Total cost, including fixed charges. a Surplus.

If the value of perishable plant be assumed as $1,500,000, thus reducing the fixed charges to $93,750 semiannually and correspondingly increasing the net profits by $25,000 for each six-month period, then the dividend can be increased to 13+ per cent (6½ per cent semiannually) and still extinguish capital with remaining surplus upon the completion of contracts.

If the fixed charges be made 5 per cent instead of 10 per cent on a two-million-dollar plant, dividends can be increased to 15 per cent and extinguish capital besides.

Comparing now the results arrived at in the cases of the two companies, reached, as they have been, by entirely different methods, a strong presumption arises in favor of the accuracy and justness of the figures determined upon as the cost of manufacturing armor. In the case of the Carnegie Company, there were no figures showing either net proceeds or gross earnings. Recourse must necessarily have been had to estimated costs of manufacture. These estimates show that this company's business done entirely by its armor plant has netted to it 10 per cent profit after the amortization of its plant.

The Bethlehem Company's letter claimed plant at $4,000,000, excluding land, railroad connections, interest during construction, etc. For these another $500,000 could as well be added, as in the somewhat similar case of the Carnegie Company. Then, adding another $500,000 for gun plant, and we should have Bethlehem, $5,000,000; Carnegie, $3,000,000. Up to November, 1896, the Bethlehem Company received of Government money $12,297,000. Up to the end of the Carnegie Company's account it will have received $7,225,000. The Bethlehem's own figures show (Table 1) that up to November, 1896, its profits paid for its plant in full, much of it being built on the place, paid 10 per cent on its cash investment, and left a surplus of $672,000. The figures based on officers' estimates of cost show that the Carnegie investment was returned with 10 per cent and no surplus. All things considered, these results strikingly corroborate each other.

Further confirmation of the accuracy of the methods adopted in this investigation is derived from a consideration of the reasonableness of the results attained. The companies, when they began their ventures, counted the costs and took the chances. There was ground for doubts about appropriations—the demand for armor plate might cease at any session of Congress, and they could only have been justified by naming figures for manufacturing that would reimburse them in a short period of time provided legislation were favorable. The Congress has made reasonable appropriations, a reasonable time has elapsed, both companies are found by this report to have received back their investments—that is to say, the Bethlehem Company got it back with 10 per cent and a surplus November 1, 1896, and the Carnegie Company will be practically reimbursed its capital with 10 per cent by the 30th of June next.

EQUITABLE PRICE FOR ARMOR.

The statute under which this report is being made requires me to report not only what is the actual cost of manufacturing armor, but also what sum ought equitably be paid for armor to these two companies. This question is quite as difficult as any other involved in this inquiry. Many things are to be taken into consideration. The Government of the United States, having created these plants, ought to perpetuate them. If we are to continue building a navy, we must have armor plants. It is not good policy to buy our armor abroad. No single feature connected with the upbuilding of a new navy is more gratifying than the fact that we have domesticated in our own country all the industries necessary to make us, in matters pertaining to the public defense, completely independent of the world.

This is not in any manner the question of free trade or protection. Every great country in the world, whether it is on a free-trade or a protective basis, takes care that it shall be able to manufacture all the arms and munitions of war necessary for its protection against a public enemy. You must, therefore, pay for armor in the future a price sufficiently liberal to justify these contractors, or others, in keeping plants in order and ready at all times to manufacture armor if occasion should require. The present size and extent of our Navy is not so efficient a factor in keeping the public peace and in creating respect for our country abroad as is our capacity rapidly to increase that Navy to any required extent.

What, then, will be a price sufficient to justify manufacturers in maintaining armor plants? These two contractors, we have seen, have already been repaid the cost of their plants, together with fair profits thereon. The Government, therefore, is under no obligation to pay them any more upon the cost of their original investment, but it should pay them enough to induce them willingly to maintain these plants, and in fixing upon such a price it must consider the cost of maintaining these plants, the probabilities of their getting work from the Government in the future, the difficulties to be encountered in retaining a force of laborers during intervals between contracts, and the absolute loss resulting from having to keep a plant in order when there is no work for it.

Under all these circumstances, it can not be said that such a percentage of profits upon armor contracts as would be readily agreed to if it were certain that orders for work would follow regularly for a number of years would be satisfactory to such contractors. There are now three ships under contract for which armor is to be supplied. These ships will require about 8,400 tons of armor. This, divided between the two contractors, would give to each 4,200 tons. The manufacture of this armor may be begun on the 1st of July next, the time at which these companies will complete their present contracts, and each of the companies can complete and deliver 4,200 tons by the 1st of August, 1898.

FINAL COST.

It has been determined that the cost of the labor and material in a ton of double-forged, nickel-steel, harveyed armor, including allowances for losses in manufacture, is $197.78. This comprises every element of cost in its manufacture save and except only the maintenance of plant. If 10 per cent be allowed for maintenance, the value of the plant must be determined upon. And here again arises the difference between the cost of a plant and its value. When we consider the question of repaying investors, we must count the price the plant cost; but whether paid for or not, a plant must be kept in repair, maintained, and the charge for maintenance is a percentage on its value, not on its cost. It will be remembered that in the table relating to the Carnegie Company only 5 per cent was allowed for maintenance. This was because the statement of the company only claimed 5 per cent, and it certainly did not so far cost more than that to maintain the plant or more would have been claimed. It is more than probable that 5 per cent is sufficient for an armor plant through any long period. But to err, if at all, on the side of the contractors, I allow in this calculation 10 per cent for maintenance.

The present value of an armor plant like those of the two companies referred to—the price at which such a plant could be erected—is, according to the figures heretofore attained, $1,500,000; the allowance for maintenance, at 10 per cent, $150,000 per annum while the plant is in operation. If we suppose that 2,500 tons of armor are manufactured per annum, this will give an average per ton of $60, which, being added to the cost of labor and material, will make, in round numbers, $256. If 3,000 tons per annum are manufactured, the price of each ton would be ascertained by adding $50 to the $198, or $248, so that we may take $250, in round numbers, as the cost of a ton of armor when the companies have fair orders for work.

Now, if we compare this price with the price at which the Bethlehem Company furnished armor to the Russian Government, we have in our estimate reached almost the exact figure of this Bethlehem bid, which was $249. This company is said to have stated that it made this low bid to get into the European market with American armor; that it knew it would suffer a loss. The armor was to be delivered in Russia, and transportation and insurance could not have been less than $4 per ton. The nickel furnished by the company in this case cost $20 per ton. Deducting this $24 from $249 leaves $225. If the cost to the company of a ton of armor, including the price of keeping its plant in repair, was $250 per ton, it thus suffered a loss on its contract of $25 per ton, which, multiplied by 1,400 tons, makes a total loss of $35,000.

It is conceivable that the company might have been willing to make armor at such a rate as this, especially as it must at any rate have kept its plant in repair, and considering also how very desirable it was that it should retain its employees. If $250 per ton was the full cost of manufacture, including maintenance, the company could truthfully say it was making the armor at less than cost, although there were good financial reasons why it should do so. It will be observed that these figures come from entirely different sources. On the one hand we have a bid, the actual price at which 1,400 tons of armor were manufactured; on the other hand we have figures entirely independent, none of which were made with any expectation of this coincidence. The amount of armor in the last contract made by this company with Russia, for which it received $520.70 per ton, was only 1,137 tons. It was not certain that the company when it made its first contract would ever get another contract as large as this.

The whole transaction certainly shows that the profits this company expected to realize in the European market, into which it was thus forcing its way, must have been large. If there was no loss in the first contract at $249, then there was an immense profit in its next contract at $520.70. If there was a loss on each of 1,400 tons, it could not have been very great or the company could not have expected to recoup except by a reasonable rate of profits on large contracts, which it could have little reason to expect in Europe, or by making large profits on the small contracts which only it could reasonably expect to secure.

It is essential, as has already been stated, that these or other armor plants be kept in operation, or at least be maintained in readiness for Government work, and such prices must be paid as will satisfy contractors that they will be remunerated for maintaining plants. It is of course uncertain how many battle ships the Government is to authorize. The Navy Department has recommended three during the present session, but it is not yet known whether this recommendation will be followed, and no business man would be justified in assuming that any given number of ships would be authorized in a given time. Both the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies erected plants which certainly cost millions of dollars, but this was done upon the faith of immediate contracts guaranteeing them very large profits.

If, now, Congress shall decide, as this report will recommend, that no such profits upon cost of labor and material as have heretofore been earned are to be allowed in the future, it is not probable that other business corporations will venture upon the establishment of plants, although it is shown by the evidence set forth in this report that plants can now be erected for very much less than was paid for those of the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies.

Should the present armor contractors refuse to make contracts at the figure that may be decided upon by Congress, it is not probable that others would undertake the work. For this reason, and because it is not believed to be desirable that the Government itself should manufacture armor, very liberal profits should be offered to the present contractors to induce them to continue their plants in operation.

It therefore seems to me that under all the circumstances, considering the uncertainty of future contracts and in view of the fact that these contractors have heretofore established plants on the faith of orders they were to receive thereafter from the Government, it would not be inequitable to allow them 50 per cent upon the future cost of manufacturing armor. Fifty per cent added to $250 would be $375, but it is to be remembered that the Government has heretofore furnished the nickel and that the item of $197.78 for labor and material does not cover the cost of the nickel.

It was quite proper that the Government in the outset of this enterprise should have furnished the nickel. Nickel had up to that time never been used in the manufacture of armor. As there was for it no such extensive market as has since been created, the price had not then been standardized. The nickel in the first armor cost $29 per ton. The price has fallen to $20 per ton. Inspectors now fully understand the nature and quality of this material, and there is no reason why contractors should not furnish it as they do the steel, manganese, etc.

It is therefore suggested that in future contracts manufacturers shall be required to furnish their own nickel. Adding $20 for this item to $375, we have $395 per ton, and allowing something for keeping nickel on hand, we have in round numbers $400 per ton. This seems to me a fair and equitable price to pay for the armor for the Wisconsin, Alabama, and Illinois.

This appears to be a very large margin of profit—50 per cent upon the cost of manufacture—but it is to be considered that although these contractors have heretofore been paid their investments and fair profits thereon, yet that such profits are not by any means extravagant, and are not greater than manufacturers often realize on commercial work where no great risk of orders is taken when the enterprises are entered upon. Although, in my opinion, it is entirely fair, when looking back at the transactions between the Government and these companies, to consider the moneys invested and moneys realized as accomplished facts, and to argue therefore that the risks which once existed are no longer to be taken into consideration, yet it is also a fact that these companies did take great risks in good faith, and the Government ought therefore to be willing with its eyes open to allow them liberal profits in the future. It must also be remembered that we require and receive armor equal to the best made elsewhere, and that we often raise our requirements, always demanding that we shall have the best armor that can be made. This requires many experiments that are costly.

Finally, Congress should bear in mind that it has never before, at least in so important a matter, undertaken to fix a price for manufacturers. It is only by pursuing in such case a liberal course that we can expect contractors in the future to take great risks when entering into business relations with the Government. We must not permit them to have any reasonable ground to fear that if they embark upon enterprises for the Government it will afterwards use its power to deprive them at all points and at every stage of their relations with it of all and every chance to make any very considerable profits.

In fixing upon this price I have, at the bidding of Congress, performed a most delicate duty and given my opinion. Congress may determine upon different figures, but I beg to urge that in deciding this question it will not fail to take in view all the considerations favoring a liberal treatment of these contractors.

The Government is now paying for reforged nickel Harvey armor $563 per ton, with the nickel, which is furnished by the Government, added, $583. At the prices herein suggested $500,000 would be saved in the armor of each battle ship, or $1,500,000 on the three battle ships under contract.

It must also be remembered that this price, if Congress shall decide upon it, will be much less than is now being paid by any other Government.

This report proceeds upon the idea that the investigations which have been made show that the prices now being paid for armor, both here and abroad, are greater than should be demanded in the future. I am fully aware of the magnitude of this question. The conclusions at which I have arrived may naturally be expected to have effect upon great interests abroad as well as at home. If Congress shall decide to adopt the recommendations in this report and refuse to pay more than $400 per ton for first-class armor hereafter, it may be reasonably expected that all the power and acumen that can be brought to bear by interested parties will be exerted to show that this report is in error and to expose any inaccuracies it may contain.

Impressed by these considerations, as well as by the primary purpose of doing justice to the two companies whose affairs it has become my duty to investigate, I have proceeded throughout this whole matter with extraordinary care, and have availed myself of every possible source of information, sparing neither labor nor pains. Nevertheless, I can not hope to have avoided error in every particular.

It is possible that those who have had experience in the manufacture of armor, and who are thoroughly acquainted with all its processes and with the cost of every item of material and labor, may be able to point out errors in some particular, but I have great confidence in the accuracy of the general results attained, and fully believe that if any errors have been committed in the conclusions herewith submitted, they have been as a whole in favor of rather than against the contractors. If errors have been committed, they are such as could and would have been avoided if the companies whose affairs have been under inquiry had seen proper to afford the means of information.

There is a method by which the general results attained herein can be shown to be erroneous, if they be so, and that is by an exhibition of the books of these companies to the committees of Congress. It has been my most earnest wish not to do any injury to the contractors, and if wrong is done them by the recommendations of this report, no one will rejoice more than I if they shall be able to expose and correct it.

If the contractors shall accept the conclusions at which Congress may arrive, after this investigation, the results, it is hoped, will eventually prove of value both to them and the Government. Congress will be more willing in future to authorize new armored vessels when it becomes thoroughly understood that heretofore the prices of armor were not unreasonably high because plants were not paid for, and that contractors' investments having now been paid for, prices will be much smaller, while profits will still be liberal. It is nevertheless possible that the contractors will refuse to accept contracts at the prices herein recommended. If Congress shall determine that these prices, or any other, are fair and equitable, and shall decide not to pay any more, it should determine upon the course it will pursue in case the contractors refuse to accept its conclusions. At present the law provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall let out all contracts for armor and gun steel to the lowest bidder, after advertisement, and there is no power in the Department to procure armor elsewhere than from American manufacturers. Unless, then, this law be changed, the Secretary could not obtain armor for the battle ships already under contract if the contractors should refuse to bid within the limit Congress might fix.

I therefore recommend that if Congress shall determine by law upon any limit of price to be paid, it shall also authorize the Department to erect or buy an armor plant, and a gun plant, and, if need be, to lease such plant or plants until it can construct its own. At the last session of Congress I gave, in response to an inquiry from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the United States Senate, the opinion that the Government ought to buy its armor rather than manufacture it. The reasons set forth in that communication are still believed to be sound, and yet it is possible for the Government to manufacture its own armor, and it would be better to do so than to pay a price which would seem to Congress and the public to be extravagant. We now assemble our great guns at the Washington Navy-Yard, and we do it successfully.

If the Secretary of the Navy should be given full power not only to erect or buy and to operate an armor plant, but also full power to contract for armor and gun steel as might seem to him to be for the interest of the Government, the situation would be better for the Government and for the contractors as well. Should contractors see that the Government is willing at all times to pay fair profits for these great necessities for self-defense, they may also come to feel when they see that the Secretary has full power in the premises that so long as they do efficient and faithful work, at reasonable rates, they will have Government patronage, and if the affairs of the Navy and of the War Department were thus conducted, upon a basis and at prices thoroughly understood by the public and the Government, relations could be established and maintained between the Government and those who would serve it in this respect which would be mutually advantageous.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

ENGLISH ESTIMATE OF COST OF ERECTION OF ARMOR PLANT.

OUTLINE ESTIMATE OF PLANT OF MACHINERY TO PRODUCE THE HEAVIEST STEEL ARMOR PLATES.

[Prepared for Lieut. Commander W. S. Cowles, U. S. N., naval attaché, United States embassy in London.]

FORGING DEPARTMENT.

One hydraulic armor-plate forging press, to exert a pressure of 10,000 tons, of very latest design, with horizontal side cylinders for forging the edges of armor plates; together with engines and pumps for working the same, and complete in every respect.

One 5,000-ton hydraulic press, specially arranged for the bending and setting of armor plates, to be worked by the same pumps as the forging press is worked by.

One hydraulic crane, for traveling over the above two presses, capable of lifting 100 tons, with engines for driving the same £75,000

NOTE.—This item does not include steam boilers, nor buildings, nor girders for traveling crane; these items should be included in building estimate.

STEEL-CASTING DEPARTMENT, AND FURNACES FOR REHEATING INGOTS FOR FORGING PRESS AND FOR HARVEYIZING PLATES.

For the production of heavy ingots for armor-plate manufacture an outlay of from £40,000 to £50,000 would be required for the construction of Siemens melting furnaces, 120-ton traveling crane and engine, ingot mold boxes, ladles for steel, etc., and furnaces for harveyizing plates.

We should supply the crane and engine and all the drawings and particulars to enable the above to be constructed in the United States for the sum of 6,500

Two or four reheating furnaces worked by gas for the forging press would cost about £1,250 per furnace.

MACHINE TOOLS FOR FINISHING ARMOR PLATES.

Four cross-planing machines for cutting up plates, with two sets of tool boxes arranged to cut in both directions, the cross slide mounted on trunnions, so as to cut plates, when desired, at an angle. Cutting traverse of tools, 18 feet; price each, £1,200	4,800
1 radial planing machine, to cut off and plane the ends of plates to a radius, for turrets, etc	2,000
1 planing machine to plane 20 feet long by 14 feet 6 inches wide by 8 feet high	3,000
1 planing machine to plane 18 by 10 feet 6 inches by 5 feet high	1,850
1 double planing machine to cut in both directions 10 by 10 by 5 feet	2,800
1 planing machine to plane 18 by 10 by 5 feet high	3,200
1 planing machine to plane in both directions to plane 30 by 10 by 5 feet high. This machine is also fitted with an extra cross slide for cross planing	4,200
1 20-inch stroke slotting machine	1,250
1 20-inch double-headed slotting machine	2,200
1 double angular radial drilling machine	1,000
2 large (single) angular radial drilling machines, with 5-inch spindle and arranged for tapping as well as drilling, price each £1,000	2,000
1 universal slotting machine for cutting out embrasures in bent or curved plates	3,600
Total	113,400

The whole of these tools are of the most recent design and of the most powerful construction, and are such as have been recently supplied to Messrs. Cammell & Co., of Sheffield; Messrs. Carnegie, of Pittsburg, U. S. A., and the Imperial Russian Government.

The prices quoted are for net cash, delivered f. o. b. Liverpool.

Terms of payment, one-third of the amount of order upon signing contract, the remaining two-thirds against bill of lading.

It would take from twelve to eighteen months to execute the order.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1892.

The following is memorandum of items of cost not contained in the estimates herewith for equipping an armor plant, including buildings, additional machines, minor furnishings, etc.; also a summary compiled on the basis of the estimate attached, showing the estimated cost of establishing an armor plant in the United States, exclusive of the cost of land, completely equipped, with a capacity of about 4,000 tons per annum:

Open-hearth building, including girders for crane, railroad tracks, and all constructive work	$25,000
Machine-shop building, including concrete foundation, girders and tracks for cranes, shafting, and all constructive work	150,000
Two cranes (60-ton)	40,000
Two shop engines	8,000
Five bolt machines	8,000

Two rotary saws	$12,000
Small tools and incidentals	5,000
Harvey building, including girders for crane and all constructive work	25,000
One crane (80-ton)	20,000
Tempering apparatus (water and oil), including oil tank, two heating furnaces with gas producers, etc	35,000
One crane (60-ton)	20,000
Forge building, including foundations, girders, and track for cranes, etc., and all constructive work	50,000
One press engine, with pumps, etc	30,000
One crane (75-ton)	25,000
Power house, boilers, piping, etc	75,000
Rolling stock, tracks, etc., including one locomotive, three small engines, cars, trucks, etc	20,000
Carpenter shop and tools	5,000
Office and laboratories	10,000
Testing machine	2,000
Drafting room, incidentals	10,000
Total	575,500

SUMMARY.

Estimated cost of material for armor plant, delivered f. o. b., Liverpool	$551,194
Add 40 per cent for insurance, freight, duty, and installation of machines	220,480
Total	771,674
For installation of melting furnaces, gas producers, Harvey furnaces, ingot molds, ladles for steel, etc	243,000
Total	1,014,674
Additional estimate for buildings, tempering plant, power house, laboratories	575,500
Total estimated cost of establishing an armor plant in the United States, exclusive of cost of land	1,590,074

EXHIBIT No. 2.

FRENCH ESTIMATE OF COST OF ERECTION OF ARMOR PLANT.

Refering to the inquiry concerning the cost of an increase of plant sufficient to enable the French naval iron works at Guérigny to manufacture thick armor plates of steel and capable of fulfilling present trial conditions, I am informed that it is estimated that an outlay of about 3,500,000 francs would be required for this purpose.

This lump sum does not, unfortunately, indicate the details upon which the estimate is based, and will be of little service to the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose for which he desires the figures.

In order to form a partial idea of the increase of plant necessary, I visited Guérigny on the 20th instant and examined the existing plant.

I forward as a separate memorandum a summary of the plant existing and available for the production of armor.

At present the shops are equipped for manufacturing soft-steel armor plates up to 100 mm. (4 inches) thickness, but not including the production of the steel itself, which is purchased in the form of ingots from private steel works.

Until recently Guérigny manufactured iron deck-armor plates for a number of war vessels, and within the last year it has manufactured a lot of steel (extra-doux) deck plates for the Gaulois.

Guérigny is essentially an iron works. Excellent iron is here produced for chains, anchor gear, and the numerous iron fittings which are supplied to vessels of war, but no steel is produced in the works.

For this reason, then, the estimate for establishing an armor plant at Guérigny must include:

The building of the necessary furnaces, gas producers, cranes, etc., and accessories constituting a steel plant; a set of heavy rolls or a forging press for forging plates; a press for shaping plates; additional machine tools necessary for machining heavy plates, and, if harveying is to be included, the necessary furnaces and water-tempering apparatus must be added.

I do not think that this estimate has as yet taken any definite shape, although if Parliament would warrant the expenditure for the plant, the navy would be pleased to make the experiment, in order to control, in a measure, the prices demanded by the French armor manufacturers, whose interests are believed by the navy to be pooled (although not so acknowledged) to the extent of maintaining high prices.

I am informed officially that each time that deck-armor plates have made at Guérigny there has been a saving, approximately, of 1,000 francs ($193) in round numbers per ton, the quality of the material being equal.

This statement is substantiated, and with emphasis, by other information as follows:

The cost of steel ingots (from which the sinking head of 30 per cent of the ingots as melted and run has been cut) as purchased by Guérigny for manufacture into deck-armor plates (up to 70 mm. thick) for the Gaulois was 225 francs ($43.40) per 1,000 kilogs. or French ton. The finished plates are reckoned to have cost from 800 to 900 francs ($154 to $173) per ton; and in this estimate all factory expenses, such as salaries of officers, clerks, share of hospital funds, material consumed, labor, etc., are included, but no amortization of the cost of the plant is included.

It will be found in my No. 182, page 42, "Prices paid by French navy for armor," that I reported the cost of similar deck-armor plates furnished by Chatillon-Commentry to have been 2,550 francs ($492), so that the saving of the Guérigny manufacture in this case appears to be at least 1,600 francs ($308) per ton.

This case must be exceptional, however.

The current contract price for such deck plates is about 1,800 francs per ton (not more). So that the saving in the Guérigny manufacture is about 900 to 1,000 francs per ton.

This statement of comparative costs may be of considerable interest to the Secretary, as it appears to bear upon the general question relating to the amount of profit over and above cost price as charged by contractors.

The deck plates are regarded as easy work, although metal used has been regarded as remarkably efficient; but the large profits in these deck plates seem unreasonable. The manufacturer evidently calculates that such profits may be seriously reduced by the manufacture of other more difficult plates.

The deck plates produced at Guérigny for the Gaulois are about 7 to 8 m. long by 1.60 m. wide by 70 mm. thick. The material is designated acier extra doux.

The test pieces 100 mm. long and 30.8 mm. in diameter give a tensile strength (R) from 30 to 35 kilogs. per square millimeter; with an elongation (A) from 24 to 30 per cent. Their sectional area is reduced to a diameter of 6 mm. in breaking.

The excellent quality of this metal (acier extra doux) has been the subject of frequent reports on my part; and I have formed the opinion that the French have always given more attention to the characteristics of plates for deck armor than any other navy.

The plates are tested ballistically under conditions before reported. Photographs of trial plates also have been previously forwarded.

STENOGRAPHIC REPORT OF INTERVIEW BETWEEN THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY AND REPRESENTATIVES OF THE BETHLEHEM COMPANY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, Thursday, June 25, 1896.

The investigation of the cost of producing armor plate, in accordance with the provision in the act of Congress making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, approved June 10, 1896, began at 11.30 a. m., before the Secretary of the Navy.

Present: Secretary Herbert; Joseph K. McCammon, counsel for the Bethlehem Iron Company; Robert P. Linderman, president Bethlehem Iron Company; the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy, Capt. S. C. Lemly; and Capt. W. T. Sampson, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

The Judge-Advocate-General read aloud the provisions in the law referred to, authorizing and directing the investigation by the Secretary of the Navy of the cost of producing armor plate, as follows:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to examine into the actual cost of armor plate and the price for the same which should be equitably paid, and shall report the result of his investigation to Congress at its next session at a date not later than January 1, 1897; and no contract for armor plate for the vessels authorized by this act shall be made until after such report is made to Congress for its action."

Captain LEMLY. That is under the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, approved June 10, 1896.

Secretary HERBERT. The purpose of my asking you to come here, gentlemen, was to see to what extent and in what way you could help me in this matter.

Mr. LINDERMAN. My object in coming was to help you as far as possible, and to find out from you what information and what line of information you would like us to furnish you with.

Secretary HERBERT. As you see, the act provides that I am to find out the actual cost of the manufacture of armor, and as you know more about this matter, probably, than anyone else, I have asked you to appear here and give such facts in connection with the matter as you can.

Mr. LINDERMAN. How far do you think we can properly be asked to go in that matter?

Secretary HERBERT. It is for you to say how far you are willing to go. If you could give me the figures showing the actual cost of material, what the cost of labor is, what time it takes to make these armor plates, and all facts and figures connected with its manufacture, that would be giving me the facts which I wish to get at to make this report.

Mr. LINDERMAN. Those facts would involve, I presume, Mr. Secretary, the cost of plant?

Secretary HERBERT. The cost of plant, wear and tear, the interest on money invested, and so on.

Mr. LINDERMAN. Administration and expense would be included.

Secretary HERBERT. Administration and expense and everything tending to show what the actual cost of the armor is.

Mr. LINDERMAN. I do not believe anybody connected with our company could say what the actual cost of armor is. I have never been able to find out what it is, because it varies greatly with every order we make. It is a very complicated matter, so complicated that it is almost impossible to lay down any hard-and-fast rules as to cost. Armor plate goes through a great many different processes and it is very much delayed sometimes, and the question of loss comes in. In the case of the Iowa we lost the ballistic plate and a portion of another plate.

Secretary HERBERT. I would suggest that you take a period, say twelve months, from the 1st of January, 1895, to the 31st of December, 1895, and show what armor was turned out during that time, what was manufactured, what labor was required, how much was paid for the labor, what was necessarily expended upon that plant to keep it in order, what losses you sustained in the way of spoiled plates, what losses in the way of rejections, and everything that occurred during those twelve months in connection with the manufacture of armor plate involving expense, adding, of course, the cost of your plant. In a calculation of that kind you would necessarily include all lost days—that is, all that could be properly charged up to labor—during that period. In such a calculation you would take into consideration every circumstance and every fact that would bear on the matter in hand. Now, I am fully aware, Mr. Linderman, of the difficulties that necessarily surround an inquiry of this kind, and I am prepared to consider and make a liberal estimate for everything that can properly and possibly be charged up to this account. This duty has been put upon me without my seeking it. The question was before the Senate committee and the matter took this turn, and almost before I knew it—certainly without my seeking it—this duty was put upon me. I see the difficulties that surround me, and I am aware of the difficulties that beset you in any effort to afford me information. I am perfectly willing and anxious to take these difficulties into consideration. I do not have any doubt that Congress would be willing to deal liberally with you in this matter.

Mr. LINDERMAN. We want to help you out in this very delicate duty as far as we can; but, on the other hand, you can see how unwilling—probably not unwilling, but disinclined—we would be to give away our manufacturing secrets, not only as to the cost of armor plate but other details of manufacture; naturally we are disinclined to open up to the world what our costs are. We do not want the Carnegie people or other competitors to know about such matters. We do not know what it costs them. We do know, however, that our labor and material cost us about the same, and the entire cost is probably about the same. Now, it may be that we can find some middle ground without saying absolutely that it costs us so much for labor and so much for material. I think we may be able to find a middle ground on which we can agree that will give you the basis you want.

Secretary HERBERT. We will aid you to do that so far as we can. I am anxious that you should go as far as you think you can go in justice to yourself in giving me this information, and I feel that it would be better for you, as well as better for the Government, for you to go as far as you may be able to do in giving me this information.

Captain SAMPSON. Don't you think it would be perfectly proper to consider all this as confidential, and simply report to Congress the result of your conclusions after hearing in confidence statements as to the cost of the armor? This investigation would be strictly confidential and the report would not be published, but simply your opinion or conclusion given to Congress, and with the figures given to them, but with the understanding that it is in confidence and that the figures are not to be published.

Mr. MCCAMMON. It says to report the result.

Captain SAMPSON. Yes; of course the result that Congress expects is not simply a statement on the part of the Secretary of the Navy that he considers a certain sum of money to be the proper price for armor, but they will want to know why he thinks so; they will want a statement to be submitted in such detail as will satisfy them that he has gone thoroughly into the subject and knows what he is speaking about. But at the same time it is not necessary that that information in detail should be published.

Secretary HERBERT. On that point let me say this: In so far as your manufacturing secrets are concerned, I suppose that the Department has most of them now. It has gotten them from the Government inspectors at your works. Certainly the Department has no desire to disclose your manufacturing secrets, or any of them, to Congress or to anybody else, and I could promise and will promise that so far as they are concerned I will not disclose to anybody what those manufacturing secrets are which you may see proper to divulge to me.

Captain SAMPSON. I do not see that it is necessary to go very much into that.

Secretary HERBERT. I do not see that it is really necessary to go into those things at all.
